

Tāranātha's
HISTORY OF BUDDHISM IN INDIA

Translated from Tibetan by
LAMA CHIMPA ALAKA CHATTOPADHYAYA

Edited by
DEBIPRASAD CHATTOPADHYAYA

MOTILAL BANARSIDASS PUBLISHERS PRIVATE LIMITED • DELHI

First Edition: Simla, 1970

Reprinted : Delhi, 1990

© MOTILAL BANARSIDASS PUBLISHERS PVT. LTD.

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

ISBN: 81-208-0696-4

Also available at :

MOTILAL BANARSIDASS

Bungalow Road, Jawahar Nagar, Delhi 110 007

Chowk, Varanasi 221 001

Ashok Rajpath, Patna 800 004

24 Race Course Road, Bangalore 560 001

120 Royapettah High Road, Mylapore, Madras 600 004

PRINTED IN INDIA

BY JAINENDRA PRAKASH JAIN AT SHRI JAINENDRA PRESS, A-45 NARAINA
INDUSTRIAL AREA, PHASE I, NEW DELHI 110 028 AND PUBLISHED BY NARENDRA
PRAKASH JAIN FOR MOTILAL BANARSIDASS PUBLISHERS PVT. LTD.
BUNGALOW ROAD, JAWAHAR NAGAR, DELHI 110 007

In memory of the pioneers

V. P. VASIL'EV

and

A. SCHIEFNER

FRONTISPIECE

It was part of the original plan of this publication to add at the end of the book the entire xylograph of the Tibetan text (Potala 1946 edition, which is mainly followed in the present translation) in photo-offset reproduction. Unfortunately, the trial reproduction of the xylograph from the micro-film copy in possession of the editor proved a failure and the idea of reproducing the entire xylograph had to be abandoned. As the frontispiece of the book, however, are reproduced from half-tone blocks only the beginning and end of the xylograph. These include the title-page and Folios 1,139B and 140A—the last containing the colophon specially added to the Potala edition of the text.

Top : Title page of the work (Potala edition). Bottom : Folio 1 of the same.
On the reverse side : Folios 139B & 140A, the latter containing the colophon of the Potala edition.

FOREWORD

When I walk on snow-laden paths of hills my each footprint appears clear, deep and distinct through which I can trace my path back without effort. But after a while due to wind and fresh snowfall all traces of my footsteps are wiped out in the snow. The residue is what sticks to my imagination. It is the same with the study of history. Every episode in it howsoever realistic, does fade with the sweep of time and occurrences of new events. Surviving evidences largely depend on interpretation of the historian whose reason emanates from intellect and as such has the glaring weakness of limitations of one's mind which are conditioned by the present environment.

The general attitudes and outward expressions of men of our time cannot be similar to those of the primitive society or even of the preceding generations. Thus, the logic of today recalling the events of the past times with indecisive evidences must surely be inaccurate in many ways.

The line of demarcation between history and legend is too thin to observe while writing; the two overlap each other unconsciously and unknowingly.

Faith and reason overpower each other throughout one's life, which results in contradiction, but the conflict never ceases in any sphere. As such, it is difficult to say if the author of a book of history is free from the influence of his faith in analysing the past.

I know many such persons who do not accept in their writings many episodes as historical in order to exhibit their rational mind and modern scholarship. But in the core of their hearts they believe the episodes in toto and do respect them. Such proclivities in authors are nothing short of dishonesty.

As we focus our vision on the historical perspective of our time interspersed with strong socio-economic bias of the historian for recording past events to suit their political ideologies, we can sense the real flaw in the cross currents of historical literature and that takes us into a land of phantasy.

In this situation I cannot claim Lama Tāranātha to be free from all those conditions which make me ponder, but I can unhesitatingly say that his rationality and honesty to his own findings are beyond cavil, a thing which held him high in the assessment of his contemporaries.

I entirely agree with V.P. Vasil'ev that the history of Tāranātha is not history as such but history in the sense of a document that calls for further research in history. Straightway, this notion of an acute historiographer claims for specialisation in the field of an independent discipline. We should not be oblivious of the fact that Tāranātha's work does not aim at revealing the past in the strict sense of a modern history, his work vouchsafes better and more clear understanding of the lineages and developments of the virtuous Buddhists with a view to strengthening the faith (śraddhā) in lineage of teachers as well as distinguishing the right lineages from the fake ones. We may thus assume the work to be a part or outcome of his own spiritual practices.

A reader of Tāranātha's work should bear in mind that he is reading a Buddhist treatise composed by a great devotee of Buddha who earnestly wishes to intensify faith in the lineage. But at the same time a reader may find in it useful material for historical purposes also. With this approach one may succeed in evaluating the work of Tāranātha in right perspective. It is also noteworthy that Tāranātha made an attempt to keep the episodes at conventional level. Tāranātha disavowed many well known legends specially with regard to the extraordinary length of the life-span of many personages and saw that the sequence of the lineages did not distort the chronology. But in one thing he remained an avowed Tibetan as he did not ignore or refute miracles (ṛiddhi). He admitted the power of ṛiddhi not as something supernatural but as perfectly natural. Such view is possible for a person who himself had possessed direct experience of it.

Lama Tāranātha was the most suitable person of his age to write an account of the development of Buddhist teachings in India due to following reasons:

- 1) He was vitally interested in writing accounts of the past and the lives of personages of lineages.
- 2) He had mastery over Sanskrit and also knew some of the Indian dialects prevalent at that time.
- 3) He had moreover access to the authentic works of Pandits, viz. Kṣemendrabhadra, Indradatta and Bhataghati.

For modern scholarship it would have been much better if Tāranātha had translated all the source materials into Tibetan language instead of writing his account based on them. Besides, Tāranātha has also not thrown any light on the lives of the Pandits from whose works he has freely drawn. So, neither can we trace the lives and works of those Pandits who are mentioned by him nor have we any access to their works.

In his autobiography called The Secret Biography Lama Tāranātha records that without any formal instructions from any teacher he effortlessly acquired proficiency in various Indian languages. When he was just four years old, he overheard the conversation of Venerable Tenzin Ngawang with an Indian Zoki (Yogi) and he could understand the substance of it. He further says that because of his many previous births in India he had vivid recollection of geography and topography of the country and knowledge of various Indian languages since his childhood. At 16, he was prophesied by his personal deity (isṭadeva) that if he chose to go to Zanskar in Ladakh and Gar-Sha (presently in Himachal Pradesh) before he was twenty years old, he would accumulate merit to do immense service to the sentient beings. But since the prophecy remained unimplemented he thought his life work could not be so prolific. Further he tells that while in his twenties he once fell sick with constant bleeding through his nostrils for about three months. At that time in a dream he saw two Indian yogis. One of them named Jvālānātha gave him the name Tāranātha. "Tāranātha" is purely an Indian name. It does not correspond to his original Tibetan name.

It appears that in Tāranātha's time Indian pilgrims and other visitors used to trail the passes to reach the land of snow, although by that time very few Buddhist scholars were left in India. Most of the travellers who visited Tibet were not the followers of Buddhism. This is clear from Tāranātha's autobiography in which he refers to two Pandits, Purnananda and Paramananda who stayed with him for about ten days. He talks of their great erudition in various subjects. He learnt the episodes of the Rāmāyaṇa and Mahābhārata from them. Being persuaded by them to worship Hanumān, Tāranātha did not accede to their desire. The only likelihood of meeting with a Buddhist Yogi from Telangana (India) occurs in an allusion to such an ascetic Pandit Changaśrī who stayed for only two days with Tāranātha but who was in a hurry to go back to India. Changaśrī was considered as a Mahāyāna Buddhist scholar by Tāranātha. Although he did not visit India during his life time, yet it seems that he was known to many Indian scholars and rulers. Tāranātha tells in his Autobiography that he got a letter from Raja Balabhadra of Badua of the Vindhya Hills which was written in Sanskrit in the Gaudi script. The content of the letter is as follows:

“I hear that you are the only person in Himavat (snowland) who has preserved the tradition of Siddha Śāntiguṇḍa. I have also known from the Siddhas that you have had close relationship with me in other births. Therefore, I am sending you two “batol jarb” and two “Suryakanta”.

A reply was sent by Tāranātha, the purport of which is as follows:

“When the Buddha’s doctrine is languishing in India you are the only king who is reviving the Saddharma in the Vindhya and the contiguous regions.”

The name of the messenger who brought the letter and the gift from Raja Balabhadra is recorded as Illikhan.

The above episode is difficult to verify but it shows Tāranātha’s contacts with Indian scholars and rulers. Among the works of Tāranātha we have no text translated by him, but he mentions in his Autobiography that he did translations of minor texts also. He relates to have studied several Sanskrit manuscripts belonging to Atisa which he found preserved in the Rading Monastery. His scholarship of Sanskrit is evidenced from many of his extensive works on the Kālacakra Tantra and other philosophical texts.

Till recent times Tibetan scholars did not take much notice of Tāranātha’s History of Buddhism in India. Tāranātha is widely known in Tibet for his works on Tantra and Philosophy. It seems Tāranātha himself did not give importance to History of Buddhism in India, as he does not make any mention of it in his autobiography whereas he refers to most of his important works with details of time and circumstances which prompted him to write. But strangely modern scholars know Tāranātha by the present work alone, and despite the alleged limitation of Tāranātha as historian scholars invariably refer to Tāranātha’s History of Buddhism.

I personally do not attach much importance to the fact whether Tāranātha’s work is history or a religious document.

The importance of the work of Tāranātha which is modest in comparison to his other works lies in the fact that it has contributed extensively to the Indian Studies in general and the Buddhist Studies in particular in the recent time.

Tāranātha in his autobiography lays emphasis on his utter honesty, straightforwardness and impartiality in his writings for which he is proud. He also pays his deep respect to all the lineages of various Buddhist scholars. All these facts of Tāranātha are substantiated by his extensive works relating to a diversity of subjects ranging from his random Psalms and Verses (dohās and gāthās) to the most sophisticated philosophical and Tāntrika treatises, including commentaries of sūtras and tantras besides his original compositions.

Thus I can say with much confidence that History of Buddhism in India written by Tāranātha is a faithful recounting of Indian source materials to which Tāranātha had an access and there is no scope of distortion of facts in his narratives.

This English translation of Tāranātha's History of Buddhism in India belongs, indeed, to the class of finest translations of Tibetan works in English. The age-old tradition of Tibetan translation of treatises with one Pandit of the source language and one translator of the destination language and a third person for checking and editing has been faithfully preserved in the preparation of this work. Lama Chimpa, an erudite scholar of Tibetan studies who is also well-versed in English, has acted as the Pandita, Alaka Chattopadhyaya, an erudite scholar of English and History with copious grasp of the Tibetan language has worked as lotsava (translator). Further the work has been edited by a scholar of great eminence, Professor Debiprasad Chattopadhyaya, who worked as Shuchain (reviser). The supplementary notes and appendices have much enhanced the value of the present work. I am happy to know that the book which has been out of print for a long time is now being reprinted for the great benefit of scholars and students.

May all sentient beings be happy!

Sarnath
7th December, 89

S. RINPOCHE

CONTENTS

Foreword xi

Preface xxiii

Acknowledgement xxxi

On Typography and abbreviations, etc 1

TĀRANĀTHA'S HISTORY OF BUDDHISM IN INDIA

Introductory 5

Benedictory Verse 5

Aim of the Work 5

Table of Contents 6

The Sources 19

Ch. 1.

Account of the Period of King Ajātaśatru 20

Ch. 2.

Account of the Period of King Subāhu 26

Ch. 3.

Account of the Period of King Sudhanu 29

Ch. 4.

Account of the Period of Ārya Upagupta 34

Ch. 5.

Account of the Period of Ārya Dhītika 45

Ch. 6.

Account of the Period of King Aśoka 50

Ch. 7.

Account of the Incidents During the Period of King Aśoka 68

Ch. 8.

Account of the Period of King Vigataśoka 76

Ch. 9.

Account of the Period of Kāśyapa, the Second 79

Ch. 10.

Account of the Period of Ārya Mahāloka and Others 82

- Ch. 11.
Account of the Period of King Mahāpadma 85
- Ch. 12.
Account of the Period of the Third Council 91
- Ch. 13.
Account of the Period of the Beginning of the Extensive Propagation of the Mahāyāna 96
- Ch. 14.
Account of the Period of Brāhmaṇa Rāhula 102
- Ch. 15.
Account of the Period of the Doctrine Under the Leadership of Ārya Nāgārjuna 106
- Ch. 16.
Account of the Period of the First Hostility to the Law and of its Restoration 120
- Ch. 17.
Account of the Period of Ācārya Āryadeva and Others 123
- Ch. 18.
Account of the Period of Ācārya Mātṛceṭa and Others 130
- Ch. 19.
Account of the Period of the Renewed Hostility to the Doctrine and of its Restoration 137
- Ch. 20.
Account of the Period of the Third Hostility to the Doctrine and of its Restoration 140
- Ch. 21.
Account of the Period of the Final Activities of King
Buddhapakṣa and of the period of King Karmacandra 144
- Ch. 22.
Account of the Period of 'Brothers Ārya Asaṅga' [Asaṅga and Vasubandhu] 149
- Ch. 23.
Account of the Period of Ācārya Dignāga and Others 176
- Ch. 24.
Account of the Period of King Śīla 196

- Ch. 25.
Account of the Period of the Kings Cala, Pañcamasiṃha and Others 210
Ch. 26.
Account of the Period of Śrī Dharmakīrti 224
Ch. 27.
Account of the Period of King Govicandra and Others 249
Ch. 28.
Account of the Period of King Gopāla 257
Ch. 29.
Account of the Period of King Devapāla and His Son 265
Ch. 30.
Account of the Period of King Śrī Dharmapāla 274
Ch. 31.
Account of the Period of King Masurakṣita, King Vanapāla and the Great King Mahīpāla 284
Ch. 32.
Account of the Period of the Kings Mahāpāla and Śāmapāla 289
Ch. 33.
Account of the Period of King Canaka 294
Ch. 34.
Account of the Period of Kings Bheyapāla and Neyapāla 304
Ch. 35.
Account of the Period of Āmrpāla, Hastipāla and Kṣāntipāla 310
Ch. 36.
Account of the Period of King Rāmapāla 313
Ch. 37.
Account of the Period of the Four Sena Kings and Others 316
- TĀRANĀTHA'S SUPPLEMENT TO THE HISTORY OF BUDDHISM IN INDIA
- Ch. 38.
Account of the Succession of Teachers at Vikramaśīla 325
Ch. 39.
Account of the Spread of the Doctrine in Ko-ki in the East 330

Ch. 40.
Account of the Introduction of the Law into the Smaller Islands and of its Revival in the South	332
Ch. 41.
Account of the Spread of the Doctrine in the South as Related in The Garland of Flowers	334
Ch. 42.
Some Discussion on the Four Sects	339
Ch. 43.
A Brief Discourse on the Origin of the Mantrayāna	343
Ch. 44.
The History of Image-makers	347
On the Sources etc	350
Epilogue	351
Colophon	352
Colophon of the Potala edition	352

SUPPLEMENTARY NOTES

1. The Patriarchs	355	13. Nāgabodhi	389
2. The Aśoka Legends	361	14. Śākyamitra	389
3. Ten Prohibitions and the Second Council	367	15. Śabarapāda	390
4. Tīṣṇarakṣitā & Kuṇāla Legend	373	16. Mātṛceṭa	390
5. Mahādeva and his Five Principles	375	17. Aśvaghōṣa & Mātṛceṭa	391
6. Kaniṣka's Council : Yuan-Chuang & Bu-ston	377	18. Śūra	392
7. Vararuci	381	19. Aśvaghōṣa	392
8. Saraha	382	20. Lūi-pā	393
9. Nāgārjuna : Biographical	383	21. Asaṅga	393
10. Nāgārjuna : Works	385	22. Maitreya	394
11. Āryadeva	387	23. Vasubandhu	395
12. Obermiller's Note on the Mādhyamika Ācārya-s and their different points of view	388	24. Vasil'ev on the Two Vibhaṅgas	398
		25. Dārika-pā	398
		26. Sthiramati	399
		27. Dignāga	400
		28. Bhavya or Bhāvaviveka	401
		29. Candrakīrti	401
		30. Candragomī	402

- | | |
|-------------------------|---------------------------------|
| 31. Dharmapāla 403 | 66. Ānandagarbha 423 |
| 32. Virū-pā 404 | 67. Parahita 424 |
| 33. Śāntideva 405 | 68. Jinamitra 425 |
| 34. Dombī Heruka 405 | 69. Sarvajñadeva 425 |
| 35. Vajraghaṇṭa 406 | 70. Tilli-pā 426 |
| 36. Ratnakīrti 406 | 71. Prajñāpālita 426 |
| 37. Dharmakīrti 407 | 72. Jetāri 426 |
| 38. Kambala 408 | 73. Kālacakrapāda 427 |
| 39. Indrabhūti 409 | 74. Śānti-pā 428 |
| 40. Kukuri-pā 410 | 75. Vāgīśvarakīrti 428 |
| 41. Saroruhavajra 410 | 76. Nāro-pā 429 |
| 42. Lalitavajra 411 | 77. Bodhibhadra 429 |
| 43. Jālandhari-pā 412 | 78. Ratnavajra 430 |
| 44. Kṛṣṇācārī 412 | 79. Mahājana 430 |
| 45. Sahajalālita 413 | 80. Jñānaśrī 430 |
| 46. Vinītadeva 414 | 81. Amoghavajra 431 |
| 47. Jñānagarbha 414 | 82. Vīryabhadra 431 |
| 48. Buddhajñāna 415 | 83. Mañikaśrī 432 |
| 49. Śāntarakṣita 415 | 84. Jñānavajra 432 |
| 50. Haribhadra 416 | 85. Bhārata Paṇi 433 |
| 51. Yaśomitra 416 | 86. Abhayākaragupta 433 |
| 52. Śākya mitra 417 | 87. Śākyaśrī 434 |
| 53. Kalyāṇamitra 417 | 88. Ratnarakṣita 435 |
| 54. Daṃṣṭrāsena 417 | 89. Dīpaṃkarabhadra 436 |
| 55. Mañjuśrīkīrti 418 | 90. Śrīdhara 436 |
| 56. Līlavajra 418 | 91. Bhavabhadra 436 |
| 57. Paṇḍita Rāhula 418 | 92. Durjayacandra 437 |
| 58. Kalyāṇagupta 419 | 93. Tathāgatarakṣita 437 |
| 59. Prabhākara 419 | 94. Kamalarakṣita 438 |
| 60. Buddhaguḥya 419 | 95. Khyuñ-po-rnal-'byor 438 |
| 61. Vairocanabhadra 421 | 96. Vanaratna 440 |
| 62. Kamalaśīla 421 | 97. Sahajasiddhi 441 |
| 63. Dharmottara 422 | 98. The Turuṣka king 'Moon' |
| 64. Vimalamitra 422 | (Fol 125B) 442 |
| 65. Dharmākara 423 | 99. History of Image-makers 445 |

APPENDIX

- A. Schiefner, Foreword to the Introduction of the Russian Translation of Tāranātha's History of Buddhism in India by Professor Wassiljew (Vasil'ev) 449
- V. P. Vasil'ev, Introduction to the Russian translation of Tāranātha's History of Buddhism in India 453
- Bibliography 471
- Index
- Errata

PREFACE

Born in A.D. 1575, Kun-dga'-sñiñ-po (= Ānandagarbha), better known as Lama Tāranātha, wrote this work in 1608, i.e. at the age of 34, according to the Tibetan mode of calculating the age. This work is usually referred to as rGya-gar-chos-'byuñ, which means "the history of Buddhism in India". But the brief title Tāranātha himself chose for it was dGos-'dod-kun-'byuñ, literally "that which fulfils all desires". The corrupt Indian form in which the name occurs in the title-page of its Potalá edition (1946), namely Kārya-kāma-sarva-pravṛtti-nāma, is evidently intended to convey the same idea. Thus the history of Buddhism in India was for Tāranātha something more than mere history. It was also the māhātmya of Buddhism: the account was intrinsically auspicious, so much so that it led to the fulfilment of all desires. But there is nothing extraordinary about this. As Vasil'ev (spelt Wassiljew in German) rightly remarks, historiography for the Buddhists had always been an important mode of propagating their creed.

In Tibetan writings Tāranātha is usually mentioned as "Jo-nañ Tāranātha" or "rje-btsun (= bhāṭṭāraka) Tāranātha of the Jo-nañ sect". Jo-nañ is the name of a place with a lofty caitya and a convent about a hundred miles to the north-west of the Tashi-lhun-po. The sect of Tibetan Buddhism which had Jo-nañ as its stronghold came to be known as the Jo-nañ-pa sect. The founder of this sect was Phyogs-las-rnam-rgyal (= Digvijayī), born in A.D. 1306. It appears that a pronounced enthusiasm for the Kālacakra Tantra constituted an important feature of its creed. Tāranātha himself, a later leader of the sect, was famous as an author of several works and "guide-books" (khrid-yid) on the Kālacakra doctrine, which Roerich wanted to analyse—a project unfortunately left unfinished by him.

The chief monastery of the Jo-nañ-pa sect—rTag-brtan-phun-tshogs-gliñ (= the perfect and eternally firm island)—had a printing establishment well-known in Tibet. The complete works of Tāranātha were published by it. A copy of this is preserved in the Tsybikov Collection, Institute of the Peoples of Asia (now renamed as the Institute of Oriental Studies), USSR. A. I. Vostrikov gives us the following information about Tāranātha's works from this collection.

The present history of Buddhism consisting of 143 folios is contained in the sixteenth volume of Tāranātha's collected works, the same volume also containing in 70 folios the work (written in A.D. 1600) with the brief title bKa'-babs-bdun-ldan, translated into German by A. Grünwedel. The first volume of the collected works contains a detailed autobiography of Tāranātha in 331 folios, the second volume contains a history of the Kālacakra system in 22 folios, the tenth volume contains a history of the Yamāntaka Tantra in 74 folios (its colophon giving the date of the composition as A.D. 1631) and the twelfth volume contains a history of the cult of Tārā in 20 folios. From these one can easily judge how voluminous a writer Tāranātha was and in what constituted his main interest.

By courtesy of the Institute of the Peoples of Asia, Leningrad, I obtained a microfilm copy of the so-called "secret" biography (gsaṅ-ba'i-rnam-thar) of Tāranātha written by himself: though brief, it is so full of the so-called mystic or occult experience and a quaint vision, that we had to give up our original idea of appending its translation to the present edition. Such mystic stuff is not easy to translate and, if translated at all, would not make much sense for the modern reader. Incidentally, in Northern Mongolia (Urga) the incarnations of Lama Tāranātha are supposed to have resided even in recent times!

The original printing blocks of Tāranātha's works were largely destroyed "during the persecution of the Jo-naṅ-pa sect in the time of the Fifth Dalai Lama (Ñag-bdañ-blo-bzañ-rgya-mtsho: A.D. 1617-1682) in the first half of the 17th century A.D. The Karma-pa and the Jo-naṅ-pa sects supported the ruler of Tsañ [i.e. a central province of Tibet of which the chief city is Shiga-tse, adjoining which stands the grand monastery of Tashi-lhun-po, the seat of the Tashi Lama] and thus incurred the enmity of Lhasa and of the dGe-lugs-pa sect [i.e. the most dominant sect of Tibetan Buddhism usually referred to by the European authors as the Yellow Cap sect]. In the chief monastery of the (Jo-nañ-pa) sect, rTag-brtan-phun-tshogs-gliñ, were preserved the printing blocks of the works of Tāranātha. Many of the printing blocks were destroyed and the monastery itself was renamed [as dGa'-ldan-phun-tshogs-gliñ]."

Apparently, over two centuries later the Lhasa rulers realised that at least Tāranātha's history of Buddhism in India was too precious to be allowed to remain out of circulation. Hence in 1946 a fresh edition of the work was prepared in Potala in 141 folios. The present translation follows mainly this edition, though it also takes note of the first letter-press edition of the Tibetan text published from St. Petersburg in 1868 as edited by A. Schiefner. There exists another letter-press edition of the work published from Varanasi in 1963 as edited by Chos-rje-bla-ma. This edition, however, appears to have been intended as a literal reproduction of the Potala edition of 1946.

Tāranātha's History is surely one of the most widely discussed works in contemporary Indology. The modern scholars owe their information of it mainly to A. Schiefner and V. P. Vasil'ev. Their German and Russian translations of the work appeared from St. Petersburg in 1869. As to their mutual relation and the circumstances that led them to take up these translations, it is best to follow their own statements. These are to be found appended to the present work. Readers are moreover likely to find the introduction of Vasil'ev to Tāranātha's History illuminating in many respects.

Schiefner's German and Vasil'ev's Russian apart, the only complete translation of Tāranātha's History exists in the Japanese language: the translation was done by Enga Teramoto, it contains 404 pages and was published from Tokyo in 1928 by Heigo Shuppan-sha. From a stray reference it appears that the great Indian linguist Harinath De started translating Tāranātha's History directly from Tibetan into English and that at least some pages of this translation appeared in a journal called The Herald, January 1911. Any copy of this journal is hard to trace and it appears that this was one of the innumerable projects left unfinished by the great linguist. Only the other day, we received the heartening news that a few pages of this translation (? all that the great linguist translated) have been recovered and that these are going to be reprinted in the forthcoming issue of the Journal of Ancient Indian History, Calcutta University.

While preparing the present translation, our main purpose has been to make the work as intelligible as we could for the modern reader. This means much more than the task of transferring a text from one language into another. Tāranātha's statements could be made more intelligible only by annotating these extensively, and this mainly by way of collecting other materials that have some light to throw on his statements. The limitation of the annotations given by us is obvious and none can perhaps be more keenly aware of it than we are. We have dared to present this translation in spite of the obvious inadequacy of the annotations mainly with the hope of attracting the attention of the really great scholars from whom are expected profound comments. These alone would make the text more intelligible. As for our own annotations, we are anxious to be clear about a few points.

First, we have attempted to incorporate into our annotations practically all the important annotations of Vasil'ev and Schiefner. Though a hundred years old, these annotations contain much more than mere historic interest. These have often vital relevance for understanding Tāranātha properly. Secondly, we have, in our annotations, mentioned practically all the major points on which the present translation differs from those of Vasil'ev and Schiefner. Though fully aware of the rather severe comments of eminent Tibetologists like A.I. Vostrikov and E.E. Obermiller on the accuracy of the translations of both Vasil'ev and Schiefner, we are also aware that these translations substantially helped the later compilers of the standard Tibetan dictionaries like Jaschke and Das. Therefore, the purpose of pointing out where the present translation differs from that of Vasil'ev or Schiefner is not necessarily to claim greater accuracy in favour of the present translation. On the contrary, our own experience is that Tāranātha's Tibetan is often hard to understand and it is sometimes difficult to be sure of the exact sense he wants to convey, particularly because of some peculiar ambiguities of the classical Tibetan language. While presenting the present translation, the possibility of an alternative understanding of some of the passages is taken into consideration and it has been but our simple duty to mention such alternatives as actually suggested by the great pioneers. Thirdly, our annotations have sometimes assumed the form of long quotations from the writings of eminent modern scholars. The reason for quoting them at such length has simply been the anxiety to allow them to speak in their own language, so that the risk of misrepresenting their point could be eliminated.

It is not for us to answer the question how Tāranātha's account of Buddhism, in spite of being so overwhelmingly legendary, could also become one of the most widely discussed texts for the modern scholars working on diverse aspects of ancient and medieval Indian history and culture. Writers on the political history of India find themselves obliged to take note of Tāranātha's History, no less than those writing the history of Indian literature and Indian logic, not to speak of the investigators of the history of Buddhism itself. Apparently, along with all sorts of quaint stories, Tāranātha somehow or other managed to squeeze into this brief work a tremendous amount of solid historical data (and interesting Indian folklore) which are not easy to trace in other available sources. The very attempt to reconstruct a connected account from the time of Ajātaśatru to that of the Turuška invasion—in the background of which Tāranātha wants us to understand the history of Buddhism in India—appears to us to be an amazing intellectual performance, particularly when we remember that it was done in A.D. 1608 by a Tibetan scholar in his early thirties. Of course, as Vasil'ev rightly remarks, it is not to be taken as a finished history, but rather as a draft demanding a great deal of further investigation and that the importance of the work lies more particularly in its chapters covering the period intervening between the visit of Yuan-chuang and the virtual extinction of Buddhism in India.

Of the varied suggestions given by Tāranātha regarding this period, we may mention here only one. He left for us, though in his own way, clear indications of the factors that contributed to the decline and fall of Buddhism in India. Buddhism in its latest phase, as Tāranātha so vividly described it, almost completely surrendered precisely to those beliefs and practices, as a direct rejection of which the Buddha himself had preached his original creed. For all we know, it was a creed concerned above all with the fact of suffering and with the way out of suffering. As Stcherbatsky puts it, "It can hardly be said to represent a religion. Its more religious side, the teaching of a path, is utterly human. Man reaches salvation by his own efforts, through moral and intellectual perfection. Nor was there, for aught we know, very much of a worship in the Buddhism of that time. The community consisted of recluses possessing neither family nor property, assembling twice a month for open confession of their sins and engaged in the practice of austerity, meditation and philosophic discussions." The Buddha preached all these precisely because he had realised the futility of worshipping God, or a host of demi-gods, offering sacrifices to them or trying to coerce them with magical rituals. For the Buddha himself, these beliefs and practices were characteristics of the tīrthika-s or outsiders. By contrast, Buddhism in its latest phase—if we are to trust Tāranātha—bowed down to all these beliefs and practices and thus became practically indistinguishable from popular Hinduism so-called. It assumed the form of being an elaborate worship of all sorts of gods and goddesses of the popular pantheon—often under new names, but sometimes caring not even to invent any new name for them—and of indulging in all sorts of ritual practices for which the Buddha himself had expressed his unambiguous repulsion. Thus, e.g., the Vikramaśīla-vihāra, the last grand centre of Buddhism established in India, had even the provision for a Bali-ācārya and a Homa-ācārya! Buddhajñānapāda, Tāranātha further tells us, persuaded king Dharmapāla to perform a homa for many years, during which period the king spent over nine lakh and two thousand tolā-s of silver—and all these were designed to make his dynasty last longer! And so on. Evidently, the memory of the human founder of the creed and even the vestige of his essentially human teachings were fully lost to the Buddhists and their patrons when Buddhism assumed such a queer form. The ideology, in short, passed into its opposite, and being left with no internal justification to survive as a distinct creed, the only thing on which it could then thrive was the fad of some big patron, the Pālas being about the last of them. With the withdrawal or collapse of this patronage, Buddhism as a religion had to go into pieces.

Sharing fully the creed in its latest phase, Tāranātha is of course not expected to have realised all these. As far as he understood, therefore, the end of the Vikramaśīla and the Odantapurī meant the end of Buddhism in India: with the fall of these two monasteries the Buddhist ācārya-s ran hither and thither, seeking shelter in Kashmir, Nepal and the Ko-ki countries. He does not ask himself how can a creed, so long as it possesses any inner vitality, become virtually extinct from such a vast country only with the fall of two centres situated somewhere in Bihar.

The causes that contributed to the internal decay of Buddhism in India constitute indeed an extremely important subject for investigation. Our historians are yet to work these out fully. Could it, however, be that at least one of the important causes of this was the continued patronage of merchants, feudal chiefs and monarchs, primarily on which Buddhism thrived for centuries? Being himself a devout Buddhist, Tāranātha dilated much on the account of such patronage. His enthusiasm for the financiers of Buddhism was hardly less than that for its actual exponents. What he did not note—and what we do not surely expect him to note—is that nothing could be more ruinous for an ideology than to have drawn its sanction only from such patronage. That is the surest way of getting alienated from the heart of the people, of becoming completely parasitical and of being left with no vitality of its own.

The account of any genuine popular enthusiasm for Buddhism—particularly in its later phase—is conspicuous by its absence from Tāranātha's History. What could be the real implication of this? Did the later leaders of Indian Buddhism—dreaming in their all-found monasteries mainly of the easy ways of attaining miraculous powers—really ceased to think of the relevance of any genuine popular support for their creed? Or was it only the historian's blindness to notice their care for such popular support? The chances in favour of the latter alternative are somewhat remote, for Tāranātha was much too saturated with the tradition of the later Indian Buddhists to overlook anything considered important by them.

It is obviously not the place for us to try to go into this question in greater detail. What is relevant instead is simply to note that the decline of Buddhism in India is too important a subject to remain unsettled, and in order to settle it we cannot afford to ignore Tāranātha: he was about the only historian to have compiled for us—in his own way though—a vast amount of relevant data concerning Indian Buddhism in its latest phase, which are not easy to trace elsewhere.

May 26, 1970.

Debiprasad Chattopadhyaya

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Without the encouragement and active help in various forms of Professor Niharranjan Ray, Director, Indian Institute of Advanced Study, Simla, it would have been most difficult for me to complete this work. I cannot be explicit enough about my indebtedness to him.

It is because of the kindness of Professor V. V. Balabushevich, Head of the Indian Department, Institute of the Peoples of Asia (now renamed Institute of Oriental Studies), Academy of Sciences, USSR, that I received a complete microfilm copy of the Potala (1946) edition of Tāranātha's xylograph preserved in the Roerich Collection of the Institute. I also received a complete microfilm copy of Vasil'ev's Russian translation of Tāranātha's History from Dr. I. D. Serebryakov of the same Institute. I take this opportunity of expressing my sincere gratitude to Professor Balabushevich and Dr. Serebryakov for these precious gifts.

The present work embodies the labour of over five years of Professor Lama Chimpa of the Visvabharati University and Dr. Alaka Chattopadhyaya of the Vidyasagar College for Women, Calcutta. They had to revise the translation several times. Entrusted with the work of editing it, I had to be most exacting. If they have not felt exasperated it is primarily because of their devotion to the work itself, though partly also because of their personal relation to me. Professor Lama Chimpa happens to be one of my dearest friends and Alaka is my wife.

This work also embodies a great deal of labour of two other friends of mine, without whose help the editing itself would have been impossible. They are Haridas Sinharay, Department of Sanskrit, Central Calcutta College, and Harish Chandra Gupta of the National Library, Calcutta. Haridas Sinharay helped me to compare the present translation with Schiefner's German and every scrap of Schiefner's German incorporated into the present work is translated by him. Exactly in the same way, Harish Chandra Gupta helped me to compare the present translation with the Russian translation of Vasil'ev and every scrap of Vasil'ev's Russian incorporated into the present work is translated by him. But even that was not enough. Haridas Sinharay spared himself of no drudgery in seeing the book through the press and Harish Chandra Gupta prepared the Index, along with Dr. N. N. Bhattacharyya, Department of Ancient Indian History, Calcutta University.

In the matter of preparing the list of works of the Buddhist ācārya-s given in the Supplementary Notes, I received substantial help from Mrinalkanti Gangopadhyaya, Department of Sanskrit, Vidyasagar College, Calcutta, who also helped me in preparing the press copy of the text.

To Harbans Mukhia and Pranabranjan Ray I am indebted for two Supplementary Notes, printed with acknowledgement to them.

I take this opportunity of expressing my grateful thanks also to my friend Dr Mahadevprasad Saha, who has shown keen interest in the work throughout its progress and has extended his kind cooperation all through. I had also to depend substantially on the help of my friend Rama Krishna Maitra particularly in seeing the book through the press.

It makes me hesitate much to mention another name here, not because the help I received from him is not substantial but because his stature as a scholar is indeed too great to be freely associated with those of humble workers like us. Nevertheless, objectivity demands that I mention his name. He is Dr Suniti Kumar Chatterji, our National Professor in Humanities. Taking advantage of his paternal affection for us, myself and Alaka intruded upon his valuable time whenever we felt that something about the work was beyond our own depth. If we have pestered him too much, it is because of the indulgence he is in the habit of allowing to all students of Indian studies.

In a somewhat similar way, we did exploit the paternal affection also of Dr. A. P. Banerjee-Sastri, without whose academic help the present work would have remained more incomplete and unsatisfactory than it is.

TYPOGRAPHY, ABBREVIATIONS, ETC

1. Tāranātha gives the Indian names in three forms, namely—

- i) both as transliterated in Tibetan script and as translated into Tibetan language,
- ii) only as transliterated in Tibetan script, and
- iii) only as translated into Tibetan language.

In the present translation, the first form is indicated by double asterisks at the beginning of the name, the second by a single asterisk and the third by none. Thus—

- i) ★★Muditābhabhadra. In the text muditābhabhadra ste kun-tu-dga'-ba-bzan-po—Fol 49A.
- ii) ★Kṛṣṇarāja. In the text kriṣṇarāja—Fol 49A.
- iii) Aśoka. In the text mya-itan-med—Fol 2A.

2. Where Tāranātha mentions the names only in Tibetan translations, their possible Indian equivalents are given in the text of the present translation, indicating at the same time in the notes the Tibetan forms in which these are actually given by Tāranātha. Only when such Indian equivalents differ from those suggested by Vasil'ev and/or Schiefner, the equivalents they suggest are mentioned in the notes. In other cases, the equivalents given in the present translation may be taken as being the same.

3. Indian words other than proper names also occur in the text as transliterated in Tibetan characters. To indicate these, a single asterisk is put at their beginning. Thus—

- ★ paṇḍita—Fol 23A
- ★ śloka—Fol 32A
- ★ ṭāṅkā—Fol 72B.

4. In the Tibetan text, the number and title of each chapter occur at its end in the form of a brief colophon. Vasil'ev follows only the modern European principle of putting the chapter heading at the beginning of each chapter. Roerich, however, in his translation of the Biography of Dharmasvāmin (Patna 1959) follows a principle which appears to be more satisfactory and hence is adopted here. Over and above giving the chapter heading in the European form, he adds at the end of each chapter the translation of the colophon as actually occurring in the text.

5. Folio-beginnings of the Potala edition of the xylograph—on which the present translation is based—are indicated by bold letters within square brackets.

6. References to the works in bsTan-'gyur (Tanjur) are according to Cordier's Catalogue.

7. Transliteration of Tibetan words is (broadly) based on the principles followed in A Tibetan-English Dictionary by S. C. Das.

8. Following are the main abbreviations used in the notes

BA—The Blue Annals.

Bu-ston—Bu-ston's History of Buddhism (tr Obermiller).

D—Das, S. C., A Tibetan-English Dictionary.

J—Jaschke, H. A., A Tibetan-English Dictionary.

Kg—bKa'-'gyur (Kanjur).

P-ed—Potala edition of Tāranātha's xylograph.

rG—rGyud-'grel.

S—Schiefner

Hence,

S-ed—Schiefner's edition of Tāranātha's text (1868)

S n—Schiefner's Note

S tr—Schiefner's translation.

Tār—Tāranātha

Tg—bsTan-'gyur (Tanjur)

V—Vasil'ev (in German, Wassiljew)

Hence,

V n—Vasil'ev's Note

V tr—Vasil'ev's translation.

For other authors and their works referred to in the notes, see Bibliography.

9. Comparatively longer annotations are given at the end of the book in the form of Supplementary Notes.

TĀRANĀTHA'S

History of Buddhism in India

(tā-ra-nā-tha'i-rgya-gar-chos-'byuñ-bshugs)

INTRODUCTORY

[Fol 1]

om svasti prajābhyaḥ

The clear exposition of how the precious gem of the True Doctrine—the glorious, the magnificent and the source of all glories—was spread in India (ārya-deśa), [is briefly] called the dgos-'dod-kun-'byuñ.¹

[BENEDICTORY VERSE]

Salutation to the Buddha and the Bodhisattvas along with their disciples. Salutation to the Greatest Sage (munindra), who descends from the *dharmadhātu*² by the heavenly path and who—like the Lord of Clouds (meghendra)—decorated with the multi-coloured rainbow of *lakṣaṇa-s*³ and *ryañjana-s*⁴, showers the rain of nectar in the form of holy deeds.

[AIM OF THE WORK]

Even the learned (Tibetan) chroniclers and historians, when they come to discuss India, exhibit with their best efforts merely their poverty, like petty traders exhibiting their meagre stock. Some of the scholars, while trying to describe the origin of the Doctrine⁵, are found to commit [Fol 2A] many a mistake. For the benefit of others, therefore, I am preparing this brief work with the mistakes eliminated.

1. Literally, 'that which fulfils all desires', hence translated by V as The Treasure of Wish-fulfilments. The title-page of the P-ed gives the (corrupt) Indian form of the short title as Kārya-kāma-sarva-pravṛtti-nāma, which suggests the same idea.
2. chos-dbyiñs. The sphere or purview of religion—D 430.
3. The 32 holy marks of the Buddha—J 454.
4. The 80 physical perfections of the Buddha, described in the Lalitavistara as marks of secondary perfection—D 792.
5. The word chos is uniformly rendered as 'the Doctrine' (dharma), while bstan-pa as 'the Law' (śāsana).

[TABLE OF CONTENTS]

Here in brief is the necessary table of contents.

The descendants of the king Kṣemadarśin⁶ (Ajātaśatru) were four—

Subāhu,⁷
Sudhanu,⁸ Mahendra⁹ and
*Camaśa

And four of the successors¹⁰ of Aśoka—

Vigataśoka,¹¹
Virasena,¹²
Nanda¹³ and Mahāpadma.¹⁴

6. mthoñ-ldan-dge-ba.
7. lag-bzaiñ. The reconstruction is after V & S. It is difficult to guess the exact Indian names of the successors of Ajātaśatru that Tāranātha has in mind, particularly because the lists we come across in the Mahāvamsa and the Purāṇa-s do not concur.
8. gshu-bzaiñ.
9. dbaiñ-chen.
10. Aśoka's name is given in Tibetan as mya-nan-med. Tār is perhaps following here the prophecy of the Mañjuśrī-mūla-tantra, which is also followed by Bu-ston ii.118-9 and given in prose as follows: 'One hundred years after the Teacher will have passed away, in the city of Kusumapura there will appear the king Aśoka who will live 150 years and worship the monuments of the Buddha during 87 years. After him, the king named Vigataśoka will worship these monuments for 76 years. Thereafter, the king Virasena will rule for 70 years and will be succeeded by the king Nanda. The latter's reign will dure fifty-six years and his friend will be the brāhmaṇa Pāṇini. Then there will appear the king Candragupta, and after him his son called Bindusūra, who will rule for 70 years. The minister of these kings Cāṇakya, (owing to his deeds) will depart to hell.'
11. mya-nan-bral.
12. dpa'-bo'i-sde.
13. dga'-bo.
14. padma-che-sde.

Those who came in the *Candra dynasty were—

*Hari-,
 *Akṣa-,
 *Jaya-,
 *Nema-,
 *Phaṇī-,
 *Bhaṃśa-(? Vaṃśa-),
 *Sāla-, etc.

—to each of these is to be added *candra.

Then *Candragupta and Bindusāra¹⁵ and his nephew¹⁶ *Śricandra.

Then,

*Dharma-,
 *Karma-,
 *Vṛkṣa-,
 *Vigama-,
 *Kāma-,
 *Siṃha-,¹⁷
 *Bāla-, *Vimala-,
 *Govi-,
 *Lalita-, etc.

—to each of these also is to be added *candra.

Without counting Bindusāra, there were nineteen bearing the name *candra. Among them,¹⁸

Akṣacandra,
 Jayacandra,

15. sūih-po-thig-le.

16. tsha-bo means both 'grandson' and 'nephew'. V & S take it here as nephew.

17. S-ed Siṃha, P-ed Piṅga. The former reading is followed, because in Fol 73B of P-ed also is mentioned Siṃha-candra (in transliteration) of the Candra Dynasty. V & S Siṃha.

18. P-ed : the names in the following list up to the Ten Candra-s occur both in translation and transliteration. S-ed : the names occur only in translation. But V says in his note that the text has these names in both forms.

Dharmacandra,
 Karmacandra
 Vigama (-candra),
 Kāmacandra and Vimalacandra [Fol 28]

—these were famed as the Seven *Candra-s.

Candragupta, Gobi (-candra) and Laliticandra, added to this list, make the famous Ten *Candra-s.

Those who came in the line of the *Pāla-s were fourteen—

*Gopāla-,
 *Deva-,
 *Rāsa-,
 *Dharma-,
 *Vana-,
 *Mahi,
 *Mahā,
 *Śreṣṭha,
 *Bheya
 *Neya,
 *Āmra,
 *Hasti
 *Rāma,
 *Yakṣa,

—to all these is to be added *pāla.

The kings that came separately¹⁹ were—

Agnidatta,²⁰
 *Kaniṣka,
 *Lakṣāśva
 *Candanapāla,
 *Śrīharṣa,
 Śīla,²¹

19. thor-bur-byuh-ba. V translates 'temporarily' and explains 'not belonging to any dynasty or not having formed any and appearing in separate places'.

20. mes-byin.

21. ñah-tshul. V & S Śīla. See Bu-ston ii. 119.

Udayī, (Utrāyana, Udayana),²²

*Gauḍavardhana,

*Kanika,²³

*Turuṣka,²⁴

Turuṣka Mahāsammata,²⁵

Buddhapakṣa,²⁶

Gambhīrapakṣa,²⁷

Caḷa,²⁸

Caladhruva,²⁹

*Viṣṇu,

Siṃha,³⁰

22. S-ed bde-spyod, P-ed bde-byed. The former reading followed. In Fol 37A Tār gives the name as Utrāyana, which, S says, is the usual form in which the name occurs in Tibetan works. In Tg bde-spyod is an equivalent of Udayī: mDo xciv. 27 Suḥllekha, ācārya-nāgārjunena mitrāya udayīrājñe prerita...lekha; lit. reproduction mDo xxxiii. 32—mahācārya-nāgārjunena mitrāya udayibhadrāya prerita lekha. In both versions, the Tibetan equivalent of Udayī is bde-spyod. Obermiller (Bu-ston ii. 167) reconstructs bde-spyod as Udayana, which agrees with V & S. However, for the problem of identifying the Indian name of the addressee of Nāgārjuna's famous letter, see I-Tsing (Takakusu) 158f and 159n: Takakusu is inclined to identify the name as Sātavāhana, a corrupt form of which is Āntivāhana. cf also note 43 infra.
23. cf Fol 46A, where Tār says that this Kanika is not the same as king Kaniṣka, though this seems to go against the colophon of Mātṛceṭa's letter to Kaniṣka (Tg mDo xxxiii. 34 & xciv. 29), where the names Kanika and Kaniṣka occur interchangeably. For further discussion, see note 10 of chapter 18.
24. cf Mañjuśrī-mūla-tantra quoted by Bu-ston ii. 119, 'In the north, a king called Turuṣka is to live 300 years and after him he who is called Turuṣka Mahāsammata.'
25. sog-po, lit. the Mongol, Turuṣka, etc. V & S Śākya Mahāsammata. In Fol 53A, the name occurs as Turuṣka Mahāsammata.
26. saṅs-rgyas-phyogs.
27. zab-mo'i-phyogs. cf Bu-ston ii. 119.
28. gyo-ba. cf Bu-ston ii. 119.
29. gyo-brtan; gyo (to move), brtan (firm, the Pole Star, etc).
30. señ-ge, lit. 'the lion'.

*Bharśi (? Varṣa),³¹
 Pañcamasiṃha,³²
 Prasanna,³³
 Pradyota,³⁴
 Mahāsena,³⁵
 Śākya Mahābala.³⁶

In between the *Pala-s also came separately—

*Vasurakṣi (? Masurakṣita)³⁷
 *Canaka,³⁸
 Śāmupāla,³⁹
 Kṣāntipāla,⁴⁰ etc.

There were four *Sena-s—

*Laba-,
 *Kāsa- (? Kasa),
 *Maṇita- and *Rāthika-.

31. The text has Bharśi. Can it be a corruption of Varṣa? See J 386—the letter bha is sometimes written for ba (va) either from ignorance or in order to appear learned. Thus, Bhaṅgala for Baṅgala. However, both V & S Bharśa.
32. señ-ge-lha, lit. 'the five lions'. cf Bu-ston ii.118.
33. gsal-ba, lit. 'clear, bright' etc.
34. rab-gsal, lit. 'very clear'. Both V & S Prāditya. Roerich (BA ii.753) translates rab-gsal as Pradyota.
35. sde-chen, lit. 'the great group'.
36. śakya-stobs-chen. Both V & S Mahā Śākyaabala.
37. P-ed Vasurakṣi. S-ed Masurakṣi. In Fol 111A the name is given as Masurakṣita in transliteration. V Masurakṣa. Tg (mDo cxxiii.33) contains a work called Niti-śāstra attributed to Masurakṣa, alias Masurakṣi or Maṣa having the colophon: Masurakṣa-nīti (masu-rakṣa'i lugs-kyi).
38. tsa-na-ka. V & S Canaka, whose account is given in Fol 115A ff. This tsa-na-ka is not to be confused with tsa-na-ka (or Cāṇakya, see Bu-ston ii.119) mentioned in Fol 45B.
39. S-ed gshoñ-skyoñ, lit. Pātra-pāla. P-ed shin-skyoñ, lit. Kṣetrapāla. In Fol 113B the name occurs as Śāmupāla in transliteration, which agrees with V & S.
40. bzod-pa-skyoñ-ba.

Those who ruled *Kāñci etc in the south—

Śukla,⁴¹

Candraśobha,⁴²

Sālavāhana (? Sātavāhana, Sālivāhana),⁴³

Mahendra (? Maheśa),⁴⁴

Śaṃkara (? Kṣemaṅkara, Udayana),⁴⁵

Manorātha (? Manohara, Manojña),⁴⁶

Bhoga-subāla,⁴⁷

Candrasena,⁴⁸

Kṣemaṅkarasiṃha (? Śaṃkarasiṃha),⁴⁹

Vyāghra,⁵⁰

*Budha,⁵¹

*Buddhaśuca,

Ṣaṃmukha,⁵²

Sāgara,⁵³

41. dkar-po.

42. zla-mdse, lit. 'the beautiful moon'.

43. P-ed sā-la'i-bshon. S-ed sā-la'i-gshon. The former means Sālavāhana, the latter Sāla-kumāra. V & S Sālivāhana. In Fol 132A the name occurs as Sāla-vāhana both in translation and transliteration, perhaps as a corruption of Sātavāhana. Alberuni (Sachau i. 136) mentions Sātavāhana as Samalavāhana.

44. dban-chen. D 907 Mahendra. V & S Maheśa. In Fol 131A the name occurs as dban-byed (lit. 'one who subdues', 'one who accumulates power').

45. P-ed sde-byed. S-ed bde-byed. The former is an equivalent of Senakara, the latter of Śaṃkara or Kṣemaṅkara. In Fol 131A of P-ed also the name occurs as bde-byed. Hence this reading is followed. V & S Kṣemaṅkara.

46. yii-'oñ, lit. 'handsome, delightful' etc. V & S Manorātha. Obermiller (Bu-ston ii. 96) reconstructs as Manojña. cf I-Tsing (Takakusu) xiii.

47. loñs-spyod-skra-bzah, lit. 'one who enjoys beautiful hair'. In Fol 131A the name occurs as Bhoga-subāla in transliteration.

48. zla-ba'i-sde.

49. bde-byed-señ-ge. V & S Kṣemaṅkarasiṃha.

50. stag. In Fol 131B the name occurs as Vyāghra-rāja in transliteration.

51. P-ed Buda, obviously a corruption of Budha, which occurs in Fol 131B.

52. gdoñ-drug, lit. 'the six-faced one'. cf Fol 131B

53. rgya-mtsho.

Vikrama,⁵⁴

Ujjayana,⁵⁵

Śreṣṭha,⁵⁶

Mahendra,⁵⁷

Devarāja,⁵⁸

Viśva,⁵⁹

Śīśu,⁶⁰

Pratāpa.⁶¹

The southern brāhmaṇa-s were—

Balamitra,⁶²

Nāgaketu,⁶³

Vardhamāla.⁶⁴

The early great ācārya-s were—

*Gaggari,

Kumārānanda,⁶⁵

Matikumāra,⁶⁶

Bhadrānanda,⁶⁷ [Fol 3A]

Dānabhadra,⁶⁸

*Laṅkādeva,

54. rab-gnon. But in Fol 131B, the name occurs as rnam-gnon, an equivalent of Vikrama.

55. rgyal-mchog. Both V & S Ujjayana, though S suggests Jinavara as an alternative.

56. gtso-bö.

57. dbañ-chen.

58. lha-rgyal-po.

59. sna-ishogs.

60. byis-pa.

61. rab-gduñ.

62. stobs-kyi-bśes-gñen. In Fol 132A the name occurs as Balamitra in transliteration.

63. klu'i-tog. In Fol 132B the name occurs as Nāgaketu in transliteration.

64. 'phel-ba'i-phreñ-ba. In Fol 132B the name occurs as Vardhamāla in both transliteration and translation.

65. gshon-nu-dga'. In Fol 132B, Kumārānanda.

66. blo-gshon. In Fol 132B, Matikumāra.

67. bzañ-po'i-kun-dga'. In Fol 133A, Bhadrānanda.

68. sbyin-bzañ. In Fol 133A, Dānabhadra.

*Bahubhuja and Madhyamati.⁶⁹

If Madhyāntika⁷⁰ is added to the very famous seven successors of the Teacher Jina, their number becomes eight.

The arhat-s who nourished the Law were—

- Uttara,⁷¹
Yaśaḥ,⁷²
Pośada,⁷³
Kāśyapa,⁷⁴
Śīṅṅavāsa,⁷⁵
Mahāloma,⁷⁶
Mahātyāga,⁷⁷
Nandin,⁷⁸
Dharmaśreṣṭhī,⁷⁹
Pārśva,⁸⁰
Aśvagupta⁸¹ and
*Nanda.

69. dbu-ma'i-blo.

70. ñi-ma-guñ-ba.

71. bla-ma.

72. grags-pa.

73. bsos-byin.

74. 'od-sruñs.

75. P-ed yul-brlan. In Fol 27A the name occurs as yul-bstan-pa, lit. 'one who unified the country': In both places, S translates the name as Śīṅṅavāsa, taking the word as a corruption of sa-na-pa. cf Bu-ston ii. 109, where Obermiller, on the evidence of Kg, reconstructs yul-slan-pa as Śīṅṅavāsa. In Fol 5A, however, the Tibetan form of Śīṅṅavāsika occurs as śa-na'i-gos-can. V translates Śīṅṅavāsa and says that it is nothing but an equivalent of Śīṅṅakavāsa.

76. spu-chen-po.

77. gtoñ-ba-chen-po.

78. dga'-ba-can. Obermiller (Bu-ston ii. 109) reconstructs the name as Nandin.

79. chos-kyi-tshoñ-dpon, lit. 'the pious merchant'. Both V & S Dharmaśreṣṭha. In Tg. (mDo lxxviii. 5 and xc. 9) Dharmaśreṣṭhin and Dharmaśreṣṭha are interchangeably mentioned.

80. rtsibs-can. Obermiller (Bu-ston ii. 108) takes rtsibs as Pārśva. V & S Pārśvika.

81. rta-sbas.

The great bhattachāraka-s⁸² were—

- Uttara,⁸³
- Kāśyapa,⁸⁴
- Mahīśāsaka (? Bahuśāsaka),⁸⁵
- Dharmagupta,⁸⁶
- Suvarṣaka,⁸⁷
- Vatsīputra,⁸⁸
- Tāmraśāṭa,⁸⁹
- Vahuśruta,⁹⁰
- Dharmottara,⁹¹
- Avantaka,⁹²
- Sañjaya,⁹³

82. htsun-pa-chen-po'i-sde-rnams. S takes these as names of the 'schools' founded by the great bhadanta-s, evidently because of the use of the words sde-rnams in the text. But the same words occur in the list of the brāhmaṇa-s given immediately afterwards, where the sense of the 'school' is ruled out. It is, therefore, safer to take the words sde-rnams here as simply conveying the sense of the plural, though some of the names in the present list are those of the founders of the well-known eighteen sects (see Tāranātha Ch 42) while some other names here are not so. V translates htsun-pa as 'the elders' and adds in the note, 'By this term is meant the well-known persons of the Hīnayāna Buddhist hierarchy. They are below arhat-s, but they must be either from amongst the heads, founders of schools, propagators of the Doctrine or the authors.'

83. bla-ma. cf Bu-ston ii. 96.

84. 'od-sruñs.

85. The text has mañ-ston and sa-ston. Rocrich (BA i. 28) takes both to mean Mahīśāsaka, though the literal meaning of the former seems to be Vahuśāsaka. S takes mañ-ston as Sammitīyas and sa-ston as Mahīśāsakas. V Mahīśāsaka.

86. chos-bsruñs.

87. char-bzaiñ-behs, lit. 'good shower'. V & S Suvarṣa.

88. gnas-ma-bu, lit. 'son of Vatsa'. S Vātsīputrīyas.

89. gos-dmar-ba, lit. 'one with red robe'. S Tāmraśāṭīyas.

90. mañ-thos, lit. 'one with many listenings'. S Vahuśrutīyas.

91. chos-mchog.

92. sruñ-ba-pa. D 717 Avantaka. cf Bu-ston ii. 99.

93. yaiñ-dag-rgyal-ba, taken in Bu-ston ii. 109 as Sañjaya. S Jetavanīya, the usual Tibetan for which is rgyal-byed-tshal-gnas-pa—D 718 and Bu-ston ii. 99.

Sthavira,⁹⁴
 Dharmatrāta,⁹⁵
 Vasumitra,⁹⁶
 Ghoṣaka,⁹⁷
 Śrīlābha,⁹⁸
 Buddhadeva,⁹⁹
 Kumāralāta,¹⁰⁰
 Vāmana,¹⁰¹
 *Kuṇāla,
 Śubhaṅkara (? Kṣemaṅkara),¹⁰²
 Saṅghavardhana¹⁰³ and Sambhūti (?).¹⁰⁴

94. gnas-brtan.

95. chos-skyob.

96. dbyig-bśes. V Vasumitra. S Vasubandhu. But this name is not to be confused with that of the famous brother of Asaṅga, the usual Tibetan form of which is dbyig-gñen. Besides, in the Table of Contents Tār evidently includes Vasubandhu among the Six Jewels of Jambudvīpa. cf Fol 31B.

97. dbyaṅs-sgrogs.

98. dpal-len.

99. saṅs-rgyas-lha.

100. gshon-nu-len, lit. Kumāralābha. See Winternitz HIL ii. 268 : 'Kumāralābha is only a wrong translation of the Chinese name given for Kumāralāta.—See Luders, Bruchstücke der Kalpanāmaṇḍiṭikā des Kumāralāta, Leipzig 1926, p. 20'. [cf Watters I.244 : Kumāralabdha or Kou-mo-lo-lo-to.] S. C. Vidyabhusana HIL 248 overlooks this and accepts the form Kumāra-lābha or Kumāra-labdha. V & S Kumāralābha.

101. mi'u-thuñ.

102. dge-byed, taken by both V & S as Śaṅkara, the usual Tibetan for which is bde-byed. The Tg contains a work by one dge-byed (rG lxxi. 106), the Sanskrit equivalent of which is given as Śubhaṅkara. But dge-byed may also be the Tibetan form of Kṣemaṅkara.

103. dge-'dun-'phel.

104. bsam-rdsogs, 'one with perfect thinking'. S Sambhūti and adds in the note : 'The Tibetan compound of bsam-rdsogs allows of such a translation. But I do not wish to commit to it as the safe one. A later Tibetan author has sought to translate it as Dhyāna-saṃskṛta —cf Thob-yig in the Asiatic Museum, No. 287, Fol 257a, line 3.'

The great brāhmaṇa-s who also worked for the Law were—

- Jaya,¹⁰⁵
 Sujaya,¹⁰⁶
 Kalyāṇa,¹⁰⁷
 Siddha,¹⁰⁸
 Adarpa,¹⁰⁹
 *Rāghava,
 Yaśasvin,¹¹⁰
 *Paṇi (Pāṇini),
 Vijñā,¹¹¹
 Bhadra,¹¹²
 Vararuci,¹¹³
 *Śūdra,¹¹⁴
 Kulika,¹¹⁵
 Udbhaṭa [-siddhi-svāmin] (Mudgaragomin),¹¹⁶
 Śaṃkara [-pati],¹¹⁷
 Dhārmika (? Dharmika),¹¹⁸

105. rgyal-ba. cf Bu-ston ii. 116.
 106. legs-rgyal. cf Bu-ston ii. 116.
 107. dge-ba. cf Bu-ston ii. 116.
 108. grub-pa. cf Bu-ston ii. 116.
 109. dregs-med. cf Bu-ston ii. 116.
 110. grags-ldan. V & S Yaśika. Obermiller (Bu-ston ii. 116) Yaśasvin.
 111. mkhas-pa, lit. 'the learned'. V & S Kuśala. Obermiller (Bu-ston ii. 109) Vijñā.
 112. bzañ-po.
 113. mchog-sred.
 114. S Śūdra and adds in note that in Bu-ston [Fol 87] the name occurs as dmañs-rigs (lit. śūdra). P-ed Sūtra in transliteration. See Bu-ston ii. 116.
 115. rags-ldan. cf Bu-ston ii. 116.
 116. mtho-brtsun, V & S Mudgaragomin. But it is an abbreviation of mtho-brtsun-grub-rje or Udbhaṭa-siddhisvāmin alias Mudgaragomin, the author of the Viśeṣa-stava (bsTod 1) and Sarvajña-maheśvara-stotra-nāma (bsTod 3). See Fol 34A.
 117. bde-byed, an abbreviation of bde-byed-bdag-po or Śaṃkara-pati, the author of the Devātīśaya-stotra (bsTod 4). See Fol 34A. V & S Śaṃkara.
 118. chos-ldan. cf Bu-ston ii. 116—Dharmika.

Virya (? Mahāvīrya),¹¹⁹
 Su-viṣṇu,¹²⁰
 Madhu,¹²¹
 *Supramadhu,
 Vararuci, the second,¹²²
 Kāśījāta,¹²³
 *Canaka,
 Vasunetra,¹²⁴
 *Śaṅku,
 Bṛhaspati,¹²⁵
 *Makṣika,
 *Vasunāga,
 Bhadrāpālita,¹²⁶
 Pūrṇa¹²⁷ and Pūrṇabhadra.¹²⁸

Most of the teachers of the Mahāyāna [Fol 3B] were so highly renowned that, even though not mentioned in this brief Table of Contents, they would be known from the subsequent account.

The Six Jewels of the Jambudvīpa¹²⁹ were extremely famous. Known as the Great Four were—

Śūra,¹³⁰
 Rāhula,¹³¹

119. brtson-ldan. cf Bu-ston ii. 116—Mahāvīrya. V Uddyogin.

120. khyab-'jug-bzañ, lit. Viṣṇu-bhadra. cf Bu-ston ii. 116. V Su-viṣṇu.

121. sbrañ-rtsi.

122. mchog-sred-gñis-pa.

123. gsal-ldan-skye. cf Bu-ston ii. 116.

124. nor-gyi-mig. cf Bu-ston ii. 117.

125. phur-bu.

126. bzañ-po-bskyañs.

127. gañ-ba. cf Bu-ston ii. 117.

128. gañ-ba-bzañ-po. cf Bu-ston ii. 117.

129. Typically Tibetan form of referring to 'Nāgārjuna, Āryadeva, Asaṅga, Vasubandhu, Dignāga and Dharmakīrti'—See Fol 94A.

130. dpa'-bo.

131. sgra-gcan-'dsin.

Guṇaprabha¹³² and Dharmapāla¹³³

Śāntideva¹³⁴ and *Candragomī were famed among the learned as 'the two wonderful teachers'.

In India, the two Uttama-s¹³⁵ were not famous. Only the Tibetans join their names to the list of the Six Jewels.

The twelve Tāntrika teachers of Vikramaśīla¹³⁶ were—

Jñānapāda,¹³⁷
Dīpaṅkara-bhadra,¹³⁸
*Laṅkā-jayabhadra,¹³⁹
Śrīdhara,¹⁴⁰
*Bha-va-bha (Bhavabhadra),¹⁴¹
Bhavyakīrti,¹⁴²
*Līlāvajra,
Dūrjaya-candra,¹⁴³
Samaya-vajra,¹⁴⁴
Tathāgata-rakṣita¹⁴⁵
Bodhibhadra¹⁴⁶ and

132. yon-tan-'od.

133. chos-skyoñ.

134. shi-ba-lha.

135. mchog-gñis. V 'the two Supremes'.

136. rnam-gnon-tshul. The usual form for Vikramaśīla, however, is rnam-gnon-ñan-tshul.

137. ye-śes-shabs.

138. mar-me-mdsad-bzah-po.

139. laṅkā-rgyal-bzah. Jayabhadra of Laṅkā or Ceylon. Tg contains a number of works by him on Cakrasamvara: rG vii. 12; xiii. 22-3; 33; lxxvi. 16 & 20. Of these, the last was composed by him in Magadha.

140. dpal-'dsin.

141. In Fol 127A the name occurs as Bhavabhadra in transliteration.

142. skal-ldan-grags-pa.

143. mi-thub-zla-ba.

144. dam-tshig-rdo-rje. In Fol 127B the name is given as Kṛṣṇasamaya-vajra.

145. de-bshin-gśegs-bsruñs.

146. byañ-chub-bzah-po.

Kamalarakṣita.¹⁴⁷

Next came various Tāntrika teachers like the Six Door-keeper Scholars.

The following account will be clearly understood and followed if all these are remembered.

[THE SOURCES]

The dependable sources of our knowledge of the royal chronology prior to the appearance of our Teacher Samyak-sambuddha in this world are the Vinayaśāstra,¹⁴⁸ *Abhiniṣkramaṇa-sūtra*¹⁴⁹ and partly also the Lalitavistara, etc. In the śāstra-s of the īrthika-s occur the genealogies of innumerable kings, sages and other persons belonging to the satya, tretā, dvāpara and kali aeons. However, these are not fully reliable, because these are mixed up with errors. Further, since these are not related to the history of the True Doctrine—and therefore are of no value to the seekers of truth in its purity—[Fol 4A] I am not mentioning all these here. Nevertheless, to name their authoritative sources: the Bhārata* consisting of over a hundred thousand śloka*-s, the Rāmāyaṇa* containing a hundred thousand śloka*-s, the Aṣṭādaśa-purāṇa* containing over a lakh of śloka*-s, a poetical work consisting of 80,000¹⁵⁰ śloka*-s called the Raghuvamśam*, etc.

I am going to narrate here the account of only those who worked for the spread of the Law of the Teacher.

147. padma-spuṅ-ba. In Fol 128A the name occurs as Kamalarakṣita in transliteration.

148. 'dul-ba-luñ. V Vinayavastu.

149. mūn-par-'byuñ-ba'i-mdo. Kg—Sendai Cat. No. 301.

150. stoi-phrag-brgyad-bcu.

CHAPTER 1

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF KING AJĀTAŚATRU

At the time when the sayings of the Teacher Samyak-sambuddha were collected,¹ the gods offered their praises, happiness and prosperity prevailed all over the human world,² both gods and men lived in bliss and the piety of king Kṣemadarśin³—also renowned as Ajātaśatru⁴—increased spontaneously. He brought under control without warfare all the five cities excepting only Vaiśālī.⁵

When the Tathāgata and his two disciples⁶, along with

1. Does this refer to the First Council said to have taken place at Rājagṛha under the patronage of king Ajātaśatru? The Pāli Cullavagga does not mention Ajātaśatru in its account of the First Council; but the Mahāvamsa, the Samanta-pāsādikā etc do (See 2500 Years 37). Bu-ston ii. 73ff gives an account of the First Council based on the Vinaya-kṣudraka-vastu (Kg 'Dul-ba xi—Sendai Cat. No 6), in which also Ajātaśatru figures. As to the conditions that necessitated the First Council or 'the first collection of the sayings' of the Buddha, Yuan-chuang (See Watters ii. 37) refers to the general feeling of doubt and consternation and also of the deep sense of sorrow with which the people were overpowered during the Buddha's nirvāṇa; the Pāli sources like the Cullavagga mention the general tendency to laxity expressed for example by Subhadda; the Vinaya-kṣudraka (quoted by Bu-ston ii. 73) refers to the general contempt expressed by the gods who said, 'The Word of the Teacher is dispersing like smoke. The monks who possessed authority and power have likewise passed away. Therefore the three codes of scripture will never come to be expounded.'
2. mi'i-'jig-rten, i.e. as contrasted with nāga-loka etc.
3. mithon-lān-dge-ba. V tr 'the so-called Kṣemadarśin' and adds in the note, 'The Tibetan word should roughly mean gifted with auspicious vision'. The idea conveyed is, therefore, very near to priyadarśin.
4. ma-skyes-dgra.
5. spoñ-byed. V & S Vṛji. But see D 802 and J 332. For other sources on Ajātaśatru's campaign against the Vṛjis, see Basham HDA 71ff.
6. Śāriputra and Maudgalyāyana, both of whom—as V adds in note—died before the Buddha.

1,68,000 arhat-s⁷ went to eternal sleep and Mahākāśyapa⁸ also attained the nirvāṇa,⁹—everybody was plunged into great grief. All the bhikṣu-s, who saw the great Teacher in person, thought: 'Because of our own carelessness, we failed to attain distinction during the life-time of the Buddha.' And they resolved to devote themselves exclusively to the Doctrine. The venerable preceptors also did the same. The younger bhikṣu-s, who did not see the Teacher in person, thought: 'We are incapable of practising the Doctrine [Fol 4B] properly, because we could never see the Teacher himself. We are likely to be misguided if we do not exert ourselves for the Law.' Thus thinking they strove after virtue.

As a result, there greatly swelled the number of those who attained the 'four stages of perfection'.¹⁰

Ārya Ānanda¹¹ frequently preached to the 'four classes of followers'.¹² Also those who were proficient in the piṭaka-s

7. According to Vinaya-kṣudraka quoted by Bu-ston ii. 73, Śāriputra had 80,000 followers, Maudgalyāyana 70,000, while the Teacher himself 18,000 followers.

8. 'od-sruṅs-chen-po.

9. V n 'Mahākāśyapa looked after the Law for about ten years.'

10. 'bras-bu-bshi-thob-pa. See J 400—'bras-bu, reward of ascetic exercises, the various grades of perfection of which four are distinguished, viz. 1) srotāpatti—or as practised srotāpanna—, i.e. he who enters the stream (that takes from the external world to nirvāṇa), 2) sakṛdāgāmin, i.e. he who returns once more (for the period of a human birth), 3) anāgāmin, i.e. he who returns no more, being a candidate of nirvāṇa, 4) arhanta, the arhat, the finished saint.

V tr 'the four fruits' and adds in the note, 'i.e. the stages of srotāpannaka, sakṛdāgāmin, anāgāmin and arhat.'

11. kun-dga'-bo. V n 'The title ārya ('phags-pa) is added to the early patriarchs counted in the succession of the seven.'

12. 'khor-rnam-pa-bshi. See J 57—The attendants of Buddha's hearers divided into four classes (namely, in the earliest times)—1) dge-slon (bhikṣu), 2) dge-slon-ma (bhikṣuṇī), 3) dge-bsñen (upāsaka) and 4) dge-bsñen-ma (upāsikā). At a later period: 1) mai-thos (śrāvaka), 2) rai-saṅs-rgyas (pratyeka-buddha), 3) byañ-chub-sems-dpa (bodhisattva), 4) so-so'i-skye-bo-rnams (prthag-jana), V n 'bhikṣu, bhikṣuṇī, sramaṇera and śramaṇerikā.'

(piṭaka-dhara-s) expounded the Doctrine. Consequently, the ordained monks (pravrajyita-s) lived the life of strict moral care.

The Teacher entrusted Mahākāśyapa with the Law.¹³ He entrusted ārya Ānanda with the Law. This was of special significance.¹⁴

The king and all the householders—and also the (other) kings, the merit of whose virtue was difficult to measure,—became disturbed with the multitude of worldly affairs (and) felt that previously they saw the foremost Teacher of the world while they now could see only his disciples. (Thus) they came to realise the preciousness of the buddha, dharmā and saṃgha and went on worshipping these with great reverence. They strove after virtue and thus disappeared quarrels and conflicts.

It is said that in this way the world remained virtuous for about forty years.

On about the fifteenth year of ārya Ānanda's leadership of the Doctrine, the young *Suvarṇavarṇa*¹⁵ attained arhat-hood. His account is already given in the Suvarṇavarṇa-avadāna.¹⁶

At that time king Ajātaśatru thought: 'If even a person like Suvarṇavarṇa could smoothly and without difficulty be led to arhat-hood by Ānanda, he must be a *śrāvaka*¹⁷ like the Buddha himself.'—Thus thinking, he worshipped for five years with all sorts of gifts five thousand arhat-s¹⁸, inclusive of ārya Ānanda.

Then came to *Magadha from the [Fol 5A] city of *Kimmilimālā¹⁹ of the south a brāhmaṇa belonging to the 13. See Supplementary Note No 1 for Tār's account of Ānanda and of the succession of the patriarchs as throwing light on his sources.

14. V omits this sentence in his translation.

15. gser-mdog-gi-rtogs-brjod. V & S Karakavarṇa.

16. Tg mDo xc 17 Suvarṇavarṇa-avadāna.

17. ñān-thos.

18. dgra-bcom-pa.

19. S Kimmilimālā and adds in note, which is also quoted by V 'Whether here the northern city of Kimpila (which is decidedly a corruption of Kāmpilla)—also mentioned by Vasil'ev in Vinaya vol iii—is to be understood or whether it is Krimilā, cannot be decided.'

vicious *Bharadvāja family.²⁰ He was a great expert in magic and entered into a competition of magic power with the monks.

In the presence of the king and other people, he conjured up four hills made of gold, silver, crystal and vaidūrya*. Each of these had four pleasure-gardens full of jewels. Each of the gardens had four lotus ponds full of all sorts of birds.

Ārya Ānanda conjured up hordes of wild elephants that could not be destroyed. They devoured the lotuses and devastated the ponds. The trees fell down by a strong blast of wind. Nothing remained of the hills or of their boundaries because of terrible thunder shower.

Ārya Ānanda transformed his own body into five hundred bodies. From some of them emitted lustre, some others started showering rain and some others showed the four-fold performances²¹ in the sky. From the upper parts of certain other bodies came out fire and from their lower parts came out streams of water.

Thus he showed many assorted²² magical feats like these.

[The brāhmaṇa of the] vicious *Bharadvāja family and the assembled people were full of reverence. As a result of the elaborate exposition of the Doctrine [by ārya Ānanda], eighty thousand people, including five hundred brāhmaṇa-s like *Bharadvāja and others, were led to truth within seven days.

On another occasion, when ārya Ānanda was residing at 20. V & S 'brāhmaṇa Bharadvāja belonging to the line of Jambhala.' But this seems to be far-fetched. The text has gnod-pa-can, meaning 'the vicious', which also fits the context. Besides, Bharadvāja being a well-known brāhmaṇa gotra is itself suggestive of a line of descent. S & V mention Jambhala perhaps because of reading the word as dsam-bha-la, meaning Jambhala, the god of riches or Pluto—see D 1048.

21. spyod-lam-bshi, the four postures of sitting, lying, standing and walking—J 335.

22. ya-ma-zuñ.

Jetavana,²³ the householder called Śaṅavāsika²⁴ lavishly entertained the saṃgha-s for five years. After this, he was ordained (pravrajyita), being instructed by the ārya [Ānanda]. In course of time, he became proficient in the three piṭaka-s and eventually attained arhat-hood, free from the two-fold obscurations.²⁵

[Fol 5B] In this way on various occasions [ārya Ānanda] led to arhat-hood about ten thousand monks. He resided in the middle of the *Gaṅgā river, where it flowed between the two lands, [viz. Vaiśālī and Magadha], so that the *Licchavis of Vaiśālī and king Ajātaśatru of *Magadha could be equally favoured with his relics. Being prayed for ordination (upāsampadā)²⁶ by five hundred sages, he miraculously created an island in the middle of the river. With his supernatural power he got the bhikṣu-s to congregate there and within an hour led the five hundred sages from the stage of upāsampadā to

23. rgyal-byed-kyi-tshal. V n "Bu-ston fol 95 'od-ma'i-tshal or Venuvana."

24. śa-na'i-gos-can. V Śaṅavāsa. Various mentioned as Śaṅika, Śaṅavāsa, Śoṅavāsī, Śāṅavāsika and Śāṅavāsika. Yuan-chuang (See Watters i. 120) explains the significance of the name with special reference to his robes. Yuan-chuang was shown the robe which by that time 'suffered some diminution and this was proof to disbelievers.'

25. gñis-ka'i-cha-las-rnam-par-grol-ba, i.e. ubhayato-bhāga-vimukti or deliverance from both kleśa-āvaraṇa and jñeya-āvaraṇa by the force of samādhi. See N. S. Sastri, Vāhyārtha-siddhi (Namgyal Institute of Tibetology, July 1967) pp 12 & 34. cf also D 333. Dutt EMB 267—the arhat-s are distinguished into two categories, of which the higher one comprises of those who have attained emancipation by two means, viz. by perfecting himself in the Eight Releases from thought-construction and by acquisition of the highest knowledge. They are called ubhato-bhāga-vimukta-arhat-s. The lower category comprises of arhat-s who practise 'only the first four meditations and not the higher ones nor the releases.'

V tr 'He became proficient first in the three piṭaka-s and then in the two forms of arhat-hood and attained absolute salvation.' In the note he explains the two forms of arhat-hood as with and without abode. S follows this interpretation.

26. bsñen-par-rdsogs-pa. See D 511.

arhat-hood. That is why, these five hundred were famed as the five hundred madhyāhnikā-s, [i.e. the five hundred that reached arhat-hood during mid-day] or the five hundred madhyāntikā-s [i.e. the five hundred that reached arhat-hood in mid-stream].²⁷ The foremost of them was known as Mahā-madhyāntikā or Mahā-madhyāhnikā.²⁸

After this, he [Ānanda] attained nirvāṇa and the relics of his mortal body were burnt by self-kindled fire. The ashes of his bones assumed the form of two balls of gems and were carried by the waves to the two shores of the river. The northern one was taken by the Vṛjīs²⁹ and the southern one by Ajātaśatru. They built caitya-s³⁰ [containing these relics] in their respective countries.

Ānanda served the Law for forty years. The next year Ajātaśatru also died. After being born for a while in the hell,³¹ he died again there and was reborn in heaven. He listened to the doctrine from ārya Śāṇavāsika and entered the stream [i.e. attained the first stage of perfection, viz. that of srotāpatti]. Thus it is said.³²

The first chapter containing the account of the period of king Ajātaśatru.

27. cf Bu-ston ii. 89ff

28. V & S n : Both the Tibetan words ñi-ma-guñ-pa and chu-dbus-pa appear to be based on Pali majjhantiko.

29. spoñ-byed-pa. V 'the inhabitants of Vaiśālī'.

30. Yuan-chungang was shown these caitya-s. See Watters ii. 80 : 'Here (i.e. the Svetapura monastery near Vaiśālī) were two topes, one on the north and one on the south side of the river, to mark the spots at which Ānanda on going into extinction, gave one half of his bodily relics to Magadha and the other half to Veśālī.' Fa-hien gives practically the same legend of Ānanda's nirvāṇa—See Legge 75f.

31. Here at last Tāranātha shows that he is not totally unaware of the dark deeds of the king. Interestingly, Kg contains a work called Ajātaśatru-Kaukṛtya-Vinodana—see Bu-ston i. 41.

32. The typical Tibetan way of referring to something as a hearsay, about the authenticity of which the author himself takes no responsibility. The expression corresponds to the Chinese huo-yue—See Watters ii. 97.

CHAPTER 2

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF KING SUBĀHU

After that, Subāhu, son of king Ajātaśatru, ascended the throne and worshipped the Law of the Buddha for about seventeen¹ years.

At that time, ārya Śāṅavāsika looked after the Law for a brief period. However, during this period mainly ārya Madhyāntika,² residing in *Vārāṇasī, expounded the āgama-s to the 'four classes of followers' and preached the doctrine to the householders and brāhmaṇa-s.

Once upon a time, many brāhmaṇa-s and householders of *Vārāṇasī [Fol 6A] became annoyed with the bhikṣu-s, who were begging for alms. They said to them, 'Is there no other place to get the alms from? Has *Vārāṇasī alone any surplus to offer? And if we feed you, are you not obliged to give us something in return?'

On hearing all these, ārya Madhyāntika, along with his ten thousand arhat followers, flew through the sky and reached *Uśīra³ hill on the north. There a householder, called *Aja, arranged for the congregation of the saṃgha-s all around⁴

1. V & S 'ten years', because S-ed has lo-bcu (ten years); but the P-ed has lo-bcu-bulun (seventeen years).
2. V & S Madhyāntika (passim), though in the text occurs ñi-ma-guñ-pa, literally 'the person of the mid-day' or madhyāhnikā.
3. V n (quoted by S): 'It is said in the Vinaya that the Buddha, before his nīrvāṇa, had left Ānanda in Rohitaka and himself went towards the north along with Vajrapāṇi. The first object which appeared to him from afar was the Uśīra mountain. The Buddha predicted that hundred years after him there would be an arena for the religious people there in the Tāmasa forest on this mountain. Yuan-chuang also speaks of the cloister Tāmasavana in the kingdom of Tehi-ma-po-ti.' Cf Watters ii. 308; BA i. 23; Bu-ston ii. 109.
4. phyogs-bshi'i, lit. 'of the four directions', an equivalent of Sanskrit cāturdśīka.

and entertained them for one year. Forty-four thousand arhat-s assembled there. For this reason, the Law was spread more extensively in the north.

In this way, Madhyāntika preached the Doctrine for three years in *Uśīra.

At that time, ārya Śāṇavāsika resided at Śrāvastī.⁵ As the result of his preaching the Doctrine to the 'four classes of followers', the number of the arhat-s there reached nearly a thousand.

Earlier, during the time of king Ajātaśatru, there lived two persons who, though brāhmaṇa by birth, were extremely tough, wicked, sinful and were indifferent to the purity and impurity of food. They used to kill all sorts of animals. They were called *Paṇa and *Nava.⁶

They committed theft in some houses and were therefore punished by the king.⁷ This made them extremely angry. So they offered midday meals to many arhat-s and prayed, 'By virtue of this act, may we be reborn as yakṣa-s and plunder⁸ the king and people of *Magadha'.

After some time, these two persons died in an epidemic [Fol 6B] and were reborn as yakṣa-s. On the seventh or eighth year of the reign of king Subāhu, they became very powerful yakṣa-s of *Magadha and caused a terrible epidemic to spread in the country. A large number of persons and cattle perished. But the epidemic did not subside.

When the astronomers came to know the cause of this [epidemic], the citizens of *Magadha succeeded in inviting Śāṇavāsika from Śrāvastī and entreated him to overpower the two yakṣa-s.

He [Śāṇavāsika] came to the *Gurva hill⁹ and took shelter in the cave in which these two yakṣa-s were residing. At

5. mān-yod.

6. V & S Napa. S-ed Napa. P-ed Nava.

7. V & S 'their hands were chopped off'. This translation is because S-ed has lag-pa-bcad-pa, instead of which P-ed has chad-pas-bcad-pa (punishment).

8. V tr 'take revenge on'.

9. A corruption of Gurupāda, which was the other name of Kukkuṭa-pāda—see Watters ii. 143.

that time, these yakṣa-s had gone to other yakṣa-s and were called back by a friend of theirs, who was also a yakṣa.

On returning, they smashed in a terrible fury the stones that formed the cave. But there emerged another cave and ārya Śāṇavāsika was seen sitting within it. This happened thrice. Then these two [yakṣa-s] set fire [to the cave]. But the arhat covered all the ten directions with greater flames. The two yakṣa-s got scared and tried to escape. But they could find no way out because of the flames all around. When they surrendered to Śāṇavāsika, the flames got extinguished. After this, he [Śāṇavāsika] preached the Doctrine to them. They became full of great devotion and were led to śaraṇa-gamana and śikṣā.¹⁰

Immediately after this, the epidemic came to an end.

Thousands of brāhmaṇa-s and householders thus witnessed the miraculous power [of Śāṇavāsika].

The second chapter containing the account of the period of king Subāhu.

10. bslab-pa'i-gnas—see D 1324, V n 'i.e. the promise to respect the Doctrine and to learn its dogmas. Even today, this is the attitude that the lay devotees adopt to Buddhism.'

CHAPTER 3

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF KING SUDHANU

After the death of this king [Subāhu], his son Sudhanu succeeded him. At that time there took place the conversion of Kashmir by Madhyāntikā.¹

By his miraculous power, Madhyāntikā went to Kashmir and settled on the shore of a lake where lived the Nāgas.² The furious Nāga king *Auduṣṭa³ and his attendants [Fol 7A] caused a terrible storm⁴ and rain, but could not shake even 'a

1. For legends of the conversion of Kashmir by Madhyāntikā given by Yuan-chuang and others, see Watters i. 230, 239, 260ff. cf also Bu-ston ii. 89; BA i. 23. V n 'For the spread of Buddhism in Kashmir, see L. Feer in Journal Asiatique, December 1865. We do not think that it is necessary to regard the arrival of Madhyāntikā here as a pure historical fact. The beginning of the introduction of the religion in all the countries has always been considered earlier than the facts actually taking place. For example, in this history itself, we find a reference to the prevalence of mysticism at a time when it was still not there in India. In China, in Tibet and in Ceylon—everywhere the appearance of Buddhism is attributed to an earlier date in various histories.' S quotes this note.
2. cf Watters i. 264-5.
3. S n 'In other sources, the name of the nāga-rāja is stated otherwise—cf. L. Feer in Journal Asiatique 1865, p. 498ff.' Przulski 5: the name given as Hu-lu-t'u in the Vinaya of the Mūla-sarvāstivādīs. BA i. 23 Auduṣṭa. cf Watters i. 229-30. 'We read in the Sarvata Vinaya that the Buddha on a certain occasion near the end of his career, took with him his attendant yakṣa named Vajrapāṇi and went through the air to the country beyond the Indus to subdue and convert this dragon (Apālā)...In a Vinaya treatise apparently from Pāli sources, we read of a dragon called Alāpalu in Kapin (Kashmir), who is overcome and converted by the great arhat Madhyāntikā (Majjhantikā) who had come as an apostle to introduce Buddhism. This legend seems to be a version of the story here narrated (by Yuan-chuang: Watters i. 229), Majjhantikā taking the place of the Buddha.'
4. S omits 'storm', though both S-ed and P-ed have rdsi-char-drag-po (rain and storm).

corner of his [Madhyāntika's] robe. The rain of weapons let loose by them changed into a shower of flowers. So the Nāga king appeared in person and asked, 'Oh ārya, what exactly do you want ?'

He replied, 'Give me a plot of land.'

'How much of land ?'

'Just enough for a seat with legs crossed.'⁵

'So let it be yours.'

With his miraculous power, he covered nine valleys of Kashmir by his single sitting posture.

The Nāga asked, 'How many attendants are there with the ārya ?'

'Five hundred.'

'If it is less even by one, I shall take back the land.'

The Teacher [Buddha] had predicted⁶ that this place was going to be fit for vipaśyanā.⁷ [Madhyāntika] thought : 'Brāhmaṇa-s and householders should also be made to settle here, because the donors and donees should exist together.' Thus thinking, he brought to Kashmir five hundred. Madhyāntika

5. skyl-kruñ, the posture of sitting cross-legged—J 27.

6. On this prophecy, see Watters i, 264. Przyluski 5 notes a contradiction on this point in the Vinaya of the Mūla-sarvāstivādī-s : 'Speaking to Vajrapāṇi at the spot where the monastery of the Dark Forest was to be set up, the Buddha says, "For the study of śamatha this will be the best place." And when he travels through Kashmir, the Buddha says with reference to the place where Madhyāntika was later to subdue the nāga Hu-lu-t'u, "The most important of the monasteries for the cultivation of vipaśyanā shall be established there." Later, showing to Ānanda the future site of the Naṭa-Bhata monastery in the country of Mathurā, he makes the following prediction : "Among the habitations of those who practise the methods of śamatha and vipaśyanā, this will be the premier one." It will be seen to what extent these compilers were negligent and without scruple. After having attributed to the Buddha two prophecies destined to exalt the monasteries of the northern region, they have carelessly reproduced an ancient text that contradicts the previous assertion !'

7. lhaq-mhoñ. V n 'Contemplation in which the mind is engrossed in metaphysical thought.' cf J 474—implies an absolute inexcitability of mind and a deadening of it against any impression from without, followers⁸ from *Uśira and also many a hundred-thousand brāhmaṇa-s and householders highly devoted to the Doctrine from *Vārāṇasī. After this, there gradually assembled a large number of persons from various directions.

Even during the lifetime of Madhyāntika himself, the country [Kashmir] became ornamented with a large number of saṃgha-s living in nine big towns, many hilly villages, one palace and twelve monasteries. From there he went to the Gandhamādana⁹ mountain with his miraculous power and, accompanied by the people of Kashmir, subdued the Nāgas there with charmed fire.

[The Nāgas] promised to give him that quantity of saffron¹⁰ [field] which could be covered by the shadow of his [stretched out] robe. Then the arhat enlarged his robe with miraculous power and all the people [i.e. his followers] collected the saffron [? saplings¹¹]. In a moment [they] returned to Kashmir.

By converting Kashmir [Fol 7B] into a saffron-producing land, he told them, 'This is going to be the main source for increasing your wealth.'

Thus saying, he converted all the inhabitants of Kashmir into the followers of the Law and attained nirvāṇa.

It is said that he preached the Doctrine in Kashmir for about twenty years.

At the time of Madhyāntika's departure for Kashmir, ārya Śāṅavāsika preached the Doctrine to the 'four classes of followers' in the six cities.

After reigning for twentythree years, king Sudhanu passed combined with an absorption in the idea of Buddha or which in the end amounts to the same thing, in the idea of emptiness and nothingness. This is the aim to which the contemplating Buddhist aspires, when placing an image of Buddha as sten (caitya) before him, he looks at it immovably, until every other thought is lost and no sensual impressions from the outer world any longer reach or affect his mind.

8. cf Watters i. 267

9. ri-spos-ñud-ldan. cf Watters i. 262, for the legend of Madhyāntika bringing saffron from Gandhamādana to Kashmir.

10. gur-gum.

11. V adds 'on which the shadow fell.'

away. Then his officers and attendants, numbering two thousand¹² in all, received ordination (pravrajyā) under Śāṇavāsika. Along with numerous people including them, he spent the rainy season¹³ (varṣā-vāsa) in the crematorium of Śītavana.¹⁴ During the pravāraṇa,¹⁵ he took them to show the crematorium itself. This led them to attain the ośuci-samādhi.¹⁶ Purifying their mind of all desires, it instantly led them to arhat-hood.

After this, Upagupta,¹⁷ son of Gupta¹⁸ the incense-seller, had the realisation of the Truth immediately after being ordained (upasampadā). Within seven days, he attained the ubhayato-bhāga-vimukta arhat-hood.¹⁹

12. S 'one thousand', though both S-ed and P-ed have gāis-stoñ (two thousand). V 'about two thousand.'
13. dbyar-gnas, literally 'summer residence'. S also takes it in this sense. V tr 'varṣaka time'. For such rendering of the varṣā-vāsa, however, see Watters i. 144-5. cf also Legge 10 n ; I-Tsing (Takakusu) 85f.
14. bsil-ba'i-tshal.
15. dgag-dbye. V 'period of permission'. V n 'a kind of festival at the end of the rainy season when the monks were allowed to come out. In Vinaya also, there is a separate section on it.' cf J 94 ; I-Tsing (Takakusu) 86f.
16. mi-slug-pa'i-tiñ-ñe-'dzin. J 293 'contemplating one's self and the world as a foul putrid carcass. V n 'Here it means artificial representation to oneself of every surrounding thing and finally of the whole world in the form of a deadbody, which blackens, decays—in 9 forms in all. These representations are sometimes three-fold : initial, purifying and the final. That is why there is a reference to the corresponding representations here.'
17. ñe-sbas. In the account of Tār, Upagupta, the apostle of Mathurā, is converted by Śāṇavāsika, who is also an apostle of Mathurā. Thus, he follows here what Przyłuski calls the tradition recorded in the Aśokāvadāna, described by him as 'Eulogy and Illustriousness of the Church of Mathurā' (Przyłuski 3, 7). By contrast, according to the tradition of Kashmir, as recorded in the Vinaya of the Mūla-sarvāstī-vādī-s, Upagupta is converted by Madhyāntika, the apostle of Kashmir (ib 3). This, as Przyłuski argues, is the result of the later tendency of the monks of Kashmir to glorify their own centre. cf the prophecy of Ānanda in Vinaya-kṣudraka quoted by Bu-ston ii. 88-9.
18. S omits Gupta. But both S-ed and P-ed have sbas-pa (gupta). cf Przyłuski 4 ; Bu-ston ii. 88-9.
19. V 'salvation in both forms of arhat-hood.'

Entrusting Upagupta with the Law, he [Śāṇavāsika] himself attained nirvāṇa in *Campā.

The number of those who realised the Truth as a result of Śāṇavāsika's preaching amounted to about a lakh and the number of the arhat-s also reached about ten thousand.

According to the tradition of Kashmir, Madhyāntika also must be counted as one in the succession of teachers who were entrusted with the Law, because while living in the madhya-deśa he looked after the Law for fifteen years. At that time, the disciples of ārya Śāṇavāsika were few in number. Only after Madhyāntika's departure for Kashmir, Śāṇavāsika looked after the Law. [Fol 8A] Therefore, it is said that the successors of (those entrusted with) the Law should be counted as eight.

According to others, the Teacher had himself predicted that Madhyāntika was to convert Kashmir. So Ānanda directly instructed him to do so. However, Ānanda entrusted only Śāṇavāsika with the Law. Therefore, only seven are to be counted in this line of succession. The Tibetans follow this view.²⁰

The third chapter containing the account of the period of king Sudhanu.

20. See Supplementary Note 1 (on the patriarchs).

CHAPTER 4

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF ĀRYA UPAGUPTA

Then Upagupta crossed the *Gaṅgā and proceeded to the north. He reached Videha,¹ a country on the western side of *Tīrahuti.² There he resided in a monastery built by a householder called *Vasusāra, who was entertaining the saṃgha-s all around. He (Upagupta) spent the rainy season there, and, because of his preachings during these three months [of varṣā-vāsa], the number of those who attained arhat-hood became one thousand. After this, he went to the great mountain *Gandhāra³ and led many people to [the realisation of] truth by preaching the Doctrine.

From there he went next to the city of Mathurā on the north-western border of the madhya-deśa. During that time, at the portal of Mathurā⁴ where people used to assemble, the Malla chiefs⁵—the merchants *Naṭa and *Bhaṇṭa⁶—were talking to each other. They praised ārya Upagupta and thought how much desirable it would have been if ārya Upagupta took his residence at the monastery built by them on the *Śīra⁷ hill during the time of ārya Śāṇavāsika.

1. lus-'phags.

2. i.e. Tīrabhukti. Tār throughout refers to it as Tīrahuti.

3. S-ed Gandha, P-ed Gandhāra. S n 'it is definitely Gandhamādana.'

4. bcom-brlag.

5. gyad-kyi-gtso-bo. J 74 gyad, an equivalent of Sanskrit Malla, the name of a people. V tr gtso-bo as 'chief' and gyad as 'Malla'. Hence the expression is rendered by him as 'the Malla chiefs—the merchants Naṭa and Bhaṭa'. cf Bu-ston ii. 88, 'Naṭa and Paṭa, sons of a merchant'; Watters ii. 44.

6. P-ed Bhaṇṭa.

7. cf Watters i. 308; 'In some books the hill on which was the Naṭa-baṭa vihāra occupied by Upagupta is called Śīra or Uśīra, although we also have mention of the Uśīra hill without any reference to a cave or monastery. This Uśīra hill was at the side of the Urumuṇḍa

They saw then ārya Upagupta coming from a distance and they said, 'Ah, this one coming here from afar and looking self-controlled and brilliant must be ārya Upagupta.'

[Fol 8B] Saying this to each other, they moved forward to welcome him, bowed down before him and addressed him thus, 'Art thou ārya Upagupta ?'

'So am I known in this world', said he.

They offered him the Naṭa-bhaṭika *vihāra*⁸ on the mount *Śira fully furnished with all requirements. When he preached the Doctrine there, many ordained monks and householders were led to the realisation of the Truth.

On another occasion, as he was preaching the Doctrine to several lakhs of people, the evil Māra⁹ showered rice¹⁰ on the city.

This drew many people away from the congregation [to the city]. Others went on listening to the sermons. On the second hill and the latter name may have included the two hills and the wood or forest adjoining.' Bu-ston ii. 88 mentions the hill as Muruṇḍa ; in BA i. 23 it is called Śīrṣa-parvata.

8. gar-mkhan-dpa'-bo'i-gtsug-lag-khañ. V & S Naṭa-bhaṭika vihāra. V n 'In the Tibetan-Sanskrit Dictionary, we find the word Naṭa corresponding to the Tibetan word gar-mkhan. But the Tibetan word dpa'-bo, "knight", does not have any suitable equivalent, which should mean bhaṭa.' For other names in which this monastery was mentioned, see Watters i. 309 : 'This Upagupta monastery is apparently the Cream Village vihāra of a Vinaya treatise, one of the many Buddhist establishments mentioned as being in the Mathurā district. It may also perhaps be the Guhā-vihāra of the Lion Pillar Inscriptions. We find it called the Naṭika-saṃghārāma, and the Naṭa-baṭa (or Naṭi-baṭi) vihāra, as already stated, and the Naṭa-bhaṭikārānyāyatana of the Divyāvadāna.'
9. bdud-sdig-can. S Māra-Pāpīya. cf BA i. 23 : Upagupta subduing Māra, the sinner. The account of the conversion of Māra by Upagupta, argues Przyluski 7, was evidently designed in the Aśokāvadāna to glorify Upagupta : 'The Buddha had not certainly converted Māra, the personification of evil. He had done this in order to leave to Upagupta the glory of carrying this difficult enterprise to a successful conclusion.'
10. S fruit, but both S-ed and P-ed have 'bras (rice) and not 'bras-bu (fruit). V bread.

day, when [Māra] showered clothes, many more people went away to the city. In the same way, there was a shower of silver on the third, of gold on the fourth and of *sapta-ratna*¹¹ on the fifth day. The number of listeners was reduced to insignificance.

On the sixth¹² day, Māra himself assumed the form of a celestial dancer¹³. His wife,¹⁴ sons and daughters appeared as celestial singers and dancers and thus there entered the city thirtysix males and females in the guise of celestial actors. Distracted by the magic of the dance and sweet tunes of vocal and instrumental music [everybody left the congregation] and there was none left to listen to the Doctrine¹⁵.

Then ārya Upagupta himself went to the city. 'Ah, the foremost ones, how wonderful is your performance! I have garlands to offer you.' Thus saying he put garlands on the heads and necks of all of them.

By the miraculous power of the ārya, the bodies of the evil one and of his associates immediately turned into aged, decayed and ugly ones, wearing tattered rags [Fol 9A] with decomposed corpses on their heads and rotten dead dogs hanging from their necks. There was stink all around. He turned the whole scene into a nauseating one. The people, who were yet to be free from passion, covered their noses and turned back in anger, fear and disgust.

Then Upagupta asked, 'Oh evil one, why did you harm my followers?'

11. rin-po-che-sna-bdun.

12. S 'seventh day', but both S-ed and P-ed have ñi-ma-drug-pa (sixth day).

13. V 'celestial actor' and adds in the note, 'i.e. not a simple actor. It appears that this word should mean something more than a good actor. We will find later a reference to celestial architects and painters.'

14. V & S omit 'wife', because S-ed does not contain chuh-ma, which occurs in P-ed.

15. V tr 'And with their performances, magical arts, melodious songs and music so captivated (lit. transformed) the hearts of all, that not a single (person) was left to listen to the Doctrine.'

'Forgive us, please, oh ārya, and free us from our fetters.'

Upagupta said, 'I shall do this if you do not try to harm my followers [any more].'

'I shall do no harm even though I perish.'

Immediately, Māra's body resumed its usual form. He said, 'I caused injuries with all my power to *Gautama while he was in Bodhimaṇḍa¹⁶ (Vajrāsana). Yet he remained undisturbed in his meditation on compassion. But in spite of being the followers of *Gautama, you are violent and aggressive. You, ārya, have put us under fetters as soon as we tried the slightest joke.'

Then Upagupta, preaching the Doctrine even to the evil Māra, said, 'I had vision only of the *dharmā-kāya*¹⁷ of the Teacher, but I never saw him in his rūpa-kāya.¹⁸ You, however, have seen him, oh evil one. Therefore, show me his physical form.'

When he (Māra) assumed the physical form of the Teacher, ārya Upagupta became full of profound reverence. His hairs stood on end in ecstacy, his eyes were full of tears. He placed his folded hands on his head and said, 'I bow down to the Buddha.'

Unable to bear this, the evil Māra fell down unconscious and then vanished.

Thus was born a great reverence in all the people, who, as a result of the merit of their past virtue, [Fol 9B] assembled there from all directions. As a consequence of his preaching the Doctrine throughout the sixth night [beginning] from that of the showering of rice, eighteen lakhs of people were led to the realisation of the Truth on the seventh day.

He (Upagupta) spent the rest of his life in the Naṭa-bhaṭika

16. byān-chub-sñiñ-po. See J 374 & D 884. Yuan-chuang (Watters ii. 114-5)

'The name is derived from the fact that here the 1000 Buddhas of this kalpa go into the vajra-samādhi; as they attain bodhi at this spot, it is also called the Bodhi Arena (tao-ch'ang, i.e. Bodhimaṇḍala or Bodhimaṇḍa.)'

17. chos-kyi-sku.

18. gzugs-kyi-sku.

vihāra. There was a cave there, eighteen cubits¹⁹ in length, twelve in breadth and six in height. Each of the ordained monks who attained arhat-hood by virtue of his preaching, used to throw one wooden chip four inches long into the cave. In this way, the cave was so filled up with such wooden chips that no passage remained and, after some time, when ārya Upagupta attained the pari-nirvāṇa, his body was cremated with these.²⁰ His relics were collected together and, it is said, it was taken away by the gods.

The Teacher himself had predicted that he (Upagupta) was to be a Buddha without the lakṣaṇa-s.²¹ This meant that though without the lakṣaṇa-s and vyāñjana-s of the Buddha, he was similar to the Buddha in his compassion for the living beings. After the nirvāṇa of the Tathāgata, nobody surpassed him in compassion for the living beings.

The period during which Upagupta served the Law was mainly the period of nine years' rule over most of the regions of Aparāntaka²² by king Mahendra, son of king Sudhanu, and the

19. khru, literally the measure from the elbow to the extremity of the middle finger. But D 172 takes it roughly as a cubit. Similarly, sor literally means the finger, but D 1286 takes sor-bshi-pa as roughly equivalent to 4 inches in measure. BA i. 23 gives the measurement of the cave as 18 cubics in length and 12 cubics in width. For other measurements of the cave, see Watters i. 307: 'Connected with the monastery was the cave in which the disciples converted by Upagupta's teaching, on their attainment of arhat-ship, deposited each a slip of wood or bamboo...Its dimensions vary in different books, one authority making it 18 chou (chou : 1.5 ft.) by 12 chou wide and 7 chou high. In our pilgrim's (Yuan-chuang's) description, we should probably regard "above 20 feet high" as a mistake for "above 20 feet long", other writers giving the length as 24 or 27 feet, the height being about 9 or 10 feet.'
20. cf Watters i. 307, 'When he (Upagupta) died, all the tallies deposited by these arhat-s were taken away and used at his cremation. Yet Yuan-chuang would have us believe that he saw them still filling up the cave !'
21. a-lakṣaṇa-buddha. cf Watters i. 311; Bu-ston ii. 89. Przyluski 7 quotes the prediction as occurring in the Asokāvadāna.
22. ñi-'og-gi-rgyal-khams. See D 481 & J 187.

period of twentytwo years' rule by his (Mahendra's) son *Camaśa.

Now, there lived in eastern India an arhat named Uttara.²³ King Mahendra had great reverence for him. The people of *Bagala²⁴ built for him a monastery in the region of Kukkuṭa-pāla²⁵ and offered it to him. It became famous as Kukkuṭa-ārāma.²⁶ As a result of his many sermons to numerous people belonging to the 'four classes of followers' of Aparāntaka, [Fol 10A] a large number of them were led to the attainment of the 'four stages of perfection'.

His foremost disciple was arhat Yaśaḥ²⁷.

Shortly after king *Camaśa had ascended the throne after the death of king Mahendra, there lived in *Magadha a brāhmaṇa-woman called *Jaḥsā, who was then about one hundred and twenty years old. She had three sons, called Jaya, Sujaya and Kalyāṇa.

The first of them was a worshipper of the god Mahādeva,²⁸

23. bla-ma. cf Watters ii. 224-5.

24. P-cd Bagala, S-ed Baṅgala. S 'people of Bagala', V 'people of the whole country.'

25. bya-gag-skyoñ-ba'i-ljohs. S n 'The word-for-word translation of the Tibetan text should be Kukkuṭa-pāda. Other sources ascribe the building of the vihāra to king Aśoka.' But S-ed also has skyoñ-ba, lit. 'pāla'. Przyluski 173f Kukkuṭa-pāda. V 'a monastery equipped with birds'. cf Watters ii. 143ff, where Yuan-chuang refers to it as the Kukkuṭa-pāda or Guru-pāda Hill: 'The mountain here called by our pilgrim as Cock's Foot and Sage's Foot is also called Wolf's Traces, i.e. perhaps Koka-pāda.' Watters' note 'The Wolf's Traces Mountain was apparently part of Gṛdhra-kūṭa.'

26. bya-gag-gi-kun-dga'-ra-ba, literally 'the bird grove'. cf Watters ii. 98f: both Yuan-chuang and Fa-hien place the monastery to the south-east of Pāṭaliputra. According to Yuan-chuang it was built by Aśoka. Watters adds, 'There was an earlier Kukkuṭārāma near Pāṭaliputra, probably only huts in the park. Aśoka may have built a monastery on this ancient site. There was also another Kukkuṭārāma near Kauśāmbī in the Buddha's time.'

27. grags-pa.

28. lha-chen-po-dbañ-phyug. V & S Maheśvara.

the second of the sage Kapila²⁹ and the third of Samyak-sambuddha. They studied their respective doctrines thoroughly and used to argue among themselves every day in the same house.

Their mother once said, 'I provide you with food and clothing, leaving you nothing more to want. Why, then, do you always argue?' They replied, 'We do not argue for the sake of food etc. What we argue about are the right teacher and the right doctrine.'

Their mother said, 'If you fail to discriminate with your own intellect between the right and wrong teacher or doctrine better ask other scholars about these.'

Obeying the mother, they went about many places and made enquiries. They failed to find anybody who could convince them. At last they came to arhat Uttara and each of them placed his view elaborately before him.

Jaya and Sujaya first narrated how Mahādeva was praised for destroying Tripura and how Kapila had the terrible power of cursing. But the śramaṇa *Gautama could not curse and therefore it was obvious that his penance was fruitless. He could not overpower the *asura*³⁰ and hence his might was limited.

To this, the arhat [Fol 10B] replied,

'What does penance mean to one that allows the mind to be agitated with anger and leads it to curse others? Even the evil, immoral and violent ḍākinī-s and rākṣasa-s can curse. It is extremely foolish to try to kill those who, even without being killed, chained or beaten, are inevitably going to die. That is like a stupid person who threatens the setting sun with his stick and boasts that he has driven it away. Listen further, Oh brāhmaṇa-s : The Buddha strives for the welfare of the world. Non-violence is his Doctrine. He who has faith in him

29. ser-skya.

30. V tr 'the masses', because, as he says in the note, he reads the word as lta-min (instead of lha-min, which occurs in the text).

and follows him, always speaks of non-violence. Working ever for others' welfare, he attains enlightenment. Being non-violent, he always acts in the virtuous way. He teaches also his followers to act for the welfare [of others]. One listening to his words—be one a brāhmaṇa or śramaṇa—can never find any harm in these. Such are the maxims of universal virtue. [By contrast], the religion of Mahādeva is of one who is cruel and loves to live in the crematorium, eats the flesh, fat and marrow of the human body and by nature is violent and revels in killing. His doctrine, being the doctrine of violence, is defiled. Even to have faith in it amounts to the practice of violence. How can any sensible person have reverence for it? If mere courage is virtue, why are not the lions and tigers worshipped? Tranquillity of mind alone is real virtue.⁷

(This passage occurs in the text in the form of a verse)

Such was the first sermon [of the arhat]. Thereafter he delivered other [Fol 11A] sermons illustrating the difference between virtue and vice in five hundred ways. These two brāhmaṇa-s also realised the truth of all these and were filled with great reverence for the tri-ratna. The young brāhmaṇa Kalyāṇa, who was already devout, became all the more devoted.

Thus, agreeing among themselves, the three went back to their home and addressed their mother, 'All of us have realised the virtue of the Buddha. So each of us want to build a temple for placing the image of the Teacher. Show us, mother, the land for these.'

When the mother showed them the places, the brāhmaṇa Jaya built a temple for the image [of the Buddha] at *Vārāṇasī, the place of the Turning of the Wheel (dharma-cakra-pravartana).

The vihāra-s in which the Teacher had himself lived, being essentially supernatural phenomena, had to disappear with the withdrawal of the miracle [i.e. the Buddha's nirvāṇa]. In the eyes of mortals, however, there was then no trace of these because of destruction, devastation and other causes [lit. evils].

The brāhmaṇa Sujaya built a temple with the image [of the Buddha] in Veṇuvana³¹ in Rājagṛha.³² Kalyāṇa, the youngest brāhmaṇa, built the *Gandhola of Vajrāsana³³ with the Mahābodhi³⁴ in it. Those who built this were celestial architects appearing in human form. [At the time of making the image] the brāhmaṇa Kalyāṇa and the celestial architects shut themselves within the temple with the materials for making the Mahābodhi. Nobody was permitted to enter it for seven days. On the sixth day, the mother of the three brāhmaṇa brothers came and knocked at the door. 'It is now not more than six days and the door can be opened only tomorrow morning', [they said from inside the temple]. The mother said, 'I am going to die tonight. In the world today, I alone survive who personally have seen [Fol 11B] the Buddha. Therefore, others in the future will not be able to determine whether the image is in the likeness of the Tathāgata or not. So you must open the door.'³⁵

When she had said thus and the door was opened, the architects vanished. A close examination of the image showed overall likeness with the Teacher. However, there were discrepancies

31. 'od-ma'i-tshal.

32. rgyal-po'i-khab.

33. rdo-rje-gdan.

34. byañ-chub-cheñ-po.

35. cf Watters ii. 116 for other legends about the making of the image : 'The pilgrim (Yuan-chuang) goes on to tell the wonderful story of the image of Buddha made by Maitreya in the disguise of a Brahmin. This artist asked only for scented clay, and a lamp and to be left alone in the Temple for six months. When this time was up, except four days (not four months as in some texts), the people became curious, and opened the door to see. They found the beautiful likeness complete, except for one little piece about the right breast, but the artist had disappeared.' For Chag lo-tsa-ba's account of the legend, see Roerich SW 525ff.

in three aspects. These were : no halo radiated from it, it was not preaching the Doctrine and, except for sitting, it did not show the three other attitudes. That is why it is [generally] said that this image resembled the real Buddha. Since full seven days could not be devoted to the construction of the image, its iconographical lacuna consisted, according to some, in the toe of the right foot ; according to others, it was in the curl of the hair turning towards the right. So it appears that these two were later added to the image. But it is known that the paṇḍita*-s say that [the iconographical] lacunae consisted in the lack of hair on the body and the failure to make the robe remain without touching the body. Paṇḍita* Kṣemendra-bhadra³⁶ is of the same opinion.

36. sa-dbañ-bzañ-po. An authority frequently referred to by Tār, whose historical work forms one of the most important sources of his own history. Unfortunately, Tār nowhere gives the Indian form of his name nor mentions the title of his historical work. V & S reconstruct the original Indian name as Kṣemendra and add in the note that he was the same Kṣemendra as mentioned by Burnouf 555. In Fol 22A, Tār mentions another of his own sources as Kalpalatā. Przyłuski thinks that it must be another work by the same author and this Kalpalatā is nothing but an abbreviated form of the well-known Avadāna-kalpalatā by Kṣemendra (Bibliotheca Indica, Calcutta 1940). Therefore, referring to the other lost historical work by sa-dbañ-bzañ-po, Przyłuski 108 argues, 'The historical work of Kṣemendra mentioned by Tāranātha has not come down to us for all we know. But there cannot have been any doubt regarding the identity of its author. He is the celebrated Kashmirian writer who lived in the eleventh century.' Assuming this, it is relevant to ask : could this lost work of Kṣemendra be the same as the Nṛpāvalī, mentioned by Kalhaṇa as one of his own sources ? cf Keith 161, 'The polymath Kṣemendra had written a Nṛpāvalī which Kalhaṇa censures for want of care, but which probably was a careful summary of his sources, and, therefore, is a real loss.' Peculiarly, however, in Fol 139A, Tār speaks of the same writer as a scholar of Magadha (magadhā'i paṇḍita). Besides, it needs to be noted that the name sa-dbañ-bzañ-po also occurs in the Tg,—though evidently as that of some other author—where the Sanskrit equivalent of the name is given as Mahīndrabhadra or Bhūmīndrabhadra (mDo xciv. 1) and as (paṇḍita śri) Mahīndrabhadra (of Nepal) (mDo cxvi. 6).

On the same night, the brāhmaṇi *Jaṣā died without falling ill.

Soon afterwards, brāhmaṇa Kalyāṇa, while travelling, found a self-radiating gem called *Aśmagarbha. He thought, 'Had I found this before making the Mahābodhi, it could have been used for the eye-balls of the image. But, alas, I could not find it then.' Immediately, there spontaneously appeared holes in the places of the eye-balls of the image. When he was about to break it [i.e. the gem] into two, there spontaneously appeared another similar one. These two were grafted in the places of the eye-balls. Similarly was found another self-radiating gem called *Indranīlā. This was placed in-between the brows³⁷ of the image.

Till the time of king *Rāthika, the interior of the temple of the Mahābodhi remained illuminated with the rays of the gems during the night.

[Fol 12A] Then the three brāhmaṇa brothers arranged for the maintenance of five hundred bhikṣu-s in each of these three temples. They worshipped the saṃgha-s all around with the necessary provisions.

The fourth chapter containing the account of the period of ārya Upagupta.

37. mdsod-spu. D 1051—a circle of hair between the eyebrows in the middle of the forehead, one of the particular marks of a Buddha from which he sends forth divine rays of light.

CHAPTER 5

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF ĀRYA DHĪTIKA

Ārya Upagupta entrusted ārya *Dhītika with the Law. His account is as follows.

In Ujjayinī¹ there lived a fabulously rich brāhmaṇa. He had a son called *Dhītika who was very intelligent and straightforward. After he completed the study of the four Vedas and the eighteen branches of learning, his father, feeling happy, wanted to see him settled and get married. But he said, 'I have no desire for a home. Permit me, please, to get ordained.'

His father said, 'If you are determined to get ordained, do not do it before I die. And look after these five hundred brāhmaṇa attendants.'

Obedying his father, he lived in the house a chaste life,² teaching the five hundred brāhmaṇa-s the practice of non-violence.³

After sometime, when his father died, he gave away all the properties to the śramaṇa-s and brāhmaṇa-s. Along with his five hundred brāhmaṇa followers, he assumed the robe of the travelling mendicant and went through sixteen big cities.⁴ There he asked the most famous tīrthika-s and brāhmaṇa-s about the path of pure moral conduct, but received no satisfactory answer. At last he went to Mathurā, approached ārya Upagupta and asked him the same questions. [From him he learnt the right answers]. He received with great reverence the ordination of pravrajyā [Fol 12B] and upasampadā [under Upagupta].

1. 'phags-rgyal.

2. tshahs-spyod. See D 1021. V n 'This for the first time indicates the attempt of Buddhism to unite with those leading a mundane life from which subsequently arose the Bodhisattvas.'

3. V tr 'instructed these five hundred brāhmaṇa-s without any cruelty (or pressure on them)'.
 4. gron-khyer-chen-po-beu-drug, i.e. the ṣoḍāśa-janapada-s.

By virtue of Upagupta's seven-fold sermons, the five hundred brāhmaṇa-s attained arhat-hood only within seven days. Ārya *Dhītika established himself in the aṣṭa-vimokṣa-samādhi.⁵ He roused great reverence for the Buddha's Law among the leading brāhmaṇa-s of different places. He delivered the sermons to the 'four classes of followers' in six cities, after ārya Upagupta entrusted him with the Law. Thus spreading extensively the Law of the Buddha, he led the living beings to bliss.

Once upon a time, there lived in the country called *Thogar⁶ a king named *Mi-nar.⁷ In this country, everybody worshipped the sky-god. Besides this, they knew no distinction between virtue and vice. During their festivals, they worshipped the sky-god with great smoke by burning grains, clothes, jewels and fragrant woods. Along with his five hundred arhat followers, ārya *Dhītika once flew through the sky, appeared at the place of their worship and took his seat at the altar there. They took him as the sky-god, bowed down at his feet and worshipped him elaborately. When, however, he preached the Doctrine, about a thousand people—including their king—were led to the realisation of the Truth. Innumerable people were brought to the path of śaraṇa-gamana and śikṣā.

He spent the three months of the rainy season there. As a result, the number of bhikṣu-s greatly increased. Even the number of those who attained arhat-hood reached about a thousand. Thereafter, the route between this country and Kashmir cleared up and thus many sthavira-s of Kashmir came to this place and the Law was widely spread.

During the time of this king [Fol 13A] and his son called *I-ma-sya,⁸ about fifty big monasteries were filled with a large number of saṃgha-s.

5. rnam-par-thar-pa-brgyad-la-bsam-gtan-pa. See Mahāvvyutpatti (Calcutta 1944) Pt. iii. p. 288.

6. Tukhāristān. V & S Tukhāra. For the spread of Buddhism in Tukhāristan, see Litvinsky in Kushan Studies in USSR 57ff.

7. S n 'the name is very close to that of Menandros—see Lassen ii. 323ff'.

8. S n 'Is it reminiscent of Hermaios?' V n 'see Lassen ii. 337'

Also in *Kāmarūpa in the east, there lived a brāhmaṇa called *Siddha, who was as wealthy as a great king and had thousands of attendants. He used to worship the sun. Once, while he was worshipping the sun, ārya *Dhītika, by his miraculous power, made himself emerge as it were from the solar region and sat in front of him, radiating lustre. Taking him to be the sun-god, he [Siddha] bowed down to him and worshipped him. He [Dhītika] delivered sermons to him. When the brāhmaṇa was full of reverence, the ārya revealed his real self and preached the Doctrine over again. The brāhmaṇa realised the Truth and with great reverence built a vihāra called Mahācaitya.⁹ He also lavishly entertained the saṃgha-s all around. Thus the Law of the Buddha was widely spread in *Kāmarūpa.¹⁰

At that time, in *Mālava on the west, there was a brāhmaṇa called Adarpa,¹¹ who ruled as an uncrowned king. Every day he performed a sacrifice with the flesh and blood of a thousand slaughtered goats. He had also a thousand altars for sacrifice. All his brāhmaṇa attendants had to perform the *Aja-medha sacrifice according to their own capacities and all those who were not brāhmaṇa-s were employed to collect the materials for the sacrifice. He once wanted to perform the *Go-medha sacrifice and invited *Bhṛṅku-rākṣasa [Bhṛṅgu], [Fol 13B] belonging to the Bhṛṅgu family¹² for performing the sacrifice. He collected ten thousand white cows, invited many brāhmaṇa-s and arranged everything for the sacrifice.

When he started performing the sacrifice, ārya *Dhītika appeared at the altar. In spite of their best efforts, the sacrificial fire could not be kindled nor could the cows be slaughtered in

9. mchod-rten-chen-po. V Mahāstūpa.

10. According to Yuan-chuang, however, Kāmarūpa was almost unaware of Buddhism. See Watters ii. 186: 'they worshipped the deva-s and did not believe in Buddhism. So there had never been a Buddhist monastery in the land and whatever Buddhists there were in it performed their acts of devotion secretly.'

11. dregs-med.

12. ñan-spon-gi-rigs.

any way. It was even impossible to hurt these. Though the brāhmaṇa-s tried to recite the Vedas¹³ and mantra-s, they could utter no sound.

*Bhṛku-rākṣasa said, 'The real obstacle to the performance of the sacrifice is being caused by the influence of this śramaṇa.' Though everybody threw stones, sticks and dust at him, they saw these being turned into flowers and sandal-powder. This made them full of reverence for him. They bowed down at his feet and prayed for forgiveness.

'Oh ārya, what dost thou command?'

The ārya said, 'Listen, oh brāhmaṇa-s, what are you going to attain by this sinful and evil sacrifice? [Instead of this] offer gifts and strive after virtue. Cows¹⁴ are deities of the brāhmaṇa families. How can it be proper for one who behaves like a human being¹⁵ to kill the gods and the parents?¹⁶ The cow's flesh is always impure and the brāhmaṇa-s do not even touch it. Is it not an insult to the gods [to offer it]? Oh sages, renounce this sinful religion. What are you going to achieve by this sacrifice designed for the purpose of eating meat?¹⁷ It is debasing the mantra-s to feed oneself with the help of the Black Art.'¹⁸

In these ways, when he preached the Doctrine elaborately, they were full of remorse because of their sin.

13. rig-byed.

14. The text has bdag (self), perhaps a corruption of ba-dag (cow).

15. The text has me (fire), perhaps a corruption of mi (man). S takes the word as ma (implying the sense of the negative), which hardly gives a clear meaning in this context.

16. S tr 'As you yourselves are gods of the brāhmaṇa families and should fulfil the filial duties, why should you, as gods, have to do with the murder of your parents?' V tr 'If I (i.e. we), being a god of the brāhmaṇa-s, am obliged to perform (some) filial duties, what is the use of killing gods and parents?' Such translations hardly give a coherent meaning, though, accepting the textual readings proposed in notes 14 & 15 above, the passage becomes quite intelligible.

17. V tr 'If you are prejudiced against using meat as a food, what will you achieve (what is the justification) by this sacrificial oblation?'

18. V tr 'The mantra-s to which miraculous power is attributed are illusions of the world.'

Ashamed of their own conduct, they hung their heads low and humbly asked how to atone for the sin. As taught by the ārya, all the brāhmaṇa-s were brought to the path of śaraṇa-gamana and pañca-śikṣā.¹⁹ [Fol 14A] They built a big temple on the ruins of the ārāma of the house-holder Ghoṣila²⁰ and strove after the wonderful seven-fold merit.²¹

In this way, the Law was widely spread in that country. This happened shortly after the birth of king Aśoka. After this, he [Dhītika] gradually converted about five hundred brāhmaṇa-s into the devotees of the ratna-s. He looked after the Law of the Buddha for a long time and thus caused welfare to the living beings.

After entrusting ārya Kṛṣṇa²² with the Law, he attained nirvāṇa in Ujjayinī in the *Mālava country.

The fifth chapter containing the account of the period of ārya Dhītika.

19. N. Dutt EMB 151 : of the ten śīla-s or śikṣā-pada-s, only the first five were specially intended for the lay devotees.

20. gdañs-can. V & S Ghoṣavat. V n 'The sweet-voiced.' However, for the Ghoṣilārāma or Ghoṣitārāma, see Watters i. 369-370.

21. bsod-nams-bdun.

22. 'phags-pa-nag-po. V & S ārya Kāla. V n 'It can be Kṛṣṇa, the Chinese form of which is Mi-tsche-kia.'

CHAPTER 6

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF KING AŚOKA

At that time, king Aśoka¹ attained his youth. His account is as follows.

In *Campāraṇa² of the border-land³, there was a king called *Nemita⁴ of the solar dynasty, who, with five hundred ministers and great wealth, ruled the northern lands. He had from the first [wife] six sons, called Kalyāṇa,⁵ Rathika,⁶ Śaṅkhika⁷ Dhanika⁸, Padmaka⁹ and the sixth called Kanaka.¹⁰

1. mya-nan-med For Przyluski's view concerning the possible sources from which Tār compiles the legends of Aśoka, see Supplementary Note 2. V n 'In the Buddhist works, there is a prediction by the Buddha that 100 years after his death there will be a cakravartin named Aśoka—having the surname Peacock (maurya)—who, by building 84,000 monuments, will spread the power of Buddha. This prediction, therefore, refers to the dharma-rāja Aśoka, whom the European scholars regard as Aśoka the second. He could have lived not later than 100 (or 110 or 116) years after Buddha.'
2. Campā, the capital of Aṅga, was also called Campāraṇya—D. C. Sircar CGEIL 109. S sees in this the contraction of two names, Campā and Karṇa. V quotes S. cf Watters ii. 181f.
3. V tr 'belonging to the Tha-ru tribe' and adds in note that S translates tha-ru as border-land.
4. In the standard account, Aśoka is considered a son of Bindusāra, whom, along with Candragupta, Tār seems to relegate to another line—Fol 2A.
5. dge-ba-can. V Lakṣmaṇa. It is tempting to conjecture if Tār has in mind the name of Śusīma or Sumana. From Tār's list of Aśoka's brothers, the absence of the names of Tissa Ekavihārika and Vītaśoka appears to be particularly conspicuous—see C. D. Chatterjee in JAIH i. 117ff; Przyluski 121 and Watters ii. 94f. Vītaśoka appears in Tār as the grandson and successor of Aśoka—Fol 26A.
6. śiñ-rtā-can.
7. duñ-can.
8. nor-can.
9. padma-can.
10. P-ed gser-can, 'one possessing gold'. S-ed ser-can (D 1279—brass), reconstructed by V, & S as Anūpa.

Later on, the king united with the wife of a merchant¹¹ and she conceived. The king's mother died and on the day the mourning was over this merchant's wife gave birth to a son. [The king said] 'Let he be called Aśoka, because he is born on the day when the period of mourning came to an end.' So he was thus named.

On growing up, he became an adept in the sixty arts, eight-fold divination and the arts of writing and reading palms. At that time, [Fol 14B] in the presence of many people, the ministers enquired of the brāhmaṇa astrologers: 'Which one of the king's sons is going to be the king?'

[The astrologers answered] 'He who eats the best food, wears the best clothes and sits on the best seat.'

On being confidentially enquired by two of the foremost ministers, it was told that by best food was meant cooked rice, by best clothes were meant the coarse ones and by the best seat the ground. Since the other sons of the king lived the life of luxury while Aśoka had ordinary food and clothes, it was known that Aśoka was going to be the king.

Meanwhile, peoples of the hilly countries like Nepal and *Khasya¹² revolted. Aśoka was sent with the army to subdue them. Without difficulty Aśoka subdued the hilly races, imposed levy and annual tax on them, realised ransom from them and offered these to the king.

11. V tr 'the wife (i.e. the daughter of some) merchant'. However, see C. D. Chatterjee in JAIH i.119—according to the commentary on the Mahāvamsa, Aśoka and his co-uterine brothers Tissa and Vītaśoka were born of queen Dharmā, a princess of a Moriyan royal family, while, in the Avadāna texts, of Subhadrāṅgī, a certain brāhmaṇa lady of Campā. 'Aśoka', adds C. D. Chatterjee, 'was the heir apparent and not Susīma or Sumana, whichever might have been his real name. But in the Avadāna texts, Aśoka has been represented as the usurper! Susīma might have been the eldest son of Bindusāra; but that did not justify his claim to the throne, judging by the law of succession followed in the Moriyan royal family.'

12. 'Khasa, a Himalayan people, including the ancestors of the modern Khakkas of Kashmir'—Sircar CGEIL 83. According to the Aśokāvadāna, however, Aśoka, during his youth, subdued the country of the Khasas and Takṣaśilā (instead of Nepal)—Przyłuski 111.

The king said, 'I am highly pleased with your intelligence, might and bravery. I shall give you whatever you want.'

[Aśoka said] 'My brothers here are going to harm me. Therefore, please give me the city of *Pāṭaliputra¹³ as my own place along with the other things that I need.'

He (Nemita) granted him all these. In this city were built five hundred gardens and a thousand girls with musical instruments surrounded him the whole day and night and satisfied his lust.

*Camaśa, king of *Magadha, died at that time. Though he had twelve sons, none of them could retain the kingdom when placed on the throne. His brāhmaṇa minister called Gambhīra-Śīla¹⁴ ruled for a few years. During that time there developed enmity between him and king *Nemita. In the long-drawn battle fought on the bank of the *Gaṅgā, the six elder sons [Fol 15A] of the king took part. King *Nemita died at that time. Considering that the news of the king's death might boost up the morale of the *Magadhans, this was kept suppressed and the administration of the kingdom was carried on by two ministers. However, since on the seventh day the people of the city came to know all about this, they started disobeying the two ministers.

[The ministers thought] 'So now is the time of the prediction of the brāhmaṇa-s coming true.' Thus thinking, they invited Aśoka and installed him on the throne.¹⁵

After conquering *Magadha, on the day when each of the six elder sons of the king took possession of a city, they heard that Aśoka had been installed on the throne. On receiving this news, instead of returning towards the north of the *Gaṅgā,

13. Yuan-chuang (Watters ii. 88) : 'In the 100th year after the Buddha's nirvāṇa, king Aśoka, the great-grandson of king Bimbisāra, transferred his capital from Rājagṛha to Pāṭaliputra.'

14. ñāṅ-tshul-zab-pa.

15. According to the Dīpavaṃsa and Mahāvamsa, Aśoka, when acting as the vice-regent at Ujjayinī, came to know of Bindusāra's death and hence proceeded to Pāṭaliputra to seize the throne—Bongard-Levin & Volkova 6.

the sons of the king, along with five hundred ministers, established their own rule in the five cities like Rājagṛha etc, while the sixth of them established his rule in *Aṅga.

The king's first son followed the 'secret doctrine of the Lokāyata,¹⁶ the second worshipped Mahādeva, the third Viṣṇu,¹⁷ the fourth the secret [doctrine of the] Vedānta,¹⁸ the fifth the Digambara Kaṇaka¹⁹ and the sixth the brahmacāri brāhmaṇa *Kuśa-putra²⁰ [? Kauśika]. Each of them established his own centre.

Following the advice of the anchorite of the *Bhṛku [Bhṛgu] family, the worshipper of dākinī-s and rākṣasa-s, Aśoka accepted for his deity the mother goddesses of the crematorium including *Umā-devī. Indulging as he did in lust for several years, he came to be known as *Kāmāśoka.

Having once a clash of opinions with the elder brothers, he (Aśoka) went on fighting them for several years. [Fol 15B] At last, he killed his six brothers²¹ along with the five hundred ministers. He attacked many other cities and brought under his rule the whole territory from the Himālaya to the Vindhya.

As he grew extremely haughty and cruel, he felt no peace of mind or even an appetite without performing a violent

16. 'jig-rten-rgyañ-phan-gyi-gsañ-tshig.

17. khyab-'jug.

18. rig-byed-mtha'.

19. gcer-bu-pa-gser-can. V & S Nirgrantha Piṅgala. V n 'cf Burnouf 360. In the text gser-can, which, according to S, is a corruption of gser-skyu.'

20. kuśa'i-bu, lit. 'son of Kuśa'. V tr 'the Brahmanical teaching of the brāhmaṇa Kauśika.'

21. C. D. Chatterjee in JAIH i. 118f observes that though Aśoka's claim to the throne was quite legitimate, in the Pāli chronicles, he 'was dubbed Caṇḍāśoka...for conducting a fratricidal war, in the course of which all his step-brothers were killed.' The Avadāna texts go further and claim that the name Caṇḍāśoka 'had its origin ... in the slaughter, after torturing mercilessly, all those who, by mistake, entered the Hell of which he was the creator. Indeed...the flight of kalpanā (imagination) cannot be higher than this!' Evidently, the motive behind all these fabrications was to add a dramatic background to the later pious career of the king.

action. On each morning, he ordered for punishments like killing, beating and chaining. Soothed only by these, he could sit peacefully for his meal. Kṣemendrabhadra says, 'There are many such accounts of the aggressiveness of the king. But I am not relating all these here, because that is unnecessary.' I have myself heard many Indian legends. These also I am not recording here.

Led by the false knowledge of the brāhmaṇa-s, he decided to perform animal sacrifice. The anchorite of the *Bhṛku [Bhṛgu] family Gokaṛṇa²² in particular said, 'If you perform a sacrifice of ten thousand human beings, your empire will expand and you will also attain liberation.'

Thus advised, he got the sacrificial house built.²³ He searched everywhere for a person that could slaughter ten thousand men. For sometime, however, none could be found like this. At last he found a Caṇḍāla²⁴ of *Tirahuti and ordered him, 'I am going to send to this house all those that are to be slaughtered. Go on slaughtering anybody that enters this house till the number reaches ten thousand.' The king himself took the oath of worshipping Umā²⁵ in this form.

22. ba-lāṅ-rna-ba. cf Watters ii.89—According to other legends 'king Aśoka had burnt to death 500 ladies of his harem, and his chief minister Rādhagupta (called also Anuruddha) reminding him that such proceedings were unseemly of a king, recommended His Majesty to institute a place of punishment under a proper official. The king took the advice and caused a jail or place of punishment to be constructed, with a handsome attractive building with trees and tanks like a city.'
23. Usually referred to as Aśoka's Hell. Both Fa-hien and Yuan-chuang were shown its relics. cf Watters ii. 90: 'Fa-hien's account is not taken from the Divyāvadāna, but it agrees with that work in placing the site of the Hell near the tope erected by Aśoka over Ajātaśatru's share of Buddha's relics. Yuan-chuang also seems to have found the site near and to the north of the Relic Tope as Fa-hien describes.' cf Przyluski 127ff.
24. In the Divyāvadāna, he is called Caṇḍa-giri (in Chinese O-shan or Wicked Hill)—Watters ii. 90. Aśokāvadāna mentions him as Caṇḍa Gīrika, but considers him to have been a merchant—Przyluski 118 & 127.
25. bka'-thub-zlog-ma.

After slaughtering one or two thousand men, when this killer was going somewhere outside the city, a bhikṣu,²⁶ with the hope of changing his conduct, told him about the sin of killing animals and of many details of the [punishments given in the] hell. However, the killer totally misunderstood all these virtuous [Fol 16A] words and thought²⁷: 'I have so long been killing by chopping off the heads of men. From what the bhikṣu says, it now appears that I can as well kill them in various other ways like burning, cutting to pieces and taking off the skin [as the bhikṣu describes the scenes of the hell].'

So he continued to kill in these ways many other men and about five thousand persons were slaughtered in that sacrificial house. At that time, the king's former name was changed into *Caṇḍāla *Aśoka.

Now at that time, a disciple of arhat Yaśaḥ entered the house by mistake. He was well-versed in the scriptures, was placed in the yoga-mārga and was a novice²⁸ (śramaṇera). When the killer was about to strike him with the sword, he enquired the cause thereof. He [the killer] told him about what had happened before.

26. Watters ii. 90—the bhikṣu belonged to Ke-tu-ma monastery. According to other sources, he was from Kukkuṭārāma vihāra; Bāla-panḍita was either his name or the text he recited—Przyluski 127ff.

27. V tr 'However (these virtuous words) could not arouse even a grain of virtue in him, and he, on the contrary, thought...'

28. In the Aśokāvadāna his name is given as Samudra—Przyluski 120. cf Watters ii. 90—his name in Chinese form: Hai, meaning 'the sea'. Interestingly, Tār does not mention his name and refers to him simply as a śramaṇera, though he is supposed to have been responsible for the epoch-making event of converting Aśoka. Comments Przyluski 120-1: 'Having been in use for a long time, the figure of Samudra afterwards lost its prominence and his name fell into oblivion. Ere long it was found that this anonymity was not without its advantage. It was an edifying spectacle to see the most powerful of monarchs to have been converted by an ordinary monk. The moment the value of this contrast was realised, it was sought to be accentuated. In the account of Tāranātha as in the Ceylonese chronicles, it is no longer an ordinary bhikṣu that converts the great king; it is a novice, a little śramaṇera.'

'So, kill me after seven days. I shall not move out till then and shall stay in this sacrificial house.' When he said this, the killer agreed.

Witnessing the sacrificial place full of blood, flesh, bones, intestines, etc, he directly realised the sixteen truths²⁹ like impermanence and, before the expiry of seven days, attained arhat-hood. He also acquired the miraculous power (ṛddhi).

On the day of the expiry of these seven days, the killer thought: 'None like him had entered this house before. Therefore, I am going to kill him in a new way.' Thus thinking, he filled an enormous cauldron with *til oil, put the novice³⁰ in it and placed it on fire. In spite of the fire burning for the whole day and night, not even the slightest damage was done to his body.³¹

On receiving this news, the king was surprised [Fol 16B] and he came to the sacrificial house to see this. The killer ran towards him with the sword. The king asked him the reason for this. [The killer said] 'Oh king, it is your own vow that anybody entering this house must be killed till the number reaches ten thousand.'

The king said, 'But, then, you have yourself entered the house before me. So I must kill you first.'

While the two were thus arguing among themselves, the novice showed the miraculous feats like showering rain, causing lightning, moving in the sky, etc. Both the king and the killer were full of great reverence and bowed down at his feet and the seed of enlightenment germinated within them.

29. bden-pa'i-rnam-pa-bcu-drug. See Mahāvīyutpatti (Calcutta 1944) Pt. iii. p. 275-6. cf Yuan-chuang (Watters ii. 90), 'At that time, one of the king's concubines arrived to undergo punishment for misconduct. She was at once pounded to atoms in the presence of the bhikṣu. The latter now made the most of his respite, and by zealous application became an arhat.'

30. dge-tshul, lit, śramaṇera. It is apparently strange to refer to him thus even after his attainment of arhat-hood. In the next chapter also, Sudarśana prays for ordination after attaining arhat-hood.

31. Yuan-chuang describes the scene differently—see Watters ii. 89.

He (the novice) delivered the sermon and the king became extremely repentant for his sins and at once demolished the sacrificial house. He asked the novice how to atone for the sin.

‘Oh king, I am incapable of telling you the means of atoning for your sins. In the Kukkuṭārāma in the east, there lives an upādhyāya arhat called Yaśaḥ-dhvaja³², who will be able to tell you about the ways of atoning for your sins.’

Accordingly, the king sent the message to the arhat: ‘Oh ārya, please come to *Pāṭaliputra and relieve me of my sins. If, oh ārya, you cannot come here, I shall go to you.’

Realising that the arrival there of the king himself would have meant harm to many people, the arhat Yaśaḥ himself came to *Pāṭaliputra. There, he delivered the sermons to the king during every day, and, during every night, he delivered the sermons to the ‘four classes of followers’ at the monastery.

From the time of meeting [Fol 17A] arhat Yaśaḥ, the king was full of great reverence and started spending the day and night in pious acts. He worshipped thirty thousand bhikṣu-s every day.

When arhat Yaśaḥ was living in other places like *Magadha etc, the king once sent five hundred merchants to collect gems from the treasure island³³. Their voyage was successful and they were returning with the cargo of various gems. When they halted for rest on this side of the sea [? Indian coast], the Nāgas sent waves to carry away their merchandise. They had to return depending on other sources of livelihood. It was rumoured in *Pāṭaliputra that the merchants were going to be back within seven days. Since nobody heard about what actually had happened to them, all sorts of people including the brāhmaṇa-s and parivrājaka-s collected to see the colour and

32. In Tār’s account, from now on Yaśaḥ becomes the adviser of Aśoka. For other legends connecting Aśoka with Upagupta, see Watters ii. 91 and Przyluski 69ff.

33. nor-bu’i-gllñ. cf Przyluski 111-2.

other wonderful qualities of the gems. On the seventh day, when the king along with the people came to the garden, they saw the merchants returning only with their upper garments on and looking exhausted. Everybody was amazed by this unexpected sight and burst into laughter.

The king asked the cause of this. The merchants told their story and said, 'Oh lord, if you do not take some measure to subdue the Nāgas, nobody from now on will be willing to go to collect the gems. Oh king, please take some measure.'

The king felt highly disturbed and consulted the wise men about the possible measures. The brāhmaṇa-s and parivrājaka-s [Fol 17B] knew of none. But an *arhat*³⁴ with six abhijñāna-s thought, 'The possible measure should be suggested [in the form of the prediction] by a deity. If the arhat himself does it, the people may take him as being partial to the bhikṣu-s. Even the king will feel sceptical and the īrthika-s would slander.' With this consideration, he said, 'Oh great king, there certainly is a measure. But this will be predicted tonight by your tutelary deity.'

Early in the morning, the king heard the tutelary deity residing above³⁵ saying, 'Oh king, worship the Buddha elaborately. The Nāgas will be subdued.' And the tutelary deity residing below³⁶ said, 'Oh king, worship the saṃgha-s of the arhat-s. [The Nāgas] will be subdued.'

In the morning, the king got the people assembled together, told them about the predictions and asked, 'What should be done now?'. The ministers said, 'Please ask the arhat himself who foretold this yesterday.' He was summoned and questioned. [The arhat thought] 'Let me adopt some means of convincing them.'

He wrote on a small piece of copper-plate, 'Oh Nāgas,

34. Though in Tār, the usual adviser of Aśoka is Yaśaṃ, in his account of subduing the nāga-s another arhat—mentioned as Indra in the Avadānakalpalatā—acts as his counsellor : see Przyluski 111.

35. khyim-g'i-nam-mkha'-la-gnas-pa'i-lha, lit. 'tutelary deity in the upper sphere of the house'.

36. sa-la-gnas-pa'i-lha, lit. 'tutelary deity on the ground'.

listen to the command of king Aśoka. Return to the merchants the gems that you have taken away', etc. And he threw the copper-plate into the *Gaṅgā. On the top of a lofty pillar of stone at the broad cross-road of the city, he also placed a pot made of *aṣṭa-dhātu containing golden images of both the king and the Nāga.

On the next morning, it was found that the copper-plate was thrown back at the gate of the king's palace by the storm and rain caused by the furious Nāgas and that the king's image was bowing down before that of the Nāga.

[Fol 18A] On being questioned by the king, the arhat said, 'The accumulated merit of the Nāga is at present greater than that of the king. For increasing your own merit, please worship the Buddha and the saṃgha.'

The king, feeling inspired, started worshipping the images³⁷ and caitya-s seven times more than before. In a moment, the arhat went to the realm of the Nāgas and of the gods and invited all the arhat-s. The king also built a very big house for the festival. When the arhat rang the gandi*,³⁸ the arhat-s assembled even from Sumeru³⁹ and its surroundings. (The king) worshipped with all the requisites the saṃgha of sixty thousand arhat-s for three months. During this period, the king's image raised itself gradually day by day and in fortyfive days became as high as that of the Nāga. After this, the image of the Nāga went on stooping down every day. And on the next fortyfifth day, it was found that the image of the Nāga was bowing down at the feet of the king's image.

The people were full of great wonder : 'Ah, such then is the result of worshipping the Jewels (tri-ratna).'

37. sku-gzugs, lit. 'image'. Przyluski 109 takes this as a reference to the worship of the image of the Buddha and argues that Tār's source here 'points to the Kashmirian period at the earliest, for before the rise of the Graeco-Bactrian School of Art (of Gandhāra) artists avoided building images of the Buddha.' However, Yuan-chuang saw images of the Buddha which he believed were made during the time of Prasenajit and Udayana—Watters i. 384. cf also I-Tsing 190.

38. D 214—the gong or bell to call monks to monastic services.

39. ri-rab.

When the same copper-plate was again thrown into the *Gaṅgā, the messenger of the Nāga appeared in human guise on the next day and said, 'The gems are deposited back on the seashore. Please send the merchants to bring these.'

As the king was about to do so, the same arhat said, 'That will not be a great wonder. [Fol 18B] Better send them the message that within seven days they are to bring the gems here on their own shoulders. That will be a great wonder.'

This being done, on the seventh day when the king was surrounded by a large number of people, the Nāgas, in the guise of merchants, brought the gems and touched the king's feet. It was a grand spectacle for the people and a great festival was organised to celebrate it.

The king became an adept in the magic spell of *yakṣa-ratha*⁴⁰ and with this raised a four-division army of the yakṣa-s—with horses as big as elephants and men as tall as the tāla* trees, etc. He brought under his rule without bloodshed all the countries including those to the south of the Vindhya. And he conquered the northern Himālayas, the snowy ranges beyond Li-yul,⁴¹ the entire land of *Jambudvīpa bounded by seas on east, south and west, and also fifty small islands.

Arhat Yaśaḥ then explained to him the prediction of the Teacher Samyak-sambuddha thus : '[You are to] decorate the surface of the earth with caitya-s containing the relics of the Tathāgata.'

So he felt the need of finding the relics⁴² of the Teacher.

40. gnod-sbyin-ñin-rta'i-rigs-shags. S n 'The Mañjuśrī-mūla-tantra refers to the yakṣa-ratha-siddhi.' cf Chag lo-tṣā-ba (Roerich SW 537) : 'He propitiated the great yakṣa called Ratha.'

41. D 1213 Kamsadeśa or Khoten. In Tg Arhat-saṃghavardhana-vyākaraṇa (mDo xciv. 44) and Kamsa-deśa-vyākaraṇa (mDo xciv. 45) contain a history of Li-yul, with a descriptive enumeration of the vihāra-s and religious sects there and also an account of Kustana, the first king of Li-yul, from whose name was derived the name Khoten. For Kustana and Khoten, see Watters ii. 295ff ; I-Tsing (Takakusu) liii & 20 and Legge 16ff & 109.

42. For legends of finding the relics, see Przyluski 109ff ; Watters ii. 20f and C. D. Chatterjee in JAIH i. 124.

The relic which was received by king Ajātaśatru as his share was securely preserved, buried under the great caitya of Rājagṛha. The king and arhat Yaśaḥ, along with the people, went there to recover it. Reaching the place, they dug the ground three men deep and saw a burning iron-wheel so swiftly turning round that it was not possible to go near it.

On the advice of a local old woman [Fol 19A], they went to a hilly stream about three yojana-s to the west. When the course of its flow was diverted, the wheel stopped turning and the fire on it got extinguished. After the ground was dug further, a copper-plate was found containing the inscription : 'Here lies the relic of the Tathāgata, one big *Magadhan drona in measure. In the future, a certain poor king would dig it out.'

Seeing this, Aśoka arrogantly thought, 'So the person to discover it cannot be myself, because he is supposed to be a poor one. Therefore, he must be somebody else.' Thus he was about to return.

However, being requested by the arhat, he dug the ground again seven men deep and at last found the relic, which was originally only one big *Magadhan drona in measure but had now increased to measure six khala-s. It was preserved in the innermost of seven chests, placed one-within the other, of which the outermost one was made of iron. The chests were studded with self-radiating gems placed at their four corners. Each of these gems could illumine as far as a yojana. All these were arranged in the form of offerings [of lighted lamps]. The value of each gem was so much that the entire property throughout the whole empire of Aśoka could not equal it. Knowing this, his arrogance was removed.

He took only one big drona of the relic and kept the rest hidden as before, rediverted the hidden stream so that the iron-wheel started revolving and the fire burning as before. This was again covered up [with earth].

Employing the powerful yakṣa-s as messengers and assistants, he sent out command to the people of the different places, and, only in the course of a day and night, built the caitya-s of the eight holy places,⁴³ [Fol 19B] and the caitya-s surrounding Vajrāsana and those that were spread all over *Jambudvīpa as far as Li-yul in the north,—a total of eighty-four thousand caitya-s⁴⁴ containing the relics of the Muni. Then he sent out his command everywhere that daily worship was to be conducted in each of these caitya-s with thousands of lamps, incense and garlands. The Bodhi Tree was worshipped with scented water and *pañca-amṛta*⁴⁵ filled in ten thousand pitchers made of gold, silver and vaidurya*, and from some distance it was worshipped with ten thousand incense burners and lamps. For three months, he worshipped with all offerings at *Pāṭaliputra sixty thousand arhat-s, who had been invited and offered high seats of honour (lit. 'placed in the sky'). He worshipped the saṃgha-s, the ārya-śaikṣa-s⁴⁶ and the pṛthak-jana-s⁴⁷, who were offered seats on the ground. At the end, he offered to each monk robes worth a lakh. On the same night, the king, along with his attendants, started on the shoulders of the most powerful yakṣa-s for visiting the caitya-s and, in seven days, completed his pilgrimage of the caitya-s raised all over *Jambudvīpa in 43. i.e. 1) Lumbinī Garden, Kapilāvastu; 2) Bodhi Tree near the Nairāñjanā river, Magadha; 3) Vārāṇasī; 4) Jetavana, Śrāvastī; 5) Kānyakubja; 6) Rājagṛha; 7) Vaiśālī and 8) Kuśīnagara. See Takakusu I-Tsing 108n. There exists a work by Śrī-Harṣadeva, king of Kashmir, called Aṣṭa-mahā-sthāna-caitya-vandanā-stava—Tg, bsTod 57. Another work in Tg is attributed to Nāgārjuna called Aṣṭa-mahā-sthāna-caitya-stotra, bsTod 24-5.

44. cf Watters ii. 92 'The 84,000 topes set up by Aśoka are generally said to have been for the distribution of the Buddha's relics taken for the purpose by the king from seven of the eight topes erected by the original recipients. But they are also said to have been made for the worship of the 84,000 aphorisms of Buddhism or sections of the Law'. cf Legge 69n: 'the bones of the human body are supposed to consist of 84,000 atoms, and hence the legend of Aśoka's wish to build 84,000 topes, one over each atom of Śākyamuni's skeleton'

45. bdud-rtsi-lūa. See Roerich SW 512-13.

46. 'phags-pa-slob-pa. J 587—the venerable preceptors, more than bhikṣu-s but less than arhat-s.

47. so-so'i-skye-bo. D 1283—a layman, a man in his natural state, i.e. one not yet enlightened.

honour of the Jewels. Everywhere he increased the offerings ten-fold and offered golden ornaments to each of the caitya-s (containing the relics) of the Buddha and of the śrāvaka-s. He lavishly decorated the Bodhi Tree with all kinds of gems.

On the eighth day, the king repeatedly prayed, 'Let me, by virtue of these pious acts, attain enlightenment and become the supreme among men.' [Fol 20A] And he asked the people to join him earnestly in this prayer.

But most of the people started saying that though the king was making a great deal of labour, it was going to bear little fruit. Some others said that as there was nothing called the anuttara-bodhi (highest enlightenment), how the prayer of the king could be fulfilled ?

On hearing all these the king said, 'If this prayer of mine is going to be fulfilled, let the great earth shake and flowers shower from the sky.' Immediately after he said this, the earth shook and the sky showered flowers. As a result, faith grew in these people and they also joined the prayer.

He worshipped the bhikṣu-s for three months during the consecration of the caitya-s. When this was over, there accidentally remained behind⁴⁸ many ordinary bhikṣu-s. The king made a big offering to them in the garden and showed particular respect to an aged monk, who sat at the head of the row.⁴⁹ This aged monk was extremely foolish and was of little learning.

He could not recite even a single śloka*, while among the younger bhikṣu-s there were many piṭaka-dhara-s.

After the feast, the monks occupying lower seats asked the aged monk, 'Do you know why the king is making special offering to you ?'

The aged one said, 'I do not know it'.

They said, 'But we know this. The king will presently come to you for listening to your sermons. You will have to deliver a sermon.'

48. glo-bur-du-lhags-pa. S 'who suddenly appeared'.

49. vṛddhāsana. cf I-Tsing (Takakusu) 35ff.

This greatly hurt the feelings of the aged monk and he said, 'I received ordination sixty years back. Yet I do not know even a single śloka*. [Fol 20B] Only if I could guess this before, I would have found another monk capable of delivering the sermon and would have offered all the good food to him. *However, I have already eaten all these. Now, what is to be done ?'

Thus he felt sad. The deity of the garden thought, 'It would be highly improper if the king fails to show respect to this monk.' So he came to this monk in human guise and said, 'If the king approaches you for sermons, you should say : "Oh great king, since even this earth with its mountains is after all momentary, what is there to think about the kingdom ? Oh great king, you should meditate on this."'

Then came the king and, presenting him with a set of robes of golden colour, sat down to listen to the sermon. As the king was already full of reverence, when the aged monk repeated all these, he thought that this was the fundamental truth and felt ecstasy to think over its significance.

The deity of the garden again told the aged monk, 'Do not allow the offerings of the devotee to go waste.'⁵⁰ So he [the aged monk] took instructions from an ācārya and, concentrating intensely on it, attained arhat-hood in three months. He spent the rainy season in the Pārijāta-vana of the Tuṣita [lit. the region of the 33 gods] and returned again to the saṃgha-s and to the people of *Pāṭaliputra. The robes which he received from the king were fragrant with the scent of Pārijāta and it spread all around. On being asked by the other monks, he said all that had happened and this astonished all.

The king also eventually heard all these. [He thought] 'The attainment of arhat-hood even by an utterly foolish monk is due to the merit of the Doctrine [Fol 21A] and to my gift of the robes.' Impressed by the blessings derived by others from his gifts, he lavishly entertained again three lakhs of monks for five years⁵¹ : he offered excellent food and robes to the saṃgha-s of the arhat-s during the first part of the day, to the saṃgha-s of the venerable preceptors (ārya-śaikṣa-s) during the second part of the day and to the saṃgha-s of the prthak-jana-s during the third part of the day.

50. P-ed chud-zod (waste), S-ed chuñ (little). V & S 'Do not accept even a grain of food offered by the devotee.'

Towards the end of his life the king took the vow to donate one hundred crores of gold to the saṃgha-s of each of [the following countries, viz.] Aparāntaka, Kashmir and *Thogar.⁵² He donated in full to the saṃgha-s of Kashmir and *Thogar and also made offerings of other things equal in amount. When, however, four crores of gold and other materials remained to be donated to the saṃgha-s of Aparāntaka [to complete the promised sum of one hundred crores], the king fell seriously ill. His nephew⁵³ Vāsavadatta,⁵⁴ the treasurer of the royal gold, disobeyed the king and refused to pay the remaining gold to the saṃgha-s [of Aparāntaka].

At that time, the king had half a handful⁵⁵ of āmalaka-s before him for quenching his thirst. He offered these with great reverence to the arhat-s who at that time had come to him. All the arhat-s unanimously exclaimed, 'Oh king, the virtue of this gift is much greater than that of the donation of ninety-six crores of gold which you had made while you were ruling.'

51. pañcavārṣika. cf Przyłuski 109 & 122. For Fa-hien's detailed description, see Legge 22f.

52. Przyłuski 109 argues that this reference to Tukhāristān indicates that Tār is drawing here on much later legends, because Tukhāristān 'opened itself to Buddhism only after the Kuṣānas'. But Tār apparently believes that Buddhism was introduced into Tukhāristān much earlier—see Fol 12B, the account of Dhītika. For archaeological evidences of Buddhism in Tukhāristān, see Litvinsky in Kushan Studies in USSR 57ff.

53. tsha-bo. V & S grandson.

54. nor-lhas-byin.

55. skyu-ru-ra-sñim-pa-phyed, lit. 'half an añjali of āmalaka-s'. But the usual legend is about half an āmalaka. cf Przyłuski 65 ; Watters ii. 100.

An attendant maid was once fanning him with a cāmara,⁵⁶ the handle of which was studded with jewels. She felt sleepy by the midday heat and the cāmara fell down from her hand on the body of the king. The king thought, 'Previously even the great kings [Fol 21B] used to wash my feet. Even the lowest of the servants is insulting me now in this way.' Thus he died with anger in mind.

Because of this anger, he had to be reborn as a Nāga in a big lake of *Pāṭaliputra.

It is said that arhat Yaśaḥ thought: 'Where is the pious great king reborn?' And he came to know that he was reborn in the lake as a Nāga. The arhat went to the shore of this lake. He (the Nāga) came upon the surface of the lake and sat in front of the arhat in a very pleasant manner, as had been his old habit. When he was about to eat the birds and other animals, the arhat preached the Doctrine and said, 'Oh great king, beware!' Immediately he stopped eating and died. He was reborn among the gods in the Tuṣita.

From the time the king acquired reverence for the Law of the Buddha, started building numerous temples and monasteries all over his kingdom and spread the Law of the Buddha in all directions—from then on his former name was changed and he became famous as Dharma-Aśoka.

When he failed to donate to the bhikṣu-s of Aparāntaka more than ninety-six crores of gold, one of his wise ministers told him, 'Oh king, there is a way out. Make a gift of this entire kingdom worth a hundred crores of gold to the saṃgha.' Accordingly, the king donated the kingdom to the saṃgha. For the sake of enhancing the king's virtue, the saṃgha ruled the kingdom for only two days, after which they (the ministers) took back the kingdom in exchange of immeasurable gold and wealth offered to the saṃgha. And then [Fol 22A] Aśoka's grandson⁵⁷ Vigataśoka⁵⁸ was placed on the throne.

56. rha-yal.

57. tsha-bo.

58. mya-nan-bral.

In the history compiled by Kṣemendrabhadra, is given this biography in an orderly form. (The account is also found) in the *Śrāvaka Piṭaka-s*⁵⁹ and along with the Aśoka-avadāna, Aśoka-vinīta-avadāna, Aśokena-nāga-vinīta-avadāna, Caitya-avadāna, Utsava-avadāna, Svarṇa-dāna-avadāna. These six, along with the Kuṇḍāla-avadāna, make the total of seven. Of these, the second and the seventh are translated in Tibet. I have seen the others in their Indian originals. Certain incidents like that of the 'gift of gold' are to be found also in the Kalpa-latā.⁶⁰

The sixth chapter containing the account of the period of king Aśoka.

59. See Supplementary Note 2.

60. dpag-bsam-'khri-śiñ, evidently the Avadāna-kalpalatā (Bib. Ind., Calcutta 1940). Incidentally, in Tg (mDo xciii), the Tibetan form of the name of the author Kṣemendra is given as dge-ba'i-t-dbañ-po and not as sa-dbañ-bzañ-po—see note 36 of ch. 4.

CHAPTER 7

ACCOUNT OF THE INCIDENTS DURING THE
PERIOD OF KING AŚOKA

Before entrusting ārya Kṛṣṇa¹ with the Law, ārya *Dhītika was ill for a long time. He resided then in *Kausāmbī in the *Mālava country. He was to deliver sermons to the 'four classes of followers.' However, the monks of Vaiśālī (said), 'How can we expect sermons on the True Law from a sthavira who is himself sick?' And they refused to go to him. While violating the Ten Prohibitions², they claimed: 'Such is the Doctrine, such is the Vinaya and such is the Law of the Teacher.'

Seven hundred arhat-s³—including arhat Yaśaḥ⁴—felt annoyed and organised the Second Council for the collection of the sayings (of the Buddha) at the *Kusumpuri vihāra under the patronage of king Nandin,⁵ a *Licchavi, by birth.

1. V & S Kāla. V n 'According to the Chinese histories, Dhītika was born in Mathurā and preached in Central India, while Kāla (Chinese Mi-tsche-kiā) was born in Central India and was the head of 8,000 ascetics.'
2. For the Ten Prohibitions and the Second Council, see Supplementary Note 3.
3. On the Second Council being a council of 700 arhat-s, see Bu-ston ii. 94; Watters ii. 73ff; BA i. 24. According to the Cullavagga xii. 2.9 and Vinaya-Kṣudraka (quoted by Bu-ston ii. 94), all of them were the disciples of Ānanda.
4. On the part played by Yaśaḥ (variously mentioned as Yaśa, Yaśoda, Yaśano, Yaśaḥ—Watters ii. 74) in summoning the Second Council, see Bu-ston ii. 91ff; Watters ii. 73ff; Cullavagga xii. 1.1 (where he is mentioned as the son of Kākaṇḍaka); etc. Tār glosses over the account of the organised hostility of the Vaiśālī monks against Yaśaḥ: Cullavagga xii. 1.7—they expelled Yaśaḥ; Vindya-Kṣudraka (see Bu-ston ii. 94)—they tried to bribe his followers; etc. Hence, Yaśaḥ had to go round various places for mobilising support in favour of himself.
5. dga'-byed. See Supplementary Note 3.

[Fol 22B] Now, about those seven hundred arhat-s. At the time of the demarcation⁶ of the six cities, (even) among those who belonged only to the region of Vaiśālī there were ubhayato-bhāga-vimukta and vahuśruta arhat-s. Hence this Second Council was a representative⁷ (lit. 'collection of parts' or 'composite') one. Since a full description of it is given in the *Kṣudra-āgama*⁸ and is accordingly well-known, I am not describing it here.

That this Second Council took place at this time is stated by *Bhāḍaghāṭī⁹ and Kṣemendrabhadra and we take it to be in accordance with our view, because the Vinaya current in Tibet states that the Second Council took place one hundred and ten years after the Teacher's nirvāṇa.

According to the Vinaya of the other sects, the Second Council took place two hundred and ten or two hundred and twenty years after the Teacher's nirvāṇa. Many historical works were produced in India for bringing the two versions into agreement. Though these make ārya *Dhītika and others the contemporaries of Aśoka, (at the same time) according to these the Second Council took place after the nirvāṇa of Mahāsudarśana¹⁰ and the death of king Aśoka.

In the Kṣudra-āgama is said, 'When he [Kṛṣṇa] entrusted Mahāsudarśana with the Law, even the great elephants¹¹ [the

6. mtshams-bcad-pa. V n—it should be understood here in the sense of 'demarcation'.
7. cha-śas-kyi-bsdu-ba, lit. 'collection of parts'. According to the Cullavagga, this Council referred the matter to a committee consisting of four monks from the east and four from the west; bhikṣu Ajita was appointed the seat-regulator and Sabbakāmi (Sarvakāmin) was elected to preside over the Council. The Vinaya-kṣudraka (quoted by Bu-ston ii. 91ff) asserts that Yaśaḥ first mobilised for himself the support of arhat Sarvakāmin of Śāḍha from the city of Śoṅaka, of Dhanika from Saṃkāśya, of Kubjita from Pāṭaliputra, of Ajita from Śrughna, of Sambhūta from Mahiṣmatī and of Revata from Sahaja. cf also Watters ii. 76 on the Council being representative.
8. luñ-phran-tshegs, the Vinaya-kṣudraka-vastu (Kg Dul-va xi 2, xii, xiii) Sendai No. 6.
9. S-ed Bhataghaṭi. P-ed Bhāḍaghāṭi.
10. legs-mthoñ-chen-po.
11. glañ-po-chen-po. Rockhill LB 170n—the seven early patriarchs are patriarchs] had attained parinirvāṇa and at that time (de'i-tshe) one hundred and ten years had passed after the nirvāṇa of the Teacher.' There is some confusion about the meaning of these words.

The Indian particle yadācit*, according to the ways of analysing the compound, is used in both the senses of 'at which time' (gañ-gi-tshe) and 'at that time' (de'i-tshe).¹³ [Fol 23A] In the present context, it should be translated as 'at which time' [i.e. roughly this period].¹³

The guru paṇḍita* said, 'To speak of two hundred and twenty years is the same as to speak of one hundred and ten years, because the former counts a half year as one year.' In the metrical composition of paṇḍita* Indradatta¹⁴ [is said]: 'After the nirvāṇa of the Jina, on the fiftieth year came Upagupta and the succession of the Leadership of the Order came to its end on the hundred and tenth year. After that was born Aśoka.' We also come across the comment on this: 'This does not agree with the prediction. Further, it contradicts the main Indian sources. Therefore, though it appears quite all right and justified, it is in fact baseless.'

In Aṅga* in the east, there lived a very rich householder. In his house there was a tree that grew as the result of his virtue. It gave fruits in the form of gems. He had no son. So he worshipped the images of Mahādeva, Viṣṇu and Kṛṣṇa.¹⁵ As a result, a son was born to him, who was given the name Kṛṣṇa.

On growing up, he had the desire for a sea-voyage and reached the treasure island with five hundred merchants in a ship. His voyage was successful. Thus he made six smooth and designated in the Tibetan Vinaya as elephants, i.e. mighty ones. V ṭṛ 'the great teachers (lit. elephants)'.

 12. i.e. the former roughly refers to a period whereas the latter specifies it.

13. S n 'So imagines Tāranātha. One can easily see how far he was versed in Sanskrit. The word yadācit is, indeed, a Tibetan fabrication.' But the comment is hardly justified, for the meaning of the word suggested by Tār can as well be justified by the rules of Sanskrit grammar.

14. dbañ-pos-byin. See Fol 139A, where the title of his work is mentioned as the Buddha-purāṇa.

15. V Kāla.

successful voyages within a short time and became known everywhere as a virtuous merchant. In the meanwhile his parents died and he became a devotee of ārya *Dhītika. A number of merchants came to him from the far north and requested him to make another voyage with them. [Fol 23B] He said, 'I have never heard of one making seven successful voyages. So I cannot go.' But on the strong insistence of others, he had to make the voyage at last.

They reached the treasure island and were returning with the ships loaded with gems. They saw an island covered with green forest raised above the sea and thought of having some rest there. As they reached the place, the rākṣasī called Krauñcī-kumārī¹⁶—a kind of sea-demon—captured the merchants. The leader of the merchants (Kṛṣṇa) prayed to ārya *Dhītika. The deities favouring him reached this message to ārya *Dhītika. By his miraculous power, ārya *Dhītika appeared in the island. The rākṣasī-s were scared by his halo and ran away. Thus the merchants safely returned to *Jambudvīpa.

After this the merchants entertained the neighbouring saṃgha-s for three years with all their wealth. They got themselves ordained, received upasampadā under ārya *Dhītika and eventually attained arhat-hood.

Later on, at the time of ārya *Dhītika's nirvāṇa, ārya Kṛṣṇa was entrusted with the Law. Though coming from a leading merchant family, he became an ordained monk. His sermons to the 'four classes of followers' maintained the tradition of leading them to 'the four stages of perfection.'

There was then in Kashmir a monk called Vatsa¹⁷ born in a brāhmaṇa family. He was cruel, wicked and, though vastly learned, was in favour of the doctrine of the (permanent) soul (ātmaka-vāda). He went around corrupting the common monks with the wrong view. This resulted in minor controversies within the saṃgha. So in the *Puṣkariṇī-vihāra in *Maru, the saṃgha-s congregated from all around, yakṣa Kapila providing them for their maintenance. [Fol 24A] The expiatory rite was performed there. He (Kṛṣṇa) repeatedly preached the doctrine of impermanence (lit. denial of soul, anātma-vāda) to all the saṃgha-s. When three months were almost over, he purified the minds of those monks who were previously influenced by the doctrine of the soul as preached by sthavira Vatsa and led everybody to the realisation of truth. At last even sthavira Vatsa himself was brought to the right view.

16. khruñ-khruñ-gshon-nu-ma.

17. gnas-pa, lit. sthira. S reconstructs the name as Vatsa, which is adopted here, because the view under discussion appears to be that of the Vātsīputriyas. See Stcherbatsky BL i. 32; N. Dutt AMB 17n; Vallee-Poussin in ERE iv. 184 & n. V n 'We do not know if this Vatsa should be considered as the same person as Vatsīputra, from whom originated the well-known school of the Vātsīputriyas, one of the earliest to be separated from the Sthaviras.' Incidentally, the Tibetan form of Vatsa as forming part of the Vātsīputriyas is gnas-ma.

At that time, in the island of *Siṅgala [Siṃhala] there lived the king Āsana-Siṃha-Koṣa.¹⁸ As he was holding his court, a merchant from *Jambudvīpa presented him a wooden image of the Teacher. He asked, 'What is this ?' [The merchant] described to him the greatness [of the leaders] from the Teacher to ārya Kṛṣṇa. The king felt eager to see ārya Kṛṣṇa and to listen to the true Doctrine. He sent a messenger. The messenger reached the ārya and the ārya, along with his five hundred followers, flew through the sky by his miraculous power. Clinging to his robe, the messenger also reached the border of *Siṃhala. The messenger was sent (to the king) and the king, along with others, came to welcome them. They proceeded towards the capital, showing on their way various miracles like radiating multi-coloured rays. He (Kṛṣṇa) preached the Doctrine for three months in that island, filled it with monasteries and saṃgha-s and led many people to the 'four stages of perfection.'

Though the island had been blessed before by the Teacher's feet, after the Teacher's nirvāṇa the Law there gradually faded away. [Fol 24B] But ārya Kṛṣṇa spread it extensively again.

18. This reconstruction is after V & S. The text has khri-Idan-sei-ge-mdsod-pa. However, assuming khri-Idan not forming part of the name itself, the passage may be translated as, 'The throne of the Siṃhala island was at that time occupied by Siṃha-koṣa.'

At last, he (Kṛṣṇa) entrusted ārya Sudarśana with the Law, who was a kṣatriya by birth and who attained nirvāṇa in *Kuśavana in the north.

Now, about ārya Sudarśana.

There lived a very prosperous person called Darśana,¹⁹ born in the Pāṇḍu²⁰ family of the kṣatriya-s in Bharukaccha in the west. His son was named Sudarśana. When he grew up, he had in fifty gardens fifty charming damsels, each of them with five female attendants and five female musicians. Everyday, he used to have flowers worth five thousand golden paṇa-s, not to speak of his other riches. In fact, he was as wealthy as the gods.

While proceeding to the garden accompanied by his attendants, he once saw an arhat called *Śukāyana, who was going towards the city along with his large body of followers. Filled with great reverence, he (Sudarśana) bowed down at his feet and sat nearby. When the arhat (Śukāyana) preached the Doctrine, he attained arhat-hood while sitting on the same place.

He prayed for ordination. The arhat said that one living in the house was unfit for ordination. Hence, there was no scope for it. (And the arhat Śukāyana added), 'However, you may ask your father.'

So he prayed to his father (for the permission of) getting ordained. This made the father furious, who was about to bind him with iron chains. At that moment, he raised himself up in the sky and showed miracles like radiating lustre, etc. His father was full of reverence and said, 'Oh son, since you are possessed of such excellences, please get yourself ordained and have mercy for me also.' [Fol 25A] Then he received the ordination and, as the result of his preaching the Doctrine to the father, the father also realised the Truth.

After this, he accepted ārya Kṛṣṇa as the ācārya and stayed with him for a long time. After the nirvāṇa of ārya Kṛṣṇa, the great Sudarśana maintained discipline among the 'four classes of followers.'²¹

19. mthoh-ba.

20. skya-seh.

There lived then in the region of *Sindhu in the west a powerful yakṣiṇī called *Hiṅgalācī, who wielded great magical power. She caused terrible epidemics in different countries. When the people tried to escape, she assumed a dreadful form and blocked their roads. The people offered her everyday a sacrifice consisting of food drawn by a cart of six oxen, and also a man and a woman and a good horse.

Then ārya Sudarśana realised that it was time to subdue her. So he received his alms of cooked food (piṇḍa) from a village of *Sindhu and started eating it at her place. The yakṣiṇī took him as a monk who had lost his way. When the slop-water fell on the ground, she became furious and showered stones and weapons at him. But as the arhat remained absorbed in meditation on compassion, these turned into a shower of flowers. By the will-power of the ārya, there broke out fire all around. As the yakṣiṇī herself began to be burnt by it, she got scared and took refuge to the ārya. He preached the Doctrine to her and led her to śikṣā. [Since then] no sacrifice of flesh and blood is offered to her till now.

[Fol 25B] Realising that after him there would be none to do it, he subdued about five hundred Nāgas and Yakṣas, who had no respect for the Law. The ārya next toured the southern countries extensively, filled these with monasteries and saṃgha-s and established the Law of the Buddha in many small islands. He spread the Doctrine also in Mahā-cīna²² and other places, though in a limited form.

Thus causing bliss to innumerable people, he attained nirvāṇa 'without any corporeal residue'.²³

21. V n 'According to the Chinese historians, the seventh patriarch is called Buddhanandī and he was a native of northern India. Kṛṣṇa (or Kāla) met him in a market and reminded him of the Buddha's prophecy to Ānanda that 300 years after his nirvāṇa, Buddhanandī will spread the Doctrine in the north.'

22. rgya-yu'-chen-po. See J 106.

23. phuñ-po-lhag-ma-med-pa'i-dbyiṅs, N. Dutt AMB 79 nirupādhi-śeṣa-nirvāṇa-dhātu.

The childhood of king Aśoka synchronised with the latter part of the life of ārya *Dhītika. The Law was looked after by ārya Kṛṣṇa when Aśoka was following his career of sin and by ārya Sudarśana when he (Aśoka) became dharma-rāja.²⁴

After the nirvāṇa of the great Sudarśana, the king (Aśoka) also passed away.

From ārya Ānanda to Sudarśana, there exist avadāna-s about each (of the patriarchs). I have given here their gist based on the selections from these by Kṣemendrabhadra.

These successors maintained the Law fully and their contributions are in a manner comparable to those of the Buddha himself. Many arhat-s appeared after them, yet the contribution of none of them could match that of the Teacher himself and that of these patriarchs.

The seventh chapter containing the account of the incidents of the period of king Aśoka.

24. chos-kyi-rgyal-po.

CHAPTER 8

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF KING VIGATAŚOKA

King Aśoka had eleven sons, among whom the best was *Kuṇāla. He was given the name *Kuṇāla by a sage, because he had eyes like those of the *Kuṇāla birds of the Himālaya. When he became well-versed in all arts, [Fol 26A] a queen of Aśoka called Tiṣyarakṣitā¹ became erotically attached to him and tried to seduce him.² Being very chaste, he did not respond. Tiṣyarakṣitā was extremely angry.

Aśoka was once sick with violent vomiting and purgations. Tiṣyarakṣitā came to know that a common man of the hilly region was similarly sick. She got him killed and his abdomen opened. It was found that within his stomach there was a hideous looking insect with many limbs. She understood that its movement up and down was causing the vomiting and purgation. It could not be killed by any medicine other than white garlic. So Tiṣyarakṣitā gave the king the medicine of white garlic. The kṣatriya-s did not take garlic. But the king took it on medical consideration and was cured.

When the king wanted to grant her whatever she desired, she said, 'Not now ; I shall ask for it some other time.'

Prince *Kuṇāla was once sent with the army to suppress the revolt of king Kuñjarakaṛṇa³ in the far north-western country called *Aśmaparānta.⁴ When he subdued the king,

1. skar-rgyal-bsruḥs-ma.

2. For legends of Tiṣyarakṣitā, see Supplementary Note 4.

3. glah-po'i-rna-ba, lit. the ear of an elephant or of a cow. V & S Gokarṇa. In the Kuṇāla-avadāna (Bongard-Levin & Volkova verse 85 f) and Avadāna-kalpalatā, the name occurs as Kuñjarakaṛṇa.

4. By Aśmaparānta, Tār refers to Takṣaśilā—see, e.g. Fol 32A, though the usual Tibetan form of Takṣaśilā is rdo-jog. In Chinese sources, it is variously mentioned as 'cut off head' (śilā understood as śiras), 'severed rock', 'chiselled rock', 'the rock of the Takkas' etc—Watters i. 241 ; Legge 32.

Tiṣyarakṣitā said to Aśoka, 'Lord, it is now the time to fulfil your promise. Give me the power to rule for seven days.'

This was granted. She wrote a letter ordering to pluck off the eyes of *Kuṇāla, stole the king's seal, put it on the letter and sent it with a messenger to *Aśmaparānta. In spite of reading the letter, the king of that country hesitated to pluck off *Kuṇāla's eyes. *Kuṇāla himself read the letter and taking it as the king's order was about to offer his own eyes, when (the king of Aśmaparānta) said, 'Pluck off only one of your eyes, and hand it over to me.' [Fol 26B] He did so.⁵

An arhat had already foretold all these to him and preached to him many aspects of the Doctrine, like that of impermanence, etc. As he remembered the significance of all these while handing over one of his eyes, he attained the srotāpatti stage. He then left all his attendants and wandered about in different places with a vīṇā in his hands.

At last he reached the elephant-stable of (the king of) *Pāṭaliputra. A wise elephant recognised and saluted him.⁶ But the men there could not recognise him. In the early morning, the elephant-keepers told him, 'Play the vīṇā.' When he played the vīṇā and gave out the gamaka*, the king listened to it from his gorgeous palace and the sound reminded him of his son. In the morning, he made enquiries and found his son.

After he came to know the reason for all these, he became furious and ordered: 'Put Tiṣyarakṣitā in a house made of lacquer and set fire to it.' But *Kuṇāla dissuaded him from doing this.⁷

5. Yuan-chuang reports (Watters i. 245-6): 'On the north side of the south hill to the south-east of the capital (Takṣaśīlā) was a tope about 100 feet high erected by king Aśoka on the spot where his son prince Kuṇāla had his eyes torn out by the guile of his step-mother; the blind came here to pray, and many had their prayers answered by restoration of sight.'

6. Kṣemendra narrates this legend of the elephant recognising Kuṇāla, though it does not occur in the Divyāvadāna—Bongard-Levin & Volkova 4.

7. 'According to the Divyāvadāna, Aśoka severely punished queen Tiṣyarakṣitā and the people of Takṣaśīlā ... In Kṣemendra's poem,

'If I have the same compassion for Tiṣyarakṣitā that I have for my own son and if I am free from all anger, let me get back my eye as before.' —The moment he prayed like this he received back the eye⁸ more beautiful than the older one.

He next took up ordination and attained arhat-hood. That is why, though it was his turn to be the king, his son Vigataśoka⁹ was placed on the throne.

Now, there lived a brāhmaṇa called *Rāghava¹⁰ in *Oḍḍiśa. He was wealthy and became a follower of the Three Jewels. In his dream, he received the following inspiration from the deity : 'In the next morning, a monk will come to beg at your house. He is powerful and is possessed of miraculous power. So he will be able to make the neighbouring ārya-s assemble. Pray to him.'

[Fol 27A] In the morning, arhat Poṣada¹¹ came to his house. When he (Rāghava) prayed to him, he got about eighty thousand arhat-s assemble there and they were entertained for three years. The deities favouring the Law showered gems¹² on his house. During the rest of his life he used to satisfy one lakh of beggars¹³ every day.

The eighth chapter containing the account of the period of king Vigataśoka.

the king, full of kindness, forgives the guilty ... According to one of the versions, Aśoka executed Tiṣyarakṣitā' (ib.). cf also Watters ii. 295.

8. Though, according to the Divyāvadāna and Kṣemendra's poem, Kuṇāla received back his eye-sight by virtue of his truthfulness (satyādhi-ṣṭhāna), according to other sources (see Beat BRWW 139-41), he was actually cured by arhat Ghoṣa. Watters i. 246 : 'Ghoṣa, the name of the arhat who restored eye-sight to Kuṇāla, was also the name of a physician of this district (Takṣaśīlā), who was celebrated as an occultist.'
9. V n 'According to Lassen ii.271, the son of Kuṇāla is named Saṃpati. The account given in the Chinese history of Aśoka agrees with this.' cf Bongard-Levin & Volkova 6.
10. cf Bu-ston ii.116.
11. bsos-byin.
12. S 'flowers.' But the text has rin-po-ce (ratna).
13. V & S bhikṣu. But the text has ston-ba-po, i.e. beggars (D 1301) not in the sense of the monks, for which the usual Tibetan is dge-ston.

CHAPTER 9

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF KĀŚYAPA, THE SECOND

Now,¹ arhat Kāśyapa,² born in *Gandhāra in the north, was working for the welfare of the living beings with 'the three-fold deeds of the Law.'³ At that time king Vīrasena,⁴ son of king Vigataśoka, obtained inexhaustible treasure without causing the least harm to the living beings by propitiating the goddess Śrī,⁵ the consort of Kuvera.⁶ He entertained for three years the monks all around and worshipped all the caitya-s in the world with a hundred items of offerings for each.

In Mathurā a brāhmaṇa called Yaśasvi,⁷ who was highly devoted to the Law, built a monastery called Śārāvati⁸ and an arhat named Ślaṇavāsa⁹ preached the Doctrine there to a large number of monks assembled from the four directions. He entertained about a hundred thousand monks.

In *Maruda¹⁰ there lived the son of a merchant called Mahādeva.¹¹ He committed the three deadly sins¹² namely

1. de'i-rjes-su, lit. 'after that'.
2. 'od-sruñs.
3. bstan-pa'i-bya-ba-rnam-pa-gsum. V n 'teaching, debating and composing.'
4. dpa'-bo'i-sde. S-ed dbañ-po'i-sde, hence S translates the name in the note as Indrasena, though retaining the form Vīrasena in the text. In the Table of Contents, S-ed also gives the form dpa'-bo'i-sde, lit. vira-sena, which occurs in both the places in P-ed. cf Bu-ston ii. 118.
5. lha-mo-dpal. S Lakṣmī.
6. rnam-thos-sras. S Vaiśravaṇa.
7. grags-ldan. V & S Yaśika. Obermiller (Bu-ston ii. 116) Yaśasvin.
8. 'dam-bu-can.
9. yul-bslan-pa. S Ślaṇavāsa.
10. V n 'According to Palladius, Maruda. S thinks that the name of this kingdom might have originated from the name of Maruṇḍa king.'
11. On Mahādeva, his alleged sins and the five principles preached by him as related in the Abhidharma treatises, see Supplementary Note 5.
12. mi-shams-med-gsum, See J 455; D 1039; Mahāvīyūtpatti Part iii, p. 312.

killing his father, killing his mother and killing an arhat. Depressed in mind, he left for Kashmir where, carefully concealing his misdeeds, he became a monk. As he had a keen intellect, [Fol 27B] he acquired mastery of the three Piṭaka-s, felt remorse for his sins and strove by himself after meditation in a monastery. Being blessed by the power of Māra, he was taken by all for an arhat and thus his prestige grew more and more. He went to the Śārāvati monastery¹³ with a large number of his monk-followers. The monks there used to recite by turn the Prātimokṣa-sūtra.¹⁴ When it was Mahādeva's turn to recite, at the end of the recital he added :

'All the gods are deceived by ignorance. The path is made of mere verbal tradition. Those with doubt are being converted [into the Law] by others. Such is the Law of the Buddha.'

As he recited thus, the ārya-s and older bhikṣu-s said, 'This does not form part of the sūtra.' Most of the younger bhikṣu-s sided with Mahādeva. Thus there arose a quarrel.

On many other occasions also, he similarly distorted the meaning of the sūtra-s. After his death, another monk called Bhadra,¹⁵ who is considered to have been a veritable incarnation of the evil Māra, raised many doubts by way of challenging the sayings [of the Buddha]. He preached the five principles,¹⁶ namely of 1) rejoinder,¹⁷ 2) ignorance,¹⁸ 3) doubt,¹⁹ 4) critical

13. V n 'Palladius mentions Pāṭaliputra instead of Śārāvati as the place of this incident.' cf Watters i. 269ff; Bu-ston ii.109.

14. so-sor-thar-pa'i-mdo (Sendai No. 2)

15. bzah-po. cf Bu-ston ii.96, where Mahādeva is not mentioned in connection with the controversies leading to the Third Council (under Kaniṣka). Instead of that, Bu-ston quotes the Tarkajvālā of Bhāvaviveka: 'Māra, the Evil One, having assumed the form of a monk named Bhadra, showed many miraculous apparitions, sowed disunion amongst the clergy and brought confusion into the Teaching.'

16. See Supplementary Note 5.

17. gshan-la-lan-gdab-pa. Roerich (BA i. 28) translates 'advice to others.'

18. ma-śes-pa.

19. yii-gñis. V double-mindedness. Roerich (BA i. 29) doubt (vimati).

examination²⁰ and 5) fortifying one's own thesis.²¹ [He said] that these formed the Law of the Teacher.

Thus there arose many differences of opinion concerning the understanding of the sayings of the Teacher. Irregularities and conflicts resulted from the various doubts and uncertainties.²² As the preachers of the various sūtra-s preached these in different languages of the different regions, the sayings were gradually corrupted, the letters becoming shorter or longer due to the influence of the different dialects and modes of writing.²³

The arhat-s and other scholars [Fol 28A] tried to resolve these conflicts. However, because of the influence of Māra on the common monks, the controversies could not be resolved.

Only after the death of Mahādeva and Bhadra, the monks realised their real character.

After the nirvāṇa of arhat Kāśyapa, the second, ārya Mahāloṃa²⁴ and ārya Nandin²⁵ worked for the Law in Mathurā.

The ninth chapter containing the account of the period of Kāśyapa, the second.

20. yoṅs-su-brtag-pa. V full conviction. Roerich (BA i. 29) careful investigation (parikalpa).

21. bdag-ñid-gso-bar-byed-pa. Roerich (BA i. 29) self-maintenance.

22. S tr 'Conflict became manifold from the doubts and misunderstandings.'

23. cf Bu-ston ii. 96-7. See Supplementary Note 6.

24. spu-chen-po.

25. dga'-ba-can.

CHAPTER 10

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF ĀRYA MAHĀLOMA
AND OTHERS

King Vīrasena died shortly after ārya Mahāloma and ārya Nandin started to look after the Law. His son Nanda¹ ascended the throne and ruled the kingdom for twenty-nine years. He brought the piśāca *Pi-lu-pa² under control and, as a result, whenever he stretched his palms to the sky, these were filled with gems.

There lived then a brāhmaṇa called Vijñā³ in Sūvarṇa-droṇa.⁴ He got the monks of the four directions to assemble and entertained them for seven years. After that, the king of *Kāśī-vārāṇasī worshipped the monks and maintained them for many years.

Now, a vastly learned monk called Nāga repeatedly praised the five principles [of Bhadra] and intensified the disputes among the saṃgha-s. This led to the split of the saṃgha-s into four sects. So ārya Dharmasreṣṭhī,⁵ after attaining arhat-hood,

1. dga'-bo.

2. V Pīlu. Tg (rG xliii.152) contains a work called Piśāca-pilupāla-sādhanā attributed to Prajñāpāla or Prajñāpālita.

3. m khas-pa. V Kuśāla. But see Obermiller—Bu-ston ii. 109.

4. gser-bre. cf Bu-ston ii. 109. V n 'This kingdom is mentioned in the Vinaya Vol ge 144. It lies on the path traversed by the Buddha from Sa-la'i-sto-bas to Sāketana (gnas-bcas). This kingdom was thus called, because the Brahmīns measured gold which Śākyamuni, in his previous birth—when he was still a Bodhisattva—distributed in weight of units of droṇa (bre).'

5. chos-kyi-tshoñ-dpon. V & S Dharmasreṣṭha. But tshoñ-dpon means 'the leading merchant.' The Vinaya-stotra (mDo xc.9, commented upon by Vinātadeva—mDo lxxviii.5 lit. repro. xc.10) attributed to him in Tg mentions his name as ācārya bhadanta Dharmasreṣṭhin, (Index Mongolian giving the equivalent of the name as Dharmasārthavāha).

left the disputing groups of saṃgha-s and went towards the north accompanied by the peace-loving monks.

The brāhmaṇa *Pāṇini*⁶ was a friend of king Nanda. He was born in the *Bhīruka-vana in the west. He asked the palmist whether he was going to be an expert in grammar. The prediction was in the negative. [Fol 28B] With a sharp knife, he changed the lines of his own palm, studied grammar under all the grammarians of the world, worked hard and acquired great proficiency. Yet he remained dissatisfied.

By intense propitiation, he received the vision of the tutelary deity. The deity appeared before him and uttered *a, *i, *u, and he acquired knowledge of all words in the three worlds.

The 'outsiders'⁷ (vāhya-s or tīrthika-s) consider him as the īśvara. But the 'outsiders' have no basis for this. The 'insiders'⁸ consider him as Avalokiteśvara. This is based on the prophecy of the *Mañjuśrī-mūla-tantra*⁹: "*Pāṇini, the son of a brāhmaṇa, will certainly attain the śrāvaka-bodhi. I have predicted that he would be the great lokeśvara (Avalokiteśvara) by his own words (lit. charms)'.

He composed a grammatical work called Paṇi-vyākaraṇa*, containing a thousand śloka*-s and a commentary on it containing another thousand śloka*-s. Thus, he composed two thousand śloka*-s¹⁰ in all. These are supposed to be the basis of all grammatical works.

6. The usual form in which Tār mentions the name is Paṇi.

7. phyi pa, i.e. the non-Buddhist.

8. nañ-pa, i.e. the Buddhist.

9. Obermiller (Bu-ston ii. 167) translates the passage—

Pāṇini, the brāhmaṇa's son,

Has been prophesied by me

To attain the enlightenment of the śrāvaka-s

And he shall likewise secure the charm

For propitiating the High Lord of the Universe.

Interestingly, Pāṇini's grammar, as preserved in Tg (mDo cxxxv.1) is mentioned as being revealed by ārya Avalokiteśvara to Pāṇini.

10. The colophon of the Pāṇini-vyākaraṇa-sūtra, as preserved in Tg (mDo cxxxv.1) says that it contains 2000 śloka-s.

There existed no written treatise on grammar before him, nor was there any system (of grammar). It is said that older grammarians used to learn a lot of grammar only by way of collecting stray rules from different fragmentary works.¹¹ But in Tibet, the Indra-vyākaraṇa* is believed to be older¹² than this. If it is really older, it must have been a celestial composition. However, it is certain that in India (ārya-deśa) it could not have been an earlier work. This will be explained later.

The *Candra-vyākaraṇa*¹³ translated in Tibet is in agreement with that of Paṇi*. The *Kalāpa-vyākaraṇa*¹⁴ agrees with the [grammatical] system of Indra*. So say the paṇḍita*-s.¹⁵ That is why, it is said that persons with a thorough mastery of all the implications of the Paṇi-vyākaraṇa* are very rare, these implications being extremely extensive.¹⁶ [Fol 29A]

The tenth chapter containing the account of the period of ārya Mahāloka and others.

11. V & S add : 'and they were regarded as highly learned.' This is perhaps because of the word grags-so in the text, taken in the present translation as : 'It is said.'
12. cf Bu-ston ii. 166f on the Indra-vyākaraṇa being earlier than that of Pāṇini.
13. Tg (mDo cxvi. 1) Candra-vyākaraṇa-sūtra-nāma by mahācārya Candragomipāda.
14. see Fol 39B
15. V tr 'ou: paṇḍita.'
16. For Bu-ston's view of the history of the grammatical literature, see Bu-ston ii. 166f. V quotes this in his note.

CHAPTER 11

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF KING MAHĀPADMA.

There was a king named Agnidatta¹ in Vanāyu² on the northern frontier. He entertained for over thirty years about three thousand ārya-s, inclusive of arhat Dharmasreṣṭhī.

When ārya Mahātyāga³ was looking after the Law in the madhya-deśa, Mahāpadma,⁴ son of king Nanda, entertained all the saṃgha-s in Kusumapura.⁵ A bhikṣu called Sthiramati,⁶ who was a follower of sthavira Nāga,⁷ provoked at that time wider controversies by propagating the five principles (of Bhadra) over again. Thus the four sects began gradually to divide into eighteen.

King Mahāpadma had two friends, the brāhmaṇa Bhadra and the brāhmaṇa Vararuci⁸. Both of them entertained the saṃgha-s extensively.

The brāhmaṇa Bhadra could visit any kingdom by his magic power and acquire all the wealth of the non-human beings

1. me-byin. V n quoted by S 'In the Vinaya-ksudraka there is a legend about a king called Agnidatta, who was born out of fire after the death of his mother. According to the Tibetan Vinaya, he was a contemporary of the Buddha. He reigned in Parāntaka and he was afraid that his possible disrespect for Gautama was to cause discontent among the people and officers. Buddha passes through his place from Mathurā via Oṭala for going to Pañcāla.' cf the prophecy quoted by Bu-ṣton ii. 110 : 'In the border woodland, in the royal palace called The Peaceful, the king named Agnidatta is to worship the relics and the disciples of the Buddha. In that country, more than 3,000 arhat-s are to arise.'
2. nags-kyi-sa, lit. vana-bhūmi.
3. gtoñ-ba-chen-po.
4. padma-chen-po.
5. groñ-khyer-me-tog.
6. yid-brtan-pa—not the famous author and disciple of Vasubandhu, whom Tār discusses in Fol 65A-B.
7. gnas-brtan-klu.
8. mchog-sred. See Supplementary Note 7.

(? yakṣa-s, nāga-s etc). With this he daily entertained with all requisites about eighteen hundred brāhmaṇa-s, two thousand monks and other wandering mendicants and beggars—ten thousand in all.

Vararuci had a pair of charmed sandals made of leaves. Wearing these, he used to acquire precious things from the realm of the gods and the Nāgas and with these he satisfied the needy persons.

But there once developed hostility between him and the king. The king was apprehensive of being harmed by his black magic. So he sent an agent to kill him. [Fol 29B] Wearing his pair of sandals, he escaped to Ujjayinī.⁹ At last a woman employed by the king seduced him and robbed him of his pair of sandals. He thus became unable to escape and was murdered by the killer. The king then built twentyfour monasteries to atone for the sin of killing a brāhmaṇa. By providing these with all the necessaries, he made these the prosperous centres of the Doctrine.

According to some, the Third Council¹⁰ took place during this time. Obviously, however, this cannot be fully true.

It is said that this Vararuci prepared¹¹ a number of copies of the *Vibhāṣā*¹² and distributed these among the preachers of

9. 'phags-rgyal.

10. Tār gives his account of the Third Council in Fol 31A f

11. bris, lit. 'wrote'. V 'wrote (i.e. did not compose but copied or ordered to be copied).'

12. bye-brag-tu-bśad-pa. V n 'Under the title Vibhāṣā, there are two works in Chinese translation, the first comprising 14 and the second 200 chapters. Both of these are ascribed to Kātyāyana, who is said to have lived during the time of the Buddha and to have collected together or explained the words of the Buddha in answer to the questions of Śāriputra, the 500 arhat-s and others. The first of these works is very unusual, but the second is nothing more than a detailed commentary on the Jñānaprasthāna—the first of the seven Abhidharma-s of which the Vibhāṣā is in a certain sense a summary. With reference to these works we find mention in these as well as in other sources that Kātyāyana lived 300 years after the parinirvāṇa of the Buddha and that the first Vibhāṣā was composed by arhat

the Doctrine and that, though certain written works containing the sayings (of the Teacher) existed even during the lifetime of the Teacher himself, only henceforth began the practice of writing of the commentaries in the form of the śāstra-s.

But the word vibhāṣā is to be taken here in the sense of detailed exposition.¹³ Thus also were explained the precepts of the Teacher on the basis of the exact words uttered by him before. In this way was spread the significance of the sayings. Hence, from the point of view of the śāstra-s, nothing was composed as being more easily understandable than the sūtra-s.

This Vibhāṣā was composed for the welfare of the living beings of the later period. According to some, this was composed collectively by the arhat-s during the time of Upagupta. According to others, this was composed by Yaśaḥ, Sarvakāma¹⁴ and others. The Tibetans think that it was composed by five hundred arhat-s like Sarvakāma, Kubjita¹⁵ and others in the north of the Vindhya in the Nāṭa-bhaṭika vihāra. Such a view is clearly the result of mixing up the two views just mentioned. In any case, it is a collection of the sayings (of the Teacher) by the arhat-s¹⁶ [Fol 30A], which, after being orally transmitted through the succession of the sthavira-s, was later committed to writing.

According to the Vaibhāṣikas, the Seven Abhi-s¹⁷ (i.e. the Shi-to-pan-ni and the second by 500 arhat-s called to Kashmir by the Gandhāra king Kaniṣka 400 years (according to another tradition of this Vibhāṣā, 600 years) after the Buddha. Among the compilers were Pārśva and Vasumitra. It is clear that the Vaibhāṣikas, the followers of this work, wanted this work to be associated with the name of the Buddha. The Sautrāntikas, however, being opposed to the Vaibhāṣikas, had no ground to conceal the truth (i.e. these works were much posterior to the Buddha). One must have this fact before one's eyes as one follows the text of Tāranātha further.'

13. don-ni-shih-mor-bśad-pa.

14. thams-cad-'dod.

15. skur-po.

16. P-ed de-dag-gi, lit. 'of the arhat-s'. S-ed de-dag-gis, 'by the arhat-s'. The latter reading followed.

17. These are 1) Dharma-skandha of Śāriputra, 2) Prajñapti-śāstra of seven Abhidharma treatises) are but the sayings (of the Teacher). Therefore, the Vibhāṣā was the first of the commentaries on the significance (of the sayings). According to the Sautrāntikas, even the Seven Abhi-s were really composed by the śrāvaka-prthagjana-s,¹⁸ though falsely propagated as the sayings of the Teacher compiled by Śāriputra¹⁹ and others. Thus the Seven marked the beginning of the commentaries on śāstra-s.²⁰

Some of the ācārya-s say that the Seven were originally the sayings of the Teacher, though it may be that into these Maudgalyāyana, 3) Dhātu-kāya by Pūrṇa, 4) Vijñāna-kāya by Devaśarman, 5) Jñāna-prasthāna of Kātyāyana, 6) Prakarāṇa-pāda of Vasumitra and 7) Samgūti-paryāya by Mahākausthila.—see Bu-ston i. 49.

18. ñan-thos-so-so-skye-bo.

19. śā-ri-bu.

20. V n 'Here is what is stated in the first Chinese Vibhāṣā. Who composed this sūtra?—Buddha. Why?—Because it contains the most profound wisdom, the most treasured essence of the teaching; it explains all boundaries of omniscience. And, who, except Buddha, can possess such boundaries! Why has it been said that it is composed?—This sūtra was pronounced in reply to the questions of Śāriputra, 500 bhikṣu-s and magic enquirers. Why is it said that Kātyāyana composed this sūtra?—Because this ārya committed it to memory, mastered it and considerably propagated it by preaching. He took a vow for 500 Buddhas to compile the Abhidharma. What is meant by the Abhidharma of Buddha?—Buddha preached various fragmentary teachings at various places and Kātyāyana, as a result of his previous desire, arranged these in sections and articles'.
cf Bu-ston i. 49f 'The Kashmirian Vaibhāṣikas regard these seven works as belonging to the Word of the Buddha. They say that they contain sermons delivered by the teacher at various time, at different places and to diverse persons separately, the arhat-s and śrāvaka-s having subsequently collected them ... The Sautrāntikas and the other (schools) say, that the Abhidharma is included in both the Sūtras and the Vinaya, or otherwise, has been expounded at intervals, and that no mistake is made (by admitting such an order). As to the seven works, (the schools just mentioned) regard them as exegetical treatises. The contents of these works are rendered, in abridged form, by the Mahāvibhāṣā, which in its turn is condensed in the Abhidharma-kośa and other treatises.'

were later interpolated the words of the śrāvaka-piṭhagjana-s, i.e. somewhat like the collection of the sūtra-s of the different sects. The portions of these (Abhidharma-s) that contradict the three *pramāṇa-s*²¹ are to be considered as interpolations. Just as there is an Abhidharma-piṭaka of Mahāyāna, so also there could have been one of the śrāvaka-s. It should be admitted that there is coherence in the significance of the three piṭaka-s. Since there exist as separate works two other piṭaka-s of the śrāvaka-s, there is no reason to think that they had no Abhidharma.

The last view appears to be correct. So we may accept it here. The statement (to the contrary) made by the great ācārya Vasubandhu²² seems to have been influenced by his tendency to follow the Sautrāntika view.

Again, there are some who think that these (seven Abhidharma-s of the śrāvaka-s)²³ are not at all the words of the Teacher and these contain many errors. So these could have been actually composed by Śāriputra and others. Such a view is extremely foolish, because the Venerable Two (Śāriputra and Maudgalyāyana) attained nirvāṇa before the Teacher. [Fol 30B]

During the lifetime of the Teacher, commentaries on the significance of the sayings were not prepared at all. It is, therefore, too much to imagine that commentaries distorting the significance of his sayings were already written while the Teacher himself was alive.

To keep ourselves confined to the Law of our Buddha : the difference between the sayings and the commentaries on the significance of these is as follows. The former were compiled

21. i.e. a) consistency with the teaching of the Buddha (rañ-tshig-sñā-phyi-mi-'gal-ba), b) freedom from internal contradiction (luñ-dañ-sñā-phyi-mi-'gal-ba) and c) not refuted by independent argument, i.e. logically sound (rigs-pa-dañ-sñā-phyi-mi-'gal-ba).

22. dbyig-gñen.

23. V 'it (i.e. the Viḥhāṣā)'. The literal translation of the cryptic sentence is : "there are some who think (?) not the sayings".

during his lifetime while the latter were composed after his nirvāṇa.

If even the Venerable Two and others are viewed as having distorted the significance of the sayings, it will be impossible to trace anybody as being 'duly authorised'²⁴ mentioned (in the following prediction): 'It is almost the period of the termination of the duly authorised ones.' If even the arhat-s are considered to have been without the realisation of the Truth, it will have to be admitted that none realised the Truth following the path of the śrāvaka-s. This will amount to deliberate insults to the great arhat-s produced by the spiritual power of the Buddha. Therefore, such a view could only be the result of the influence of Māra.

Shortly after the period of king Mahāpadma, Candrarakṣita²⁵ became the king of *Oḍiviśa. It is said that ārya Mañjuśrī came to his house in the guise of a monk, preached some Mahāyāna doctrines and left a book there. According to the followers of the sūtra,²⁶ it was the Prajñā-pāramitā-aṣṭa-sāhasrikā.²⁷ According to the followers of tantra, it was the Tattva-saṃgraha*.²⁸ However, the point is not of major significance, though in my opinion the former view is right. This was the first appearance of the Mahāyāna in the human world after the Teacher's nirvāṇa. [Fol 31A].

The eleventh chapter containing the account of the period of king Mahāpadma.

24, dbaṅ-gyur-skye-bo.

25. zla-ba-sruñ-ba. V & S Candragupta. But V adds in note 'literally, the protector of the moon, can also be Candrarakṣita (?), because the name of Candragupta in the Candra-vaṃśa is written as zla-ba-sbas-pa.'

26. mdo-lugs-pa. V & S Sautrāntika. The usual Tibetan form of Sautrāntika is mdo-sde-ba.

27. śes-rab-kyi-pha-rol-tu-phyin-pa-brgyad-stoñ-pa. Kg Sendai No 12.

28. Kg—Sendai No 479 Sarva-tathāgata-tattvasaṃgraha-nāma-mahāyāna sūtra.

CHAPTER 12

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF
THE THIRD COUNCIL

Now, there was a king called Siṃha¹ in Kashmir. He received ordination and was called Sudarśana.² He then attained arhat-hood and preached the Doctrine in Kashmir.

King *Kaniṣka of *Jalandhara³ heard about him, became full of respect and came towards Kashmir in the north. He listened to the Doctrine from ārya Siṃha Sudarśana, worshipped extensively all the caitya-s in the north and also lavishly entertained the saṃgha-s of the four directions.

At that time, there was a monk called Sañjaya.⁴ He was taken as an arhat. He preached the Doctrine extensively, became very influential and received enormous wealth from the brāhmaṇa-s and householders. As a result the Doctrine was discussed by the saṃgha of two lakhs of monks.⁵

The monks were then already divided into eighteen sects, but lived without much controversies.

In Kashmir there was a brāhmaṇa called *Śūdra⁶ who possessed inconceivable wealth. Bhaṭṭāraka Dharmatrāta,⁷ the

1. señ-ge.

2. legs-mthoñ. cf BA i. 24-5 'Ārya Kṛṣṇa ... entrusted the Doctrine to ārya Sudarśana ... At that time three hundred years had elapsed since the parinirvāṇa of the Blessed One. King Aśoka having died, Sudarśana was reborn in Kāśhmīra. His parents gave him the name of Siṃha. Having taken up ordination in the religious order of the Blessed One, he attained the stage of arhat-ship. About that time, a king from the country of Uttarāpatha, named Kaniṣka, visited Kāśhmīra in order to meet Siṃha.'

3. cf Bu-ston ii. 97—Kaniṣka, king of Jalandhara.

4. yañ-dag-rgyal-ba-can. V Saṃjayin. cf Bu-ston ii. 109, where Saṃjaya (along with Vijñā) mentioned as belonging to Sāketana.

5. lit. two lakhs of saṃgha-s. V accepts this meaning.

6. V & S Śūdra. cf Bu-ston ii. 116 dmañs-rigs, lit. śūdra. However, both in S-ed and P-ed, the name occurs as Sūtra in transliteration.

7. chos-skyob, whose Udānavarga (Tg mDo lxxi. 1, lit. repro. of Kg—Sendai No 326) is considered as an āgama (bka') by the Vaibhāṣikas.

Vaibhāṣika, along with his attendants, and the first Sautrāntika mahā-bhaṭṭāraka Sthavira⁸ of Kashmir, along with his five thousand attendant-monks, continued to receive his patronage and thus the Tri-piṭaka was extensively propagated.

The scriptures of the Sautrāntikas, at this period, were the series of āgama works⁹ (āgama-grantha-mālā), the Piṭakadhara-muṣṭi,¹⁰ etc.

From the east there came then an arhat called ārya Pārśva,¹¹ who had reached the limit of scriptural knowledge. [Fol 31B]. He recited some extremely rare sūtra-s like the Suvarṇamālā-avadāna,¹² and the one containing the prediction received in dream by king *Kri-Kri,¹³—works that he received from some profoundly learned sthavira-s.

Hearing (these), king *Kaniṣka got a large number of monks assembled in the Karṇikavana monastery¹⁴ of Kashmir and, according to the Kashmiris, the Third Council then took place.

8. gnas-brtan.

9. luñ-dpe'i-phreñ-ba. V & S Dṛṣṭānta-mūlāgama. Tg (mDo xciv. 41) contains a work called Dṛṣṭānta-mālyā.

10. sde-snod-'dsin-pa'i-dpe-mkhyud. V n 'We will in vain search in Chinese language—in which alone the āgama-s are preserved in their complete form—some works corresponding to these titles. But if we think that Tāranātha uses here not the exact titles of books but has in view their content, these works could be Madhyama-āgama, which always makes use of comparison, and Samyukta-āgama, which expounds the view of the creation of the universe. Otherwise, these works are already lost and the āgama-s available are much later additions.

11. rtsibs-logs. cf Bu-ston ii. 108 and BA i. 25.

12. gser-phreñ-can-gyi-rtogs-brjod. Tg mDo xc. 17.

13. This dream-prediction is found in Ārya-svapna-nirdeśa-nāma-mahā-yāna-sūtra—Kg Sendai No. 48. Bu-ston ii. 98 quotes the dream and its significance: 'Oh great monarch, in thy dream thou hast seen how 18 men were pulling at a piece of cloth. This means that the teaching of the Buddha Śākyamuni will be split into 18 sects. But the cloth—that is (the Doctrine of) Salvation—will not be torn asunder. This passage likewise proves that (the canonical texts acknowledged by the 18 sects) represent all of them the Words of the Buddha.'

14. rna-rgyan-nags or rna-rgyan-gyi-nags. BA i. 25 Karṇikavana. Bu-ston ii. 97—Kuvana monastery. V Kuṇḍalavana-vihāra.

According to others, this council took place in the *Kuvana vihāra,—a monastery of *Jalandhara. Most of the scholars accept the latter view.

According to the Tibetans, this council took place in an assembly of five hundred arhat-s, five hundred bodhisattava-s¹⁵ and five hundred common (prthagjana) paṇḍita*-s.¹⁶ Although this does not go against the Mahāyāna tradition (it needs to be noted that) at that time the great Buddhist scholars were called mahā-bhaṭṭāraka-s rather than paṇḍita*-s.¹⁷ So the use of the word paṇḍita* with five hundred is not exactly correct.

A stray page containing the later portion of an Indian work on the succession of the hierarchs is translated by Kumāraśrī of 'Gos.¹⁸ In this also are mentioned four hundred bhaṭṭāraka-s like *Vasumitra and others.¹⁹ So this is proper. However, it will be wrong to identify this *Vasumitra with the

15. N. Dutt AMB 40 'The reference to the existence of a class of monks called bodhisattva-s at the time of Kaṇiṣka's council is also significant. For we read in the Dīvyāvadāna p. 261 of the existence of a class of monks called bodhisattva-jātika, along with a hint that they were not looked upon with favour by the Hīnayānists.' Ib. 40n 'Two or three days after the first ordination according to the prātimokṣa rules, the monks pass through a special ordination according to the Brahmajāla-sūtra and become bodhisattva.'
16. Bu-ston ii. 97 'The members of the Council were 500 arhat-s with Pūrṇika at their head, 500 bodhisattva-s, Vasumitra and others, and 250 or 10,000 ordinary paṇḍita-s.'
17. Vidyabhusana HIL 271f 'Paṇḍita was a degree which was conferred by the Vikramaśīla university on its successful candidates. It is not known what the title the university of Nālandā conferred on its distinguished students. Perhaps, in that university, too, the title paṇḍita was recognised.'
18. i.e. the author of The Blue Annals, briefly referred to as 'Gos lo-tśā-ba. The passage is quoted in BA i.24-5 and it is added: 'The above passage was discovered by me in a single leaf of an Indian manuscript which contained an account of the hierarchy of the Doctrine.'
19. The passage, as quoted in BA i.25, is: 'At the vihāra of Karnikavana in Kāśmīra, 500 arhat-s headed by ārya Pārśva, 400 venerables headed by Vasumitra and 500 bodhisattva-s recited the Abhidharma.'

great Vaibhāṣika ācārya Vasumitra.²⁰ Further, since these relate to the Law of the śrāvaka-s, it is desirable to follow the śrāvaka tradition here. It is said (in the śrāvaka tradition) that five hundred arhat-s and five thousand mahā-bhaṭṭāraka-s, well-versed in the Tri-piṭaka, took part in this council. Five hundred arhat-s are mentioned here in order to glorify the Law. As a matter of fact [Fol 32A] the number of arhat-s was smaller. The number could have been five hundred including those who attained the srotāpatti and other stages.

Before Mahādeva and Bhadra, the number of those that attained the stages (of spiritual perfection) everyday was quite considerable. Because of the damage done to the Law by these two, controversies started among the monks and they became more keen on debate than on meditation. As a result, the number of those that attained spiritual perfection sharply dropped. That is why, at the time of the Third Council there were only a few arhat-s.

During the latter part of king Vīrasena's life, throughout the lives of kings Nanda and Mahāpadma and the first part of the life of king *Kaniṣka, the controversies among the monks continued. The controversies were most acute for sixtythree years.

20. Yuan-chuang also says that Vasumitra figured prominently in Kaniṣka's Council. Referring to this name, Watters i.273f comments: 'Vasumitra, here as in other places, is a name common to several illustrious Buddhists in the early periods of the Church.' Thus: 1) a personal disciple of the Buddha, 2) author of the Abhidharma-prakaraṇapāda-śāstra and Abhidharma-dhātukāyapāda-śāstra and probably also of a brief work commented upon by Dharmatrāta, 3) author of Ārya-vasumitra-boḍhisattva-saṅgīti-śāstra, 4) the author of the treatises translated in Chinese as Chih-pu-yi-lun and Yi-pu-tsung-lun, 5) commentator on Vasubandhu's Abhidharmakośa-śāstra. Vasumitra mentioned in connection with Kaniṣka's Council is supposed to have headed the 500 arhat-s who, in this Council, composed the Abhidharma-mahā-vibhāṣā-śāstra. 'But', comments Watters, 'there is nothing either in this treatise or the Saṅgīti-śāstra to show that these works were written at the time of Kaniṣka, nor is there anything in either to show that it was wholly or in part the work of Vasumitra.'

If to these are added the minor controversies of the earlier and later periods, these went on for about a hundred years.

The controversies subsided at the Third Council, when all those belonging to the eighteen sects jointly purified the Law and codified the Vinaya. Also those portions of the Sūtra-piṭaka and the Abhidharma which were not codified before received codification and those portions which were already codified were revised.²¹

During the time of all these, some of the Mahāyāna scriptures reached the human world. A few monks who attained the *anutpattikadharmakṣānti*²² stage preached these a little. However, since this did not become very extensive, the śrāvaka-s did not contest it.

The twelfth chapter containing the account of the Third Council.

21. cf Bu-ston ii.101 on the time of the codification of the piṭaka-s.

22. N. Dutt AMB 40 'It may be a development of the Hīnayānic anutpādayāna (further non-origin of āśrava-s and hence rebirth) and kṣaya-jñāna, but it bore a completely different sense in the Mahāyāna scriptures.' V & S tr 'those who had attained the practice in the teaching of "not to be born again."'

CHAPTER 13

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF THE BEGINNING OF THE EXTENSIVE PROPAGATION OF THE MAHĀYĀNA

After the Third Council, king *Kaniṣka passed away.

There lived a very wealthy householder called *Jaṭi¹ in *Aśmaparānta in the north, near the Thogar country [Fol 32B] to the west of Kashmir. He used to worship all the caitya-s in the north. He invited Vasumitra, the Vaibhāṣika² bhaṭṭāraka, from the region of *Maru in the west and bhaṭṭāraka Ghoṣaka³ from the Thogar country. He entertained three lakhs of monks for twelve years. At the end of this, he prayed for anutara-bodhi and as, the sign of the prayer being fulfilled, the offerings of flowers and lamps remained fresh and burning throughout the year and, moreover, the sandal-powder and the flowers offered (in the course of the prayer) remained suspended in the air. The earth shook and there came the sound of music, and so on.

In the Puṣkalāvati⁴ Palace, king *Kaniṣka's son entertained

1. of the prophecy quoted by Bu-ston ii. 109-10: 'On the northern borderland, in the city of Takṣaśilā, a householder named Jaṭānika will appear. He will pay homage to my body and my disciples and, after one thousand aeons, in the age of Good Luck, in the world called Mahāvvyūha-svaḷaṅkṛta, he is to become the Buddha Samantaprabha.'
2. V Sarvāstivādin. But the text has bye-brag-tu-smra-ba, the usual Tibetan for Vaibhāṣika, that of Sarvāstivādi being thams-cad-yod-pa.
3. Litvinsky in Kushan Studies in USSR p. 64 'The famous Buddhist theologian Ghoṣaka was born in Tukhāristān. He was one of the leading figures at the Buddhist Council in Puruṣapura and author of the commentary composed there on the Abhidharma-vibhāṣā. Ghoṣaka returned to Tukhāristān after the Council. This theologian was accordingly a follower of the Vaibhāṣika school, later divided into branch schools, one of which, called the Western Vaibhāṣika school, was connected with "the country of Balhika" or Balkh. The traditions of this school may even be traceable to Ghoṣaka.'
4. rgyas-ldan. Obermiller in Bu-ston ii. 110 translates as Vistaravatī, cf for five years one hundred ārya-s and arhat-s and ten thousand other monks.

There lived a brāhmaṇa called *Viduḥ in Kusumapura in the east. He prepared many copies of the Tri-piṭaka and donated these to the monks. Each of the three piṭaka-s contains a hundred thousand *śloka-s. He prepared a thousand copies of each of these. He also provided lavishly each monk with materials for worship.

In the city of *Pāṭaliputra there lived an arhat called ārya *Aśvaguṇa,⁵ who was an *a-samaya-vimukta*⁶ arhat and who devoted himself to the aṣṭa-vimokṣa-samādhi.⁷ As a result of his preaching the Doctrine, ārya Nandamitra⁸ and some others attained arhat-hood and many were led to realise the Truth.

There was a king called *Lakṣāśva in the west. He also extensively worked for the Law of the Buddha.

In *Saurāṣṭra in the south-west, there lived a brāhmaṇa called Kulika.⁹ [Fol 33A] There lived then a mahā-sthavira arhat called *Nanda, who was born in *Aṅga and was well-versed in Mahāyāna. On hearing about him, he (Kulika) invited him to learn from him the Mahāyāna.

Watters i. 214 Puṣkaravatī, the ancient capital of Gandhāra. According to Yuān-chuang, it was here that Vasumitra and Dharmatrāta composed the treatises on Abhidharma.

5. cf prophecy quoted by Bu-ston ii. 109 'In the city of Pāṭaliputra, in the Mārgārāma, there will be a monk called Aśvaguṇa.'
6. du-mi-sbyor. D 634—one of the twenty stages a monk of the Śrāvaka school reaches, (delivered at a wrong time). V 'whose salvation does not depend upon time' and adds in note 'the highest stage of arhat-hood.'
7. ṇam-par-thar-pa-bṛgyad. Bu-ston ii. 91—eight degrees of liberation (from materiality). But see note 5 of Ch. 5
8. dga'-ba'i-bśes-gñem. Tg (mDo xc. 19) contains a work called Ārya-nandamitra-avadāna, author not known. cf Bu-ston ii. 105, where this work is quoted.
9. rigs-ldan. Mentioned in the Mañjuśrī-mūla-tantra—see Bu-ston ii. 116.

At that time there appeared all at once innumerable kalyāṇa-mitra-s in different places capable of preaching the Mahāyāna. All of them attained the *dharma-srota-anugata-nāma-samādhi*¹⁰ as a result of listening to the Doctrine separately from ārya Avalokiteśvara, *Guhyaapati*¹¹, *Mañjuśrī*¹², *Maitreya*¹³ and others.¹⁴

There were about five hundred preachers of the Doctrine like mahābhṛṅgāraka *Avitarka, *Vigatarāgadvaja, *Divyākara-gupta, *Rāhulamitra, *Jñānātala, mahā-upāsuka *Saṅgataṭa and others. From the lands of the gods, Nāgas, Gandharvas, Rākṣasas etc—but particularly from the land of the Nāgas¹⁵—, were obtained most of the sūtra-s like *Ārya-ratnakūṭa-dharmaparyāya-śata-sāhasrikā*¹⁶, *Sannipāta-sāhasrikā*¹⁷, *Ārya-avataṃsaka-dharmaparyāya-śata-sāhasrikā*¹⁸ containing one thousand chapters, *Ārya-laṅkāvatāra-pañcaviṃśati-sāhasrikā*¹⁹ *Ghanavyūha-dvādaśa-sāhasrikā*²⁰, *Dharma-sañcaya-(gāthā)-dvādaśa-sāhasrikā*²¹ etc.

Most of these ācārya-s were invited by the brāhmaṇa (Kulika). When king *Lakṣāśva heard about this, he was full of great reverence. Desirous of inviting these five hundred preachers of the Doctrine, he asked his ministers, 'What is the number of the preachers of the Doctrine ?'

10. chos-kyi-rgyun-gyi-tiḥ-he-'dsin. cf D 431 & Bu-ston ii. 141. V 'samādhi of continuation of teaching.' V n 'The Mahāvvyūṭpattī does not give the name of this samādhi. But from the meaning it can be concluded that by being immersed in this samādhi, one can listen to the teaching of those whom the Buddha himself taught.'

11. gsaṅ-ba'i-bdag-po.

12. 'jam-dpal.

13. byams-pa.

14. cf Bu-ston ii. 101f on the rehearsal of the Mahāyāna scriptures.

15. Bu-ston ii. 124—Śrīmān obtains Mahāyāna texts from the land of the nāga-s and is henceforth called Nāgārjuna.

16. 'phags-pa-dkon-mchog-brtsegs-pa-chos-kyi-rnam-graṅs-'bum.

17. 'dus-pa-stoṅ-yod-pa.

18. 'phags-pa-phal-bo-che-chos-kyi-rnam-graṅs-'bum.

19. 'phags-pa-laṅkāra-gśeḡs-pa-ñi-khri-lha-stoṅ-pa.

20. rgyan-stug-po-stoṅ-phrag-bcu-gñis-pa.

21. chos-yañ-dag-par-sdud-pa-stoṅ-phrag-bcu-gñis.

'Five hundred'.

[Fol 33B] 'What is the number of the listeners to the Doctrine ?'

'Five hundred'.

So the king thought, though there were many preachers of the Doctrine, the listeners to it were few. Thinking thus, he built five hundred temples on the top of the mount *Abhu (Ābu). To each of these he invited one teacher and provided (each) with all the necessaries. From among his own attendants he selected five hundred intelligent and highly devout persons, got them ordained and engaged them to listen to the Mahāyāna.

After this, the king felt desirous of having copies of the scriptures.

The king asked, 'How voluminous are the Mahāyāna piṭaka-s ?'

'Normally these cannot be measured. However, what we now possess run to one hundred lakhs (of śloka-s).'

The king said, 'So this is enormous. Still, let us have more copies.' Saying this, he got all these copied and donated the copies to the monks. These works were later brought to Śrī *Nalendra.

These three groups of the followers of the Mahāyāna, consisting of five hundred each, were profoundly versed in a large number of sūtra-s, were sharply intelligent and attained the stage of forgiveness (kṣānti-prāpta).²² They possessed fore-knowledge (abhijñāna)²³ and had the capacity of showing some miraculous feats²⁴ to the people. Thus was spread the fame of Mahāyāna in all directions.

Failing to understand its significance, the śrāvaka-s slandered the Mahāyāna as something different from the sayings of the Buddha.

All the Mahāyānī-s were followers of the path of 22. bzod-pa-thob-pa.

23. mion-par-śes-pa. D 365—certain gifts of supernatural perception, of which six kinds are enumerated.

24. rdsu-phrul. D 1058—ṛddhi.

yogacaryā.²⁵ Because they were all originally ordained in the eighteen sects, they lived among the followers thereof. There lived (thus) only a few Mahāyāni-s among thousands of śrāvaka-s. Still the śrāvaka-s could not dominate them.

There lived at that time in *Magadha, two brāhmaṇa brothers called Udbhaṭa-siddhi-svāmin²⁶ and Śaṃkara-pati²⁷. [Fol 34A] They used to worship Mahādeva as their tutelary deity. Both of them were proficient in the philosophy of the tīrthika-s as well as of the Buddhists. But Udbhaṭa remained doubtful [of Buddhism] and even considered Mahādeva as superior, while Śaṃkarapati had reverence only for the Buddha. Inspired by the words of their mother and having acquired the miraculous power of moving swiftly,²⁸ they went to *Kailāsa, the king among the mountains. In this mountain resided Mahādeva. They saw his white riding bull and also *Umā-devi plucking the flowers. At last they saw Mahādeva himself, sitting on his throne and preaching religion. Gaṇeśa²⁹ led the two [brothers] by both hands to Mahādeva.

When five hundred arhat-s came flying from the Mānasa-sarovara,³⁰ Mahādeva bowed down to them, washed their feet, offered them food and listened to the Doctrine from them. So he [Udbhaṭa] realised that the Buddha was superior. Still he made enquiries and was told by Mahādeva, 'Only the path of the Buddha leads to salvation, which is not to be found anywhere else.'

The two felt fully satisfied and returned to their own place. They renounced the dress of the brāhmaṇa and took the vow of

25. rnal-'byor-spyod-pa-sems-tsam-pa. sems-tsam-pa usually means the Yogācāra doctrine, which cannot be referred to in the present context.

26. mtsho-bisun-grub-rje. Tg contains the Viśeṣa-stava (bsTod 1) and the Sarvajña-mahēśvara-stotra (bsTod 3) by ācārya Udbhaṭa-siddhi-svāmin, alias Mudgaragomin.

27. bde-byed-bdag-po. Tg contains the Devātīśaya-stotra (bsTod 4—lit. repro. mDo xxxiii. 100) by ācārya Śaṃkarapati.

28. rkañ-m, yogs-bsgrubs. dūratvagāmi-siddhi—D 359-60.

29. tshogs-kyi-bdag-po.

30. yid-kyi-mtsho.

the upāsaka bhaṭṭāraka. They studied the scriptures of all the vehicles (yāna-s) and became great scholars. Udbhaṭa composed the Viśeṣa-stava and Śaṃkara the Devātīśaya-stotra with a view to show the excellence of the Buddhists and the inferiority of the tīrthika-s. Beginning from the market-place up to the king's palace, these were extensively propagated. Most of the people of the country recited these as songs.

[Fol 34B] Udbhaṭa and his brother provided five hundred śrāvaka monks with livelihood in Vajrāsana and entertained five hundred followers of the Mahāyāna at *Nalendra.

*Nalendra, the birth-place of Śāriputra, was also the place where Śāriputra, along with eighty thousand arhat-s, later attained nirvāṇa.

In the meanwhile, the brāhmaṇa settlement there fell into ruins. Only the cāitya of Śāriputra remained. King Aśoka elaborately worshipped it and built a large temple of the Buddha there. The first five hundred ācārya-s of the Mahāyāna discussed among themselves and came to know that if the Mahāyāna was preached at the place of Śāriputra, it was going to be extensively spread. However, if it was preached at the place of Maudgalyāyana, [the Buddhists] were going to be very powerful without greatly spreading the Doctrine.

So the two ācārya-s—the brāhmaṇa brothers—built³¹ eight temples [at Nālandā] and placed there all the scriptures of the Mahāyāna. Thus Aśoka was the founder of the first vihāra at *Nalendra. The five hundred ācārya-s along with Udbhaṭa and his brother enlarged the centre. Rāhulabhadra spread the Doctrine [of Mahāyāna] still further and Nāgārjuna made it most extensive.

The thirteenth chapter containing the account of the period of the beginning of the extensive spread of the Mahāyāna.

31. Bu-ston ii. 107 'the teachers Udbhaṭasiddhisvāmin and Śaṃkarsvāmin became possessed of the intention of making an image of the Mahābodhi at Magadha, when the latter arose from a pile of sandal-wood instead.'

CHAPTER 14

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF BRĀHMANA RĀHULA

Now, *Candana-pāla was ruling the kingdom of Aparāntaka. This king lived up to the age of one hundred and fifty and it is said that he ruled the kingdom for one hundred and twenty years. Except for the account of his grand worship of the temples and the saṅgha-s, [Fol 35A] nothing much is known about his activities for the Law of the Buddha.

At that time, the brāhmaṇa Indra-dhruva, a friend of the king, propitiated Indra and succeeded in attaining his desired object. He thus received the knowledge of the 'science of words' (grammar). When he took down in writing all that he (Indra) had said, the work became known as the Indra-vyākaraṇa.¹ This contains twentyfive thousand śloka*-s. It is also called 'The Grammar Revealed by the Deity.'²

About the time the king ascended the throne, the great ācārya brāhmaṇa Rāhulabhadra³ came to *Nalendra. He was ordained by bhaṭṭāraka Kṛṣṇa and listened to the piṭaka-s of the śrāvaka-s. In some of the sources it is said that he received ordination under bhaṭṭāraka Rāhulaprabha with Kṛṣṇa acting as the upādhyāya. But this Kṛṣṇa is not the same as (Kṛṣṇa) belonging to the line of the hierarchs.

He (Rāhulabhadra) listened to the Doctrine from ācārya *Avitarka and other ācārya-s of Mahāyāna. However, he learned the sūtra-s and tantra-s mainly from the tutelary deities like Guhyapati and others and he spread the system of the Mādhyamikas. Contemporary of this ācārya were the eight mahā-bhaṭṭā-

1. cf Bu-ston ii. 166ff.

2. lhas-bstan-pa'i-brda-sprod-pa.

3. alias Rāhula or Saraha, usually considered as the preceptor under whom Nāgārjuna received ordination. See S. Pathak in IHQ xxx. 93. S. K. De in HB i. 348 argues that by Rāhula or Saraha a number of different persons are referred to.

raka-s of the Mādhyamika system like bhaṭṭāraka *Kamala-garbha, *Ghanasa⁴ and others.

Bhaṭṭāraka *Prakāśadharmamaṇi received the vision of ārya Sarvanivāraṇa-viṣkambhī⁵ and thus attained the stage of anut-pattikadharmakṣānti. He brought from the nether world (the Mahāyāna work) Ārya-mahāsannipāta-dharmaparyāya-śata-sāhasrikā,⁶ containing one thousand chapters.

Moreover, the first five hundred ācārya-s (of Mahāyāna), along with their numerous disciples, brought many sūtra-s [Fol 35B] and tantra-s that were not known before. Since then there appeared three forms of the tantra-s, namely kriyā, caryā and yoga, and also a few works on the amuttara-tantra like the Guhyasamāja,⁷ *Buddhasamayoga*⁸ and *Māyājāla*⁹ etc.

About this time, there lived in the city of Sāketa¹⁰ a monk called Mahāvīrya,¹¹ in the city of *Vārāṇasī the Vaibhāṣika mahā-bhaṭṭāraka Buddhadeva¹² and in Kashmir the Sautrāntika mahā-ācārya bhaṭṭāraka Śrīlābha¹³. Bhaṭṭāraka Dharmatrāta,¹⁴ Ghosaka,¹⁵ Vasumitra and Buddhadeva,—these four were famed as the four great Vaibhāṣika ācārya-s and, it is said, each of them had about a lakh of disciples. These great ācārya-s propagated the principal works of the Vaibhāṣikas as the *Traya-miśraṇa-mālā*¹⁶ and Śata-upadeśa.¹⁷

4. S-ed Ghanasa, P-ed Ghanasāla. The former reading followed.

5. 'phags-pa-sgrib-pa-rnam-sel.

6. 'phags-pa-'dus-pa-chen-po-chos-kyi-rnam-grans-'bum. V 'the book on Mahāsamāja containing a hundred thousand sections and 1000 chapters'.

7. gsañ-ha-'dus-pa.

8. sañs-rgyas-mñam-sbyor.

9. sgyu-'phrul-dvra-ba.

10. gnas-bcas. V Sāketana.

11. brtson-'grus-chen-po.

12. sañs-rgyas-lha.

13. dpal-len.

14. chos-skyob.

15. dbyañs-sgrog.

16. luh-ni-spel-ma-gsum-gyi-phren-ba. V 'the garland of three mixtures'.

17. gdams-nag-brgya-pa. V 'hundred upadeśa-s'.

This Dharmatrāta is not to be taken as the other Dharmatrāta who compiled the Udānavarga.¹⁸ This Vasumitra should not be confused with two others of the same name viz. one Vasumitra who composed the *prakaraṇa-śāstra*¹⁹ and the other Vasumitra who was the author of the Samaya-bheda-paracana-cakra.²⁰

In the account of the ārya-s of the Guhyasamāja, *Visukalpa, the king of *Oḍiviśa, is to be taken as a contemporary of king *Candana-pāla. There lived then a brāhmaṇa called Dharmika²¹ in *Kuru. He built one hundred and eight temples of the Buddha around this region and made these the centres for all the Mahāyāna teachers of the time.

[Fol 36A] There lived a very prosperous brāhmaṇa called Vīrya²² in the city of *Hastināpurī. He also built one hundred and eight temples and made these the centres for one hundred and eight teachers of the Vinaya.

At that time, king *Haricandra, the first king of the *Candra dynasty, was ruling *Bhaṅgala (Bengal) in the east. He attained siddhi by following the Mantrayāna. His entire palace was built of five kinds of gems. On the outer walls of the palace were reflected the three worlds. In prosperity he was comparable to the gods. Along with a thousand attendants, he attained the vidyādhara-sthāna.²³ Śrī *Saraha,²⁴ alias the great brāhmaṇa

18. Tg mDo lxxi. 1.

19. See Note 20, Chapter 12.

20. gshuñ-lugs-kyi-bye-brag-bkod-pa'i-khor-lo. Tg (mDo xc. 11).

21. chos-ldan. cf Bu-ston ii. 116.

22. brtson-ldan. V Yogins. Obermiller (in Bu-ston ii. 116) Mahāvīrya. V n 'S remarks that both the names Dhārmika and Yogin are found in the Mañjuśrī-mūla-tantra Fol 343 and that they can be taken as simple epithets.

23. rig-pa-'dsin-'pa'i-gnas. D 1179 rig-'dsin or vidyādhara, a kind of spirit to whom a high degree of wisdom is attributed by the Tantras; all these spirits are alleged to reside in the magical forest and to spend their time in perfect enjoyment with women who are equally accomplished.

24. For works in Tg attributed to Saraha alias Rāhula, see Supplementary Note 8.

Rāhula, was at that time still following the practices of the *brāhmaṇa-s*²⁵. The five hundred ācārya-s of yoga-caryā (previously mentioned) also lived at this time. Excepting the Prajñā-pāramitā-śata-sāhasrikā, almost all the Mahāyāna sūtra-s were obtained during his lifetime.

The fourteenth chapter containing the account of the period of brāhmaṇa Rāhula.

25. bram-ze'i-spyod-pa.

CHAPTER 15

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF THE DOCTRINE
UNDER THE LEADERSHIP OF ĀRYA
NĀGĀRJUNA

After that, ācārya Nāgārjuna¹ nourished the Law and spread extensively the Mādhyamika system.² He greatly helped also the śrāvaka-s, particularly by expelling from the monastery those bhikṣu-s and śramaṇera-s who had violated their discipline and yet became much influential within the saṃgha-s. It is said that they numbered about eight³ thousand.

He was accepted as the leader of all the sects.

About this time, the three Yogācāris⁴—namely bhaṭṭāraka Nanda, bhaṭṭāraka Paramasena⁵ and bhaṭṭāraka Samyaksatya,⁶—adhering to the standpoint of Yogācāra, wrote some treatises. In the “exposition of the ālaya-vijñāna”⁷ [Fol 36B] these three bhaṭṭāraka-s are mentioned as the early Yogācāris. Therefore, the ‘Asaṅga brothers’ are to be considered as the later Yogācāris. Thus it is clearly said that they [Asaṅga and his brother] were not their followers.

With the help of the art of alchemy, he [Nāgārjuna] maintained for many years five hundred teachers of the Mahāyāna doctrine at Śrī *Nalendra. Then he brought under control devī *Caṇḍikā.

The goddess once proposed to take him to heaven through the sky. He said, ‘I have no intention to go to the heavenly

1. klu-sgrub. See Supplementary Note 9.

2. dbu-ma'i-tshul-lugs.

3. S ‘five thousand’. But the text has ston-phrag-brgyad, i.e. ‘eight thousand’.

4. rnal-'byor-spyod-pa-ba.

5. dam-pc'i-sde.

6. yañ-dag-bden-pa.

7. mñon-par-kun-gshi'i-bśad-pa.

sphere. I have invoked you for maintaining the saṃgha-s of the Mahāyāna as long as the Law exists.'

Thus told, she settled in the western vicinity of *Nalendra in the guise of a noble vaiśya lady. On the high stone wall of the temple of Mañjuśrī, the ācārya nailed a peg of khadira wood as big as could be carried by one man. He gave her the order, 'You must provide the saṃgha-s with livelihood as long as this peg is not reduced to dust.'

She maintained the saṃgha-s for twelve years with all the needful. At last a wicked śramaṇera, then acting as a steward,⁸ made passes at her and proposed to her repeatedly. She made no response. However, she once said, 'We shall be united when the khadira peg is reduced to dust.' The wicked śramaṇera set fire to the khadira peg and, when it was reduced to ashes, the goddess also vanished.

The ācārya established one hundred and eight centres of Mahāyāna in the hundred and eight temples. In each of these, he placed the image of Mahākāla⁹ [Fol 37A] and instead of her (i.e. Caṇḍikā) asked Mahākāla to maintain (the followers of) the Law. Moreover, when the Bodhi Tree of Vajrāsana was being damaged by elephants, he built two lofty stone-pillars behind it and for many years there was no more damage. As, however, there was damage again, he established on the top of each pillar the image of Mahākāla riding a lion and holding a club in his hand. This proved effective for many years; but the damage started again. So he built a stone wall surrounding it and also one hundred and eight caitya-s with images outside [the wall].

He also built the boundary wall of the Śrī Dhānyakaṭaka¹⁰ caitya and, within this boundary wall, built one hundred and eight temples.

When the eastern side of Vajrāsana was severely damaged by the river, he placed seven huge blocks of stone in the form of a dam on which were sculptured the images of the Buddha

8. shal-ta-ba. see D 1089.

9. nag-po-chen-po.

10. *dpal-ldan-'bras-spun*s. See N. Dutt AMB 22f & 42 ; Watters ii, 216ff.

with their faces turned back. This stopped the damage caused by water. (The images) were called the Seven Sages of the Dam. The word chu-lon simply means a dam (chu-rags). It is, therefore, extremely foolish to say that these constituted the 'reflection' ('dra-len), because the images were reflected on the water. It also goes flatly against the Vinaya-āgama to say that this took place at the time of the conversion of king *Utrāyaṇa. On these two points one [presumably some historian referred to] shows one's own nature [i.e. ignorance].¹¹

During this time, king *Muñja¹² of *Oḍivīṣa, along with his thousand attendants, attained the Vidyādhara-kāya. In the west, king*Bhojadeva,¹³ along with his thousand attendants, vanished in *Dodhahari¹⁴ in a region of *Mālava. And so on. Thus, there was none who did not attain siddhi after entering the Mantrayāna.

Now, when the Prajñā-pāramitā-śata-sāhasrikā and many dhāraṇī-s were brought by the ācārya (Nāgārjuna), [Fol 37B] the śrāvaka-s said that these were composed by Nāgārjuna himself. After this no more sūtra work on the Mahāyāna appeared.

He composed five fundamental treatises¹⁵ to silence the contesting śrāvaka-s who believed in the external reality. According to the Tibetan account, the *Nyāyālamkāra-nāma-śāstra*¹⁶ written by bhikṣu Śaṅkara in refutation of the Mahāyāna contains twelve lakhs of śloka-s*. But this is a verbal error. Three Indian historical works agree in asserting that it contains twelve thousand śloka-s*.

11. V tr 'These two presumptions clearly show the foolishness of the compilers.'

12. Evidently not the famous royal author Muñja of the 10th century—Keith 53n.

13. Evidently not the royal author Bhojadeva (of Mālava), the nephew of Muñja and belonging to the 11th century.

14. S-ed Toḍahari.

15. For the large number of works in Tg attributed to Nāgārjuna, see Supplementary Note 10. Bu-ston i. 50-1, however, speaks of six fundamental works of Nāgārjuna: Śūnyatā-saptati, Prajñā-mūla, Yukti-ṣṣṭikā, -Vigraha-vyāvartanī, Valdalya-sūtra and Vyavahāra-siddhi.

16. rig-pa'i-rgyan-shes-bya-ba'i-bstan-bcos, cf Bu-ston ii. 124 'At that

He built many temples in the eastern countries like *Paṭa-vesa or *Pukhañ, *Oḍiviśā, *Bhaṅgala, *Rāḍha, etc. At that time, *Suviṣṇu,¹⁷ a brāhmaṇa of *Magadha, built one hundred and eight temples at Śrī *Nalendra. He made these the centres for the mātrkā-dhara-s¹⁸ so that the Abhidharma of both Mahāyāna and Hinayāna were not lost.

In the latter part of his life, ārya Nāgārjuna went to the south. After converting king Udayana,¹⁹ he nourished the Law for many years. In *Drāvalī of the south, there lived two brāhmaṇa-s possessing enormous wealth. They were called *Madhu and *Supramadhu.²⁰ A debate took place between the ācārya and these two brāhmaṇa-s. Their knowledge even of the Brahmanical scriptures—such as the four Vedas and ‘the eighteen branches’ of knowledge—could not be equal to a hundredth part of that of the ācārya.

Then the two brāhmaṇa-s asked, ‘Why should you, the son of a brāhmaṇa and versed in the three Vedas and a great scholar of all sāstra-s, be still a śramaṇera of *Śākya?’²¹ Thus asked, he praised the Doctrine and not the Vedas. So the brāhmaṇa-s became full of great reverence and worshipped the Mahāyāna.
[Fol 38A] The ācārya gave them the magic spell. The one attained siddhi of goddess Sarasvatī²² and the other of goddess Vasudhārā.²³ Each of them maintained two hundred and fifty preachers of the Mahāyāna. The first of them could copy time, a monk named Śaṃkara, having composed a treatise called Nyāyālaṅkāra, consisting of 1,200,000 śloka-s, refuted everyone. In order to subdue (this monk, Nāgārjuna) expounded the Doctrine at Nālandā.’

17. cf Bu-ston ii. 116.

18. ma-mo-'dsin-pa. D 949 mātrkādhara, holder of the mātrkā or the mystic diagram.

19. V n ‘In the text bde-byed, Śaṃkara. But S reads it as bde-spyod.’
See note 22 of Introduction.

20. Bu-ston ii. 116 Madhu and Madhubhadra.

21. V tr ‘Why have you become a Buddhist?’

22. dbyahs-can-na.

23. nor-rgyun-ma,

the Prajñā-pāramitā-śata-sāhasrikā in one, two, three or a few days. In this way he donated many copies of the scriptures to the monks. The second of them worshipped the monks with all the necessaries.

Thus, this ācārya nourished the True Doctrine in every way, i.e. by listening, expounding, meditating, building temples, providing the saṅgha-s with livelihood, causing welfare even to the living beings other than men, silencing the challenge of the tīrthika-s etc. His contribution to the Mahāyāna is, therefore, incomparable.

In the 'History of Seven Versions of the Words of the Buddha which is Comparable to the Mine of Jewels',²⁴ I have already given the full biography of ārya Nāgārjuna and of the great *brāhmaṇa*²⁵. These can be known from there.

King Udayana lived for one hundred and fifty years.

According to one calculation, this ācārya lived for seventy one years less than six hundred years; according to another, twenty-nine years less than that [i.e. less than six hundred years].

On the basis of the first calculation, he should have lived for two hundred years in the madhya-deśa,²⁶ two hundred years in the south and one hundred and twenty-nine years in Śrī Parvata.²⁷ This appears to be a rough account. But my paṇḍita* teachers say that in this a half year was counted as a full year. On the basis of the second [calculation], he lived in Śrī Parvata for one hundred and seventy one years, the other periods being the same [as in the first calculation].

From the time he became a rasāyana-siddha,²⁸ [Fol 38B] his complexion looked like that of a gem. As the result of his meditation in the Śrī Parvata, he attained the first *bhūmi*²⁹

24. Briefly referred to as the bKa'-babs-bdun-ldan.

25. i.e. Rāhulābhadrā or Saraha—see Fol 36A.

26. V Magadhā. The text has yul-dbus.

27. dpal-gyi-ri. See Watters ii. 208.

28. bcud-len-grub-pa. See D 359 on dños-grub; rasāyana-siddhi is the fifth form of siddhi.

29. i.e. the first of the ten bhūmi-s called the pramuditā or beatitude—D 1257. cf Watters ii. 206. V n 'According to others, the eighth bhūmi'.

and his body was ornamented with thirtytwo auspicious signs.³⁰

Ācārya brāhmaṇa Vararuci, a friend of this ācārya, was once acting as the royal priest of king Udayana.³¹ The youngest queen of this king had some knowledge of grammar.³² But the king had no knowledge [of it]. While having a water sport in the garden, the king splashed water at her.³³ She said : mā-mo-da-ka-siñca*,³⁴ (māmodakaṃ siñca), which, rendered into Tibetan, means : 'Do not throw water at me.' However, influenced by the southern dialect, the king understood this to mean : 'Give me a cake of peas fried in til* oil.' When he offered this, the queen thought that it was better to die than to live with a king as stupid as an ox. And she was about to seek death by drowning herself. The king stopped her and then started learning grammar. Though he learned a great deal from brāhmaṇa Vararuci, for what was left for him to learn he studied under ācārya *Saptavarman.³⁵

Now, the account of ācārya Vararuci.

When ārya Nāgārjuna was the upādhyāya of *Nalendra, he had a friend in *Rā-ra³⁶ [? Rāḍa] in the east of *Magadha, who was a brāhmaṇa, was extremely devoted to the Law of the Buddha and was very diligent in the six-fold duties.³⁷ He spent

30. V n 'which are the characteristic marks of the Buddha alone. According to one legend, Nāgārjuna placed himself on the same level as the Buddha and probably the reference to the Buddha alone possessing the 32 marks dates from this period.'
31. Though both S-ed. and P-ed give the name as bde-hyed, the correct form appears to be bde-spyod, which is found in Bu-ston ii. 167. Hence the Indian original could be Udayī or Udayana.
32. V 'Sanskrit grammar.' But the word for Sanskrit does not occur in the text.
33. See Sachau i. 136 for Al-beruni's version of the story, where the name of the king occurs as Samalvāhana, 'i.e. in the classical language Sātavāhana.'
34. The story occurs in the Kathā-sarit-sāgara vi.114.
35. In Tg, the Kalāpa-sūtra (mDo cxvi.9) is attributed to Śarvavarman, Sarvavarman, Saptavarman, Īśvaravarman or dban-phyug go-cha.
36. V & S Chagala, perhaps because ra in Tibetan means the goat.
37. S-ed drug-la (six), P-ed drug-pa (sixth). The former reading followed.

twelve years chanting the mantra of ārya Avalokiteśvara. After this, he performed a rite with a fire offering (homa) costing four lakhs of gold. This made ārya Avalokiteśvara appear before him in person and ask, 'What do you desire?'

'I desire to work for the welfare of every living being with the eightfold great supernatural powers (aṣṭa-mahā-siddhi)³⁸. Please employ Mahākāla to my service.' Being thus prayed, he [Avalokiteśvara] granted [this].

[Fol 39A] After this, Vararuci acquired the siddhi-s. For the purpose of working for the welfare of the living beings, with each of the eight siddhi-s like the guṭikā etc, he got initiated a thousand siddha-s. All these eight thousand siddha-s accepted him as their guru and acquired proficiency in all the branches of knowledge without any study.

He then went to the west and lived in the country of the very prosperous king *Śāntivāhana.³⁹ There also he worked for the welfare of every living being with mantra and tantra. When he went to *Vārāṇasī, the king then ruling there was *Bhīmaśūkla. Also in his kingdom he worked extensively for the welfare of the living beings. To this period belongs the account of *Kālidāsa.

After this, he proceeded to the south, where king Udayana⁴⁰ wanted to learn grammar. But no ācārya could be found who had a complete mastery of the grammar of *Paṇi (Pāṇini). He came to know that the Nāga king⁴¹ *Śeṣa was thoroughly proficient in *Paṇi. Brāhmaṇa Vararuci, with his magic power, coerced him (Śeṣa) to come and engaged him to compose a work of one lakh śloka*-s as an extensive commentary on the 38. grub-pa-chen-po-brgyad. See D 359.

39. S suggests the possibility of this being the same as Śāntavāhana. V n 'Lassen thinks that Vararuci was a contemporary of Vikramāditya.' See Watters ii. 207.

40. bde-byed.

41. In Tibetan writings, Pāṇini's commentator Patañjali is referred to as the Nāga king called Śeṣa. In Tg (mDo cxxxv. 2 & cxxxvi. 1—the translation of Patañjali's Mahābhāṣya), Patañjali is called nāga-rāju Vāsuki-putra Śeṣa. cf also Bu-ston ii. 167.

whole of *Paṇi. The ācārya used to take these [whatever Śeṣa said] down in writing, and in-between the two of them there was a partitioning screen. When twentyfive thousand śloka*-s were completed, the ācārya felt curious to see how the other looked. So he raised the screen and saw there a large snake yawning.⁴² The Nāga went away out of shame. After this, the ācārya himself started to compose the commentary further, but he could not write more than twelve thousand verses. These two taken together are called the 'Grammar Taught by the Nāga.'⁴³

He next taught many branches of learning like grammar [Fol 39B] and it is said that after this Mahākāla took him on his shoulders to the Pārijāta grove on top of mount Sumeru.⁴⁴

But king Udayana, dissatisfied with ācārya Vararuci's commentary, employed brāhmaṇa *Saptavarman to invoke 'the six-faced youth' [Śaṅmukha-kumāra, i. e. the deity Kārtika]. When he (Saptavarman) attained siddhi, [Kārtika] asked, 'What do you desire?' 'I desire to learn the Indra-vyākaraṇa.' Being thus prayed, he [Kārtika] said, si-dhho-va-rṇa-sa-ma-mnū-ya (siddho varṇa-samāmnūyah).⁴⁵ And the moment this was uttered, he [Saptavarman] acquired the full knowledge of the entire science of words.

According to the older Tibetan tradition, the portion preceding the fourth chapter of Kalāpa* {-vyākaraṇa} was revealed by the Six-faced Youth. The word kalāpa*⁴⁶ is used in the sense of a collection. Hence, it refers to the collection of many

42. S-ed bsgyiṅs-pa (yawning). P-ed bskyiṅs-pa, which appears to be a corruption. V tr 'coiled'.

43. According to this legend, therefore, Patañjali's Mahābhāṣya was composed partially by Vararuci. According to Bu-ston ii.168, however, Vararuci contributed to the completion of the Kalāpa-vyākaraṇa.

44. ri-rab.

45. In fact, this is the opening sūtra of the Kalāpa-vyākaraṇa. cf Bu-ston ii.168.

46. cf Bu-ston ii.168.

colours in the peacock's tail. In the present context, however, it is not used in this sense, because the Kalāpa* was composed by Saptavarman* himself. Collection here only means the compilation of all useful parts in one place. Similarly, it is an error to say that the real name of the ācārya was Īśvara-varman.⁴⁷ The error results from the verbal corruption sarva-varman*. Saptavarman* means dbun-pa'i-go-cha [i.e. (One with) Seven Armour].

Next is the account of Kālidāsa*.

When brāhmaṇa Vararuci was living in the royal temple of king Bhīmaśukla* of Vārāṇasī*, the king wanted to offer [in marriage] princess *Vāsantī*⁴⁸ to the brāhmaṇa Vararuci. Vāsantī arrogantly said, 'I am a greater scholar than Vararuci and therefore cannot serve him.' So Vararuci thought, 'I must befool her.' He said, 'Let me then ask my learned teacher who is a hundred times more intelligent than me. The king would better offer Vāsantī to him.'

[Fol 40A] Now, there lived a handsome shepherd in Magadha*. He [Vararuci] saw him cutting with an axe the branch of a tree while sitting on it and so knew him to be a big fool. He [Vararuci] took him along and for a few days arranged for his bathing, anointing, etc. He was made to wear the dress of a brāhmaṇa paṇḍita* and the only words he was made to memorise were: om svasti*.

'When you find the king holding his court, offer flowers to him and just say: om svasti*. If anybody else asks any question, do not try to answer.'

While trying to carry out these instructions, after offering flowers to the king he said: u-śa-ṭa-ra*. The ācārya [Vararuci] explained the significance of these four letters as follows :

umayā sahito rudraḥ*
śaṅkara-sahito viṣṇuḥ ṭaṅkāraḥ śūlapāṇīśca rakṣantu śiva sarvadā

47. dbaṅ-phyug-go-cha.

48. dpyid-ldan-ma.

Thus he construed a benedictory verse [out of the letters]. Translated into Tibetan it means : Umā along with Rudra, Śaṃkara along with Viṣṇu and Śūlapāṇi with his sound of the bow—let Śiva protect thee for ever.⁹

Then Vāsantī asked him many questions concerning the import of words etc, but he did not reply. Vararuci said, 'Why should a profound scholar like my teacher at all answer the questions of a woman?' Befooling her in this way, brāhmaṇa Vararuci fled to the south.

When he [Kālidāsa] was taken to the temple, he said nothing. At last he was highly delighted to see the picture of a cow among those of various animals painted on the outer wall of the temple. Thus he revealed his real self as a shepherd.

'Alas ! this is just a cowherd !' [Fol 40B] She cried and realised that she had been cheated. [And she thought] 'However, if he has intelligence, I am going to teach him grammar.'

By examining him, however, she found him to be an utter fool. Vāsantī became angry and sent him to collect flowers everyday.

There was in *Magadha an image of goddess Kālī⁴⁹ made by a celestial sculptor. He used to worship her every day with profuse flowers and great reverence. Once in the early morning he went to collect flowers for the worship to be performed by Vāsantī. One of her maids wanted to have some fun. She concealed herself behind the image, chewing a ball of areca nut. When the cowherd finished his usual prayers, the maid put into his hand the remnants of her chewing. He thought that the goddess herself had presented this to him. So he swallowed it. Immediately dawned in him unlimited knowledge of logic and grammar and he became a great poet.

He took a padma* flower in his right hand, an utpala* in his left and [thought] : 'Though the padma* is beautiful, its stem is rough. Though the utpala* is small, its stem is soft. Which of the two does she prefer?' Thinking thus, [he addressed Vāsantī]

49. lha-mo-nag-mo.

'I have in my right hand a padma* and in the left an utpala*.

The stem of one is rough, of the other soft.
Tell me, oh lotus-eyed one, which one do you want ?

When this was said, she realised that he had become learned and showed him high respect. From his great reverence for the goddess Klāī he came to be known as *Kālidāsa or the servant of Kālī. From then on he became the crowning jewel of all the poets.

He composed "the eight dūta-s",⁵⁰ like the *Meghadūta*⁵¹ etc and also voluminous poetical works like the Kumārasambhava.⁵²

[Fol 41A] Both he and *Saptavarman were tīrthika-s by conviction. During their time, arhat Saṃghavaradhana⁵³ lived in Li-yul. Among the Vaibhāṣika ācārya-s of the time were ācārya Vāmana⁵⁴ of Thogar, *Kuṇāla of Kashmir, Śubhaṅkara⁵⁵ [? Kṣemaṅkara] of central Aparāntaka, ācārya Saṃghavaradhana of the east etc. Among the Sautrāntika ācārya-s was bhaṭṭāraka. Kumāralāta⁵⁶ in the west. All of them had innumerable followers.

50. For the imitations of the Meghadūta, see IHQ iii.273ff.

51. Apart from the Tibetan translation of the Meghadūta (mDo cxvii.8), the Tg contains a work called Maṅgalāṣṭaka (rG lxxxvi.93) attributed to kavi-mahā Kālidāsa of India and two stuti-s to Sarasvatī (rG lxxi.399 & lxxii.57) attributed to Kālidāsa or mahā-paṇḍita Kālidāsa born in south India.

52. gshon-nu-'byun-ba.

53. dge-'dun-'phel. According to ancient belief, two works in the Tg are by the oriental Turk Saṃghavaradhana and written in Li-yul. These are the Arhat-saṃghavaradhana-vyākaraṇa (mDo xciv.44) and Kaṃsa-deśa-vyākaraṇa (mDo xciv.45). See note 41 ch 6.

54. mi'u-thuñ. Author of the Kāśikā commentary on Pāṇini's grammar. cf I-Tsing (Takakusu) ii, xiii, lvii, 176n.

55. dge-byed. Śubhaṅkara ? V & S Kṣemaṅkara. Tg contains two works attributed to Śubhaṅkara (rG lxxi.106 & 163).

56. gshon-nu-len, lit. Kumāralābha, a corruption of Kumāralāta—see note 10^o of Introduction. Yuan-chuang (Watters ii.286) refers to him as a native of Takṣaśīlā. He composed some tens of treatises which were widely known and read and he was the founder of the King *Haricandra,⁵⁷ along with his attendants, attained the rainbow-body.⁵⁸ He had no son. His nephew⁵⁹ was *Akṣa-candra, whose son was *Jaya-candra. They used to rule during this period. Though these two had reverence for the True Doctrine, I have come across no particular account of their contribution to the Law.

King *Haribhadra of the south attained guṭikā-siddhi with his thousand attendants.

From the early spread of Mahāyāna up to this period, every hundred in a thousand [Mahāyānists] became vidyādhara-siddha-s.⁶⁰

About this time, first appeared the religion of the mleccha-s. According to some, this appeared when bhaṭṭāraka Śrīlābha of Kashmir passed away. According to some others, he [? the founder of the mleccha religion] was a disciple of *bhaṭṭāraka Kuṇāla and was called Kumārasena⁶¹. In spite of listening to many *sūtra-s*⁶² and being well-versed in the scriptures, he had no faith [in the Doctrine]. He was expelled from the saṃgha, because of his violation of the vow. This agitated him highly. He resolved to found a religion as a rival of the law of the Buddha.⁶³ So he went to the country called *Śulika beyond Thogar, [Fol 41B] concealed himself under the name

Sautrāntika school: 'In his time, Aśvagoṣa in the east; Deva in the south, Nāgārjuna in the west and Kumāralābha in the north were called the Four Shinning Suns.'

57. V Haribhadra.

58. ja' lus. D 454—the body of a saint vanishing in the rainbow or in the manner of the colours of the rainbow.

59. Isha-bo, nephew or grandson. V takes it here in the sense of nephew.

60. rig-pa' dsin-pa-grub-po—perhaps refers to the attainment of a high degree of wisdom, like that of the ḍākin-s.

61. gshon-nu'i-sde.

62. V tr 'a Sautrāntika.' The text has mdo-sde' dsin-pa, which is more likely to mean a sūtradhara.

63. S tr 'There was a very learned but unbeliever Sautrāntika, Kumārasena by name. He had been driven out of the saṃgha, as he transgressed the Law. It agitated him highly and he decided to found a school in order to refute the Law of the Buddha.'

*Mā-ma-thar, changed his robes, composed the mleccha scripture preaching violence and kept it concealed in the place of *Bi-śli-mi-lil,⁶⁴ the great demon among the asura-s. By the grace of Māra, he attained many magical powers like that of winning wars, etc.

At that time, a girl born in the brāhmaṇa family⁶⁵ in *Kho-rāsāna used to collect flowers everyday. A part of these she used to offer to the gods and another part she used to sell to others. A cat once came out of the heap of flowers and merged into her body. As a consequence, she conceived. At the time (of delivery) she gave birth to a healthy son. On growing up, he used to beat all children of his own age and kill all sorts of animals. So the ruler of the country banished him to the forest. Even there he enslaved anybody that he came across, killed the wild animals and offered their flesh, bones and skin to the people. On knowing this, the king made enquiries. He replied, 'I am not a brāhmaṇa, nor am I a kṣatriya, vaiśya or śūdra. There is none to teach me the conduct appropriate for my birth. That is why, I am angry and violent. If anybody teaches me the conduct appropriate for my birth, I shall act accordingly.'

He was asked, 'Who is going to teach you the conduct appropriate for your birth?' He answered, 'I shall search for him myself'. Guided by Māra in his dream, he found the work that was previously concealed. He read it, became full of reverence for it and thought: 'But who can teach me according to it?' Directed by Māra, he met *Mā-ma-thar and received instructions from him. Immediately he acquired magic powers.

[Fol 42A] Along with a thousand attendants, he became the sage of the mleccha-s under the name *Bai-kham-pa. He went to the region in the vicinity of *Makha city. As a consequence of his preaching there the false religion to the brāhmaṇa-s and kṣatriya-s, there came into being the royal dynasties of *Sai-da and *Tu-ru-ṣka.

64. S-ed B: sli-mli.

65. V omits 'born in the brāhmaṇa family,' though the text has bram-ze'i-rigs-kyi.

This teacher came to be known as *Ardho. Thus originated the religion of the mleccha-s.

The fifteenth chapter containing the account of the period of the Law under the leadership of ārya Nāgārjuna.

CHAPTER 16

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF THE FIRST HOSTILITY
TO THE LAW AND OF ITS RESTORATION

The two kings *Akṣa-candra and *Jaya-candra ruled the kingdom of Aparāntaka. They were very powerful and had reverence for the Three Jewels. That is why, they are counted among the seven *Candra kings.

*Jayacandra's son was *Nema-candra. His son was *Phaṇi-candra. His son was *Bhaṃśa-candra [? Vaṃśa-candra]. His son was *Sāla-candra. None of them was very powerful. Therefore, they are counted neither among the seven nor among the ten *Candras.

Soon after *Nema-candra ruled the kingdom, brāhmaṇa *Puṣyamitra, the royal priest, revolted against the king and assumed power.

At that time, an old woman related to this brāhmaṇa went to Nalendra on some errand. As the gaṇḍi was rung, she heard [the sound] phaṭ-ṭā-ya*.¹ coming out of it. [She enquired about its significance.] The brāhmaṇa experts on sound said that it meant : 'Smash the skull of the wicked īrthika-s into pieces.

The earlier Tibetan account of this is said to have been as follows. This [gaṇḍi] is the crown of the Three Jewels worshipped by the deva-s, Nāgas and the sages. When it is struck, the brains of the wicked īrthika-s get dried up.

The [Tibetan] word 'gems, describing the significance of the sound of the gaṇḍi*, should properly be 'gems-pa, i.e. 'to smash into many pieces.' [Fol 42B] It must be the equivalent of an Indian word. It is ridiculous to suggest that it is originally the Tibetan word 'gems' and further that it is to be taken in the sense of drying up.

1. It seems that Tār has in mind the Bengali word pnāṭāo.
2. Is Tār referring here to the view of Bu-ston, who in ii.136 describes

Then the brāhmaṇa king *Puṣyamitra, along with other īr-thika-s, started war and thus burnt down numerous monasteries from the madhya-deśa to *Jalandhara. They also killed a number of vastly learned monks. But most of them fled to other countries. As a result, within five years the Doctrine was extinct in the north.³

As it was predicted, the first five hundred years constituted the period of the flourish of the Law of the Teacher and the next five hundred years the period of its decay.

Accordingly, the period preceding Nāgārjuna's leadership of the Law in the madhya-deśa was the period of flourish according to the prophecy,⁴ because it was the period of the increasing activity like building temples, etc.

The period of Nāgārjuna's work for the welfare of the living beings in the south was the period of the beginning of the mleccha religion. It is clear that when he was residing at *Śrī Parvata these damages were done by the brāhmaṇa king *Puṣyamitra. So this appears to be the beginning of the decline [of the Doctrine].

After that, king *Phaṇicandra was ruling in *Magadha. During this time, in *Gauḍa of *Bhaṅgala in the east, there was the king *Gauḍa-varḍhana with great power and wealth. He rebuilt the monasteries previously damaged and thus helped the centres to increase.

Sthavira Sambhūti⁵ extensively propagated the Śrāvaka-piṭaka-s, established sixty centres in *Magadha and thus contributed greatly to the Law. At that time, there lived in *Moḷ-ta-na⁶ the sound by the Tibetan word 'gems' ? D 44 'gems : 'lit. whose brains have been confounded ; to stun, to surprise, to confound, to overthrow in argument.'

3. V & S tr 'He (Puṣyamitra) himself died in the north after five years.' The text has the word de-ñid, meaning both 'himself' and 'the tattva'.
4. luñ-gi-bstan-pa. D 1215.
5. bsam-rdsogs.
6. S Multan. cf Watters ii.254-5—Maula-sthāna, the older name of modern Multan.

in the west in the city of *Ba-ga-da a follower of the mleccha teacher, [Fol 43A] the Persian-Tartar king *Ha-la-lu.⁷ He had the great might of about a hundred thousand strong cavalry. It is said that this was the first arrival of the mleccha-s in India.

Towards the end of the life of king *Bhaṃśa-candra [? Vaṃśa-candra] and during the period of *Sāla-candra, there lived a brāhmaṇa called *Kāśī-jāta⁸ in the east. He used to worship with reverence all the surviving earlier centres and, in particular, he provided sixty-four teachers with livelihood, each with ten listeners to the Doctrine in the city of *Sva-nara-gha-bo⁹ of *Bhaṅgala. Thus he worked for the restoration of the Law which was damaged.

All these happened during ācārya Nāgārjuna's stay at Śrī Parvata or shortly after that.

The sixteenth chapter containing the account of the period of the first hostility to the Law and of its restoration.

7. V & S Hallu.

8. cf Bu-ston ii.116.

9. Could it be Sonārgāon, the old capital of the Dacca district? cf Watters ii.188.

CHAPTER 17

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF ĀCĀRYA ĀRYADEVA

Then there lived king *Candragupta, son of king *Sāla-candra.¹ Being very powerful, he is counted among the ten *Candra-s. He used to follow virtue and vice indiscriminately. But he is not counted among the seven *Candra-s,² because he did not take refuge to the Buddha.

During the reign of this king, ācārya *Āryadeva³ and ācārya Nā-gā-ha-va⁴ (Nāgāhvāya) elaborately served the Law at Śrī *Nalendra.

According to the Tibetan tradition, ācārya *Āryadeva was miraculously born of a lotus in the pleasure garden of the king of the *Siṃhala island.⁵ The king reared him up as a son. He eventually became a disciple of ācārya Nāgārjuna and, it is said, that during the lifetime of ācārya Nāgārjuna, he subdued Durdharṣakāla⁶, the tīrthika. It is added by some that he was the same as siddha *Karna-ri-pā⁷ and he attained the rain-bow body during Nāgārjuna's lifetime.

1. S-ed de-nas-rgyal-po-sā-la-candra'i-bu-candra-gupta-ste . . . P-ed de-nas-rgyal-po-sā-la-candra-gupta-ste-zla-ba-sbas-pa. The former reading followed. The latter means: 'Then king Sāla-Candra-gupta, i.e. Candragupta.'
2. V n 'Lassen mentions two Candragupta-s from the Gupta (and not Candra) dynasty. One of these reigned after A.D. 171 and the other after A.D. 230, and was also called Vikramāditya.'
3. For works attributed to Āryadeva (phags-pa-lha) see Supplementary Note 11.
4. see Fol 45B, where he is also called Tathāgatābhadrā. cf Bu-ston ii.113.
5. For the same account, see Bu-ston ii.130.
6. thub-dka'-nag-po, lit. 'Black, the Unconquerable.' The reconstruction is after V & S. Other possible Indian forms—Ajita-kṛṣṇa, Durdharṣa-kṛṣṇa. The Indian form of Mātṛceṭa's name before his conversion is not easily traced.
7. Perhaps Kāṇḍīpāda (alias Āryadeva).

[Fol 43B] In this land of Tibet, a story irrespective of being true or untrue, if once circulated among the people, nobody will listen to anything else, even though that be a firm truth. However, the truth should be stated here, even at the risk of incurring displeasure.

In the commentary called the *Catuḥśataka-vṛtti*⁸, ācārya Candrakīrti also holds that he [Āryadeva] was the son of the king of the *Sīṃhala island. The original sources of the history of ārya-deśa concur.⁹ To follow these sources : A son with auspicious marks was born of *Pañcaśṛṅga, the king of *Sīṃhala. Though placed on the throne when grown up, he felt strongly inclined to accept ordination. From upādhyāya *Hemadeva he received pravrajyā and upasampadā.

After completing the study of the entire Tri-piṭaka, he came to *Jambudvīpa on pilgrimage to the temples and caitya-s of the different regions. He met Nāgārjuna shortly before he [Nāgārjuna] left for Śrī Parvata from the country of king Udayana. At Śrī Parvata, he sat at the feet of the ācārya and received various magical powers, like rasāyana, etc. He was entrusted with substantial responsibility of the Law.

After ācārya Nāgārjuna passed away, he [Āryadeva] worked for the welfare of the living beings by way of studying and meditating¹⁰ in the adjacent lands [of Śrī Parvata] in the south. He built twenty-four monasteries with wealth obtained from the deities of mountains and trees, etc. He made each of these the centres of Mahāyāna and employed yakṣiṇī Subhagā¹¹ to maintain these.

There lived at that time a brāhmaṇa called Durdharṣa-kāla¹²

8. Tg (mDo xxiv.2) Bodhisattva-yogacaryā-catuḥśataka-ṭīkā by mahā-ācārya Candrakīrti, a commentary on Āryadeva's Catuḥśataka-śāstra-kārikā-nāma (mDo xviii.1, where Āryadeva is mentioned as born in the Sīṃhala island and as the spiritual son of ārya Nāgapāda, i.e. Nāgārjuna).
9. Watters i.320, ii.100ff & ii.200ff for Yuan-chuang's account of Āryadeva, referred to as Deva Bodhisattva.
10. S-ed ṣom-pa, which is followed here. P-ed slob-ma (disciple).
11. skal-ba-bzah-mo.
12. thub-dka'-nag-po.

in the city of *Khorta in *Nalinī¹³ in the east. [Fol 44A] He went around different places and defeated in debate the Law of the Buddha. When he arrived at Śrī *Nalendra, the Buddhists there, unable to face him in debate, wrote a letter of invitation to ācārya *Āryadeva and made offerings to Mahākāla. From the heart of the miraculously created [lit. self-created] stone-image of Mahākāla, there came out a crow. The letter was tied to its neck, it flew to the south and delivered the letter to the ācārya. The ācārya knew that it was time to defeat him [Durdharṣakāla] and arrived there with the enchanted object for swift transport.¹⁴

On the way, he met a tīrthika woman who needed an eye of a learned bhikṣu to complete the materials required for her siddhi. On being asked for it, he gave her one of his eyes.¹⁵ He reached *Nalendra within a praharā and there—with the help of a shameless (kākola) upāsaka, a cat (viḍāla) and a jar full of black oil (taila-ghaṭa)—he subdued the sister paṇḍita* (bhagini-paṇḍita), the parrot (śuka) and the chalk (khaḍika) of the tīrthika-s.¹⁶ He encircled the place with magic charm and covered it with tattered rags, etc. Hence Maheśvara could not enter his [Durdharṣakāla's] heart.¹⁷ Though he went on arguing for a long time, the ācārya defeated him thrice. Then 13. S-ed Nalina. P-ed Nalinī.

14. Reference to the dūratva-gāmi-siddhi—see D 359.

15. cf Bu-ston ii.130: 'On the way there the goddess of a tree begged him to grant her an eye, and he accordingly presented her with one of his eyes. Thereafter, as he had vanquished the heretic, (the monks said): Who is this one-eyed? Āryadeva replied—

The Terrific One (Maheśvara), though he has three eyes,
Cannot perceive the Absolute Truth;
Indra, though endowed with 1000 eyes,
Is likewise unable to see it.
But Āryadeva, who has only one eye,
Has the intuition of the True Essence
Of all the three Spheres of Existence.'

16. V tr 'He reached Nalendra within a prahara and found that the bhagini-paṇḍita, śuka and khaḍika of the tīrthika-s had been subdued by upāsaka kākola, viḍāla and taila-ghaṭa.'

17. V tr 'So that Maheśvara could not enter the place of the contest.'

he tried to escape through the sky with the help of his magic spell. The ācārya arrested him and bound him with magic spell. When he was kept imprisoned within a temple, he started reading the scriptural works there and came across a prediction¹⁸ about himself contained in the sūtra-s. He then became repentant for his past activities against the Law and was full of reverence for the Buddha. He accepted ordination [Fol 44B] and soon became a master of the Tri-piṭaka.

After this, ācārya *Āryadeva stayed at *Nalendra for a long time. At last he went again to the south and worked extensively for the welfare of all living beings. In *Raṅganātha near *Kāñci, he substantially entrusted Rāhulabhadra¹⁹ with the responsibility of the Law and passed away.

During the time of ācārya *Āryadeva, the southern ācārya Nāgāhvāya,²⁰ whose real name was *Tathāgatabhadra, was invited by the Nāgas. Seven times he visited the realm of the Nāgas. A considerable number of the Mahāyāna sūtra-s was expounded by him and he clarified some aspects of the Vijñāna-madhyā.²¹

The Trikāya-stotra,²² now existing in Tibetan translation, was also composed by this very ācārya. Specially [important]

But the text has rgyud, which, it is difficult to take in the sense of 'the place of contest'.

18. For a prophecy quoted from the Mañjuśrī-mūla-tantra, see Bu-ston ii.112-3. See Note 22 of Ch. 18 for another prophecy quoted by I-Tsing. But F. W. Thomas in ERE viii.496 argues that the account of Āryadeva converting Mātṛceṭa involves an anachronism and is therefore to be rejected. Bu-ston ii.136 considers Mātṛceṭa to have been a pupil of Āryadeva.
19. sgra-gcan-'dsin-bzah-po.
20. klu-bos.
21. nam-rig-gi-dbu-ma. V tr 'madhyama of Yogācāra'. But see Obermiller's note on the different standpoints of the Mādhyamika-ācārya-s, Bu-ston ii.135 n, quoted in our Supplementary Note 12.
22. sku-gsum-la-bstod-pa. In Tg, however, the Kāyatraya-stotra (bsTod 15) is attributed to Nāgārjuna and the author of the Kāyatraya-stotra-nāma-vivarāṇa (bsTod 16) is not mentioned. See also BA i.1 & note.

is the śāstra called *Hṛdaya-stotra*²³ composed by this ācārya. At that time in most of the southern cities like *Vidyānagara, even the children sang the verses of the Tathāgata-hṛdaya-sūtra.²⁴

Thus spreading the Law extensively, he spent a long time at *Nalendra as the upādhyāya. This ācārya was also a disciple of Nāgārjuna.

In *Bhaṅgala in the east, an old brāhmaṇa couple had a son. As they were poor, ācārya Nāgārjuna gave them a lot of gold. So they became full of reverence and all the three of them became his disciples. The son became an attendant of the ācārya and a rasāyana-siddha. He received ordination and became a master of the three piṭaka-s. He was none else than ācārya Nāgabodhi.

He served ācārya Nāgārjuna as long as he lived. [Fol 45A] After he [Nāgārjuna] passed away, ācārya Nāgabodhi sat in a deep cave on one side of Śrī Parvata and, as a result of concentrated meditation for twelve years, attained the mahāmudrā-siddhi.²⁵ He stayed there and had the life as long as that of the sun and moon. He had two different names, Nāgabodhi²⁶ and Nāgabuddhi.²⁷

Now, there lived a siddha called *Siñ-khi-pā.²⁸ [His account is as follows].

When ācārya Nāgārjuna was staying on the mountain *Uśīra in the north with a thousand disciples, he had an extremely dull-witted disciple, who could not memorise even a single verse in the course of many days. (Nāgārjuna) jokingly told

23. sññ-po'i-bstod-pa.

24. de-bshin-gšegs-pa'i-sññ-po'i-mdo.

25. phyag-rgya-chen-po-mchog-gi-dños-grub.

26. The colophon of Tg rG xlv.34 mentions Nāgārjuna as a synonym of Nāgārjunagarbha and also of Nāgabodhi (klu'i-byañ-chub)!

27. For works attributed to Nāgabuddhi (alias Nāgamati and Nāgabodhi), see Supplementary Note 13.

28. S n also quoted by V 'The name is certainly derived from Śrīgin, as it is testified by the Tibetan translation of it as rwa-can, i.e. the horned one.'

him, 'Meditate on having horn on your own head'. He meditated accordingly. Because of his intense concentration, there soon appeared visible horns on his head, which in no time reached the roof of the cave of his dwelling. The ācārya came to know of his power of concentration and made him sit on the meditation of being without horn on his head. And his horns disappeared. Giving him some instructions on niṣpanna-krama,²⁹ he [Nāgārjuna] asked him to meditate. So in a short time, he attained the mahāmudrā-siddhi.

Then the ācārya, along with his followers, practised the pārada-rasāyana for six months. After attaining success in this, when he distributed the alchemical pills to the disciples, he [One With Horns] touched the pill to his head and turned away without accepting it. The ācārya wanted to know the reason for this. [He said] 'Oh ācārya, I am not in need of it. If you need it yourself, please get some jars filled with water.'

Accordingly, a thousand big wine jars were filled with water and the whole forest looked as if full of jars. He [One With Horns] put a drop of urine [Fol 45B] into each of the jars and all these became full of alchemical gold. Ācārya Nāgārjuna kept all these concealed into a solitary cave of an inaccessible hill with the prayer that these should be of benefit for the living beings of the future.

This dull-witted one, who attained siddhi, came to be called *Siñ-khi-pā, that is One With Horns.

Now about ācārya *Śākya-mitra,³⁰ the great. He was also surely a disciple of ācārya Nāgārjuna. However, his account is not read or heard of.

The account of the mahā-siddha Śabari-pa³¹ is already given by me in my 'Account of the Jewels.'³²

29. V n 'the final stage of contemplation.'

30. śākya-bśes-gñen. For works of Śākyamitra, see Supplementary Note 14.

31. For works of Śabari-pa or ri-khrod, see Supplementary Note 15.

32. rin-chen-'byuñ-gnas-lta-bu'i-gtam.

Though it is said that siddha *Mātaṅgi³³ was a disciple of ācārya Nāgārjuna and his disciple [Āryadeva], he could not have lived at that time [i.e. the time of Nāgārjuna and Āryadeva]. He could have had their vision later.³⁴

The seventeenth chapter containing the account of the period of ārya Āryadeva and others.

33. In Tg the Kurukullā-sādhana (rG. lxxiv.46) is attributed to Mātaṅgi-pāda alias Mātaṅga.

34. phvis-shal-mthoñ-ba'o. V tr 'We shall discuss him later.'

CHAPTER 18

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF ĀCĀRYA
MĀTRCĒṬA AND OTHERS

Then, Bindusāra, son of king *Candragupta, ruled *Gauḍa for thirtyfive years.

*Canaka,¹ a brāhmaṇa minister,² propitiated Mahākrodha-bhairava³ and had a direct vision [of the deity]. This greatly increased his magical power. When the king fought wars and conquered all the lands between the eastern and western oceans, he [Canaka] killed the kings and ministers of sixteen big janapada-s⁴ with abhicāra.⁵ He killed about three thousand persons and magically induced insanity in ten thousand persons.

He committed a grave sin by injuring a large number of persons by beating, torturing, stifling and making them dumb. As a result of this sin he had a disease which decomposed his body into pieces. Then he died and was reborn in hell.

[Fol 46A] During the reign of this king was built the monastery called Kusuma-alaṃkāra⁶ in Kusumapura. The great ācārya Mātrcēṭa⁷ resided there and extensively propagated both the Hīnayāna and Mahāyāna doctrines. During

1. Obermiller (Bu-ston ii.119) Cāṇakya. In the Tg Cāṇakya-nīti-śāstra (mDo cxxiii.32) is attributed to Canaka or Cāṇakya.
2. P-ed slob-dpon, lit. ācārya. S-ed blon-po, lit. minister. The latter reading followed.
3. V Yamāntaka.
4. groñ-khyer-chen-po-bcu-drug.
5. mñon-spyod.
6. me-tog-gis-brgyan-pa, lit. 'decorated with flowers'. Anesaki in ERE ii.159—this Kusumapura : modern Patna. cf Sircar CGAIL 152. But see Watters i.341f.
7. ma-khol. For works attributed to Mātrcēṭa and Pitrcēṭa (pha-khol), see Supplementary Note 16.

the latter half of ācārya Mātṛceṭa's life, *Śrīcandra, son of the younger brother of Bindusāra, ascended the throne. He built a temple of ārya Avalokiteśvara and maintained there two thousand Mahāyāna monks.

[During this time] Rāhulabhadra became the upādhyāya of Śrī *Nalendra and built there fourteen *gandhola-s*⁸ and made these fourteen different centres for the Doctrine. Many years after the reign of king *Śrī-candra, in *Di-li⁹ (Delhi) and *Mālava in the west, king *Kaṇika ascended the throne at a young age. He became extremely prosperous by discovering twentyeight mines of gems. In each of the four directions, he built a temple. In these he continuously entertained thirty thousand monks of both Hīnayāna and Mahāyāna. From this one should know that this *Kanika is not¹⁰ the same person as king *Kaṇiṣka.

This ācārya Mātṛceṭa was the same as the brāhmaṇa Durdharṣakāla mentioned a little earlier. The same person was known under the following different names¹¹:

8. dri-gtsaṅ-khañ. D 213 & 653 : the principal chapel in a monastery ; the great temple of Buddha at Gayā was called Mahā-gandhola-caitya.
9. V Ti-li. S-ed Ti-li ; P-ed Di-li. The latter followed.
10. The text has mi-gcig-pa, which means 'not the same' as well as 'one man'. V & S accept the first meaning and translate the sentence as, 'This Kanika is not the same person as king Kaṇiṣka. In his Table of Contents, Tār clearly mentions Kanika and Kaṇiṣka as separate kings. However, as evidenced by Mātṛceṭa's letter to Kaṇiṣka (see note 24 of this chapter), Kanika appears to be but another name of Kaṇiṣka. Vidyabhusana in JASB 1910. 477ff doubts that Kanika, to whom this letter was sent, was identical with the Kushana King Kaṇiṣka. F. W. Thomas in IA xxxii.345ff & ERE viii.495, Anesaki in ERE ii.159 and Winternitz HIL ii.270a argue against such an untenable view. cf Watters ii.104—Kaṇiṣka also referred to as Kanika.
11. Though the Tibetan colophon of Mātṛceṭa's Stotra-śata-pañcāśatka (Tg bsTod 38) attributes it to Aśvaghōṣa, the modern scholars are generally inclined to consider the identification of the two as due to some confusion : Anesaki in ERE ii.159-60 ; F. W. Thomas in ERE viii.495 ; Winternitz HIL ii.270. Their main points are : 1) I-Tsing Śūra,¹² Aśvaghoṣa,¹³ Mātṛceṭa, Piṭṛceṭa,¹⁴ Durdharṣa, Dhārmika Subhūti,¹⁵ *Maticitra,¹⁶ etc.

Now, in the city called *Khorta¹⁷ there lived a merchant who had ten daughters. All of them established themselves in śaraṇa-gamana and pañcaśikṣā and used to worship the Jewels. All the daughters were married to nobles of the different parts of the country. The youngest of them was married to a very wealthy brāhmaṇa called *Saṃghaguhyā.¹⁸ A son was once born to her [Fol 46B] and was called Kāla. He thoroughly studied the Vedas along with all their branches. Because of his devotion to the parents he was known as Mātṛceṭa and Piṭṛceṭa. He became thoroughly proficient in mantra, clearly knew the two as separate poets, 2) Aśvaghoṣa figured in the court of Kaniṣka while Mātṛceṭa, on the ground of his old age, declined to go there. For further discussion of the question, see Supplementary Note 17.

12. dpa'-bo. For the works attributed to Ārya-śūra or Śūra, see Supplementary Note 18. Winternitz ii.276 argues : 'the poet probably belongs to the 4th century A.D.' on the ground, that the frescoes of Ajantā (6th cen. AD) quote verses of his Jātakamālā and that his work was translated into Chinese in A.D. 434.
13. rta-dbyahs. For the name Aśvaghoṣa, see Watters ii. 103f. For the works attributed to him, see Supplementary Note 19.
14. pha-khol. See Supplementary Note 16.
15. chos-ldan-rab-'byor. V Dhārmika Subhūti. cf Anesaki in ERE ii.159, 'The Vajrasūci, a refutation of the caste-system bears the name of Aśvaghoṣa as its author ; but the same text in the Chinese translation (Nanjio No. 1303) is ascribed to Fa-Hien, literally Law-famed. This name is usually rendered as Dharmayaśas, but may be Dhārmika Subhūti, literally Lawful Glory'. In Tg the following works are attributed to Dhārmika Subhūti : Bodhisattva-caryā (-saṃgraha)-pradīpa-ratnamālā-nāma (mDo xxx.31), Saddharma-smṛti-upasthāna-kārikā (mDo xxxiii.38 & xciv.24), Daśakuśala-karma-patha-nirdeśa (mDo xxxiii.40 & xciv.21).
16. See note 7 of this chapter. cf F. W. Thomas in ERE viii.495-6.
17. F. W. Thomas in ERE viii.495 : does this refer to Gauḍa ?
18. In Tg, the Aṣṭāṅga-hṛdaya (mDo cxviii.4) and its auto-commentary (mDo cxviii.5 and cxix) are attributed to mahā-vaidya Piṭṛceṭa (pha-khol), alias mahā-vaidya Vāgbhaṭa, son of vaidya-pati Saṃghaguhyā, alias Saṃghagupta or Siṃhagupta, tantra and debate. He received direct precepts from god Mahādeva.¹⁹

Proud of being proficient in logic, he defeated in debate the Buddhists in *Oḍiviśa, *Gauḍa, *Tirahuti, *Kāmarūpa and other places. He converted some into tirthika-s, deprived others of their power and humiliated still others by compelling them to bow down before the tirthika-s and in many other ways.

The mother thought, 'If he goes to *Nalendra, the masters of logic and vidyā-mantra would make him feel humble and convert him into a follower of the Doctrine.'

And she said, 'If the Buddhists of the other places are comparable to the hairs growing on the ear of a horse, the Buddhists of *Magadha are comparable to the body of the horse. Without defeating the Buddhists of *Magadha, none can earn fame in debate.'

How he went to *Magadha and received ordination is already narrated. When he became a sthavira proficient in the piṭaka-s, āryā [Tārā-devī] instructed him in a dream: 'Compose many stotra-s to the Buddha. That will remove the defilement caused by your past sins against the Doctrine.' Thus instructed, he composed the stotra called 'Praise for the Praiseworthy'²⁰ to atone for his sins. It is said that besides

19. I-Tsing (Takakusu) 157: 'Previously as a follower of another religion, when born as man, Mātṛceṭa had been an ascetic, and had worshipped Maheśvara-deva. When a worshipper of this deity, he had composed hymns in his praise.'
20. Tg bsTod 29: Varṇanārḥavarṇane-bhagavato-buddhasya-stotre'sakya-stava-nāma by Mītracita (Maticitra or Mātṛceṭa). cf I-Tsing (Takakusu) 157: 'He composed first a hymn consisting of four hundred śloka-s (i.e. the Varṇanārḥa-varṇana) and afterwards another of one hundred and fifty (i.e. the Śata-pañcāśatka) ... These charming compositions are equal in beauty to the heavenly flowers, and high principles which they contain rival in dignity the lofty peaks of a mountain. Consequently in India, all who compose hymns imitate his style, considering him the father of literature. ... Throughout India, everyone who becomes a monk is taught Mātṛceṭa's two hymns as soon as he can recite the five and ten precepts (śīla). This course is adopted by both the Mahāyāna and Hīnayāna schools'.

this, he composed a hundred stotra-s to the Buddha. Best among these is the Śata-pañcāśatka-stotra.²¹

When Mātṛceṭa became a follower of the Law of the Buddha [Fol 47A], a large number of īrthika-s and brāhmaṇa-s accepted ordination in the monasteries of four directions.

Among the brāhmaṇa-s, Durdharṣakāla was the foremost and most accomplished. When even he was seen to renounce his own views like brushing off the dust from the shoes and to accept the Law of the Buddha, [others thought] the Doctrine of the Buddha was surely most wonderful. As a result, in Śrī *Nalendra alone more than a thousand brāhmaṇa-s and an equal number of īrthika-s took up ordination.

Being exceedingly virtuous, this ācārya used to receive everyday a lot of food while going round for alms in the city. Thus he relieved five hundred monks from the worry of livelihood. He led two hundred and fifty of them to devote themselves to meditation and the other two hundred and fifty to studies.

As the Jina himself predicted²² the composition of these, the stotra-s of this ācārya bring the same blessings as the words of the Buddha. These stotra-s became very popular and were recited even by the singers, dancers and jesters. As a result, all the people of the country became naturally devoted to the Buddha. Thus through these stotra-s²³ he proved himself extremely helpful for the spread of the Law.

21. bsTod 38 in Tg. where it is attributed to Aśvaghōṣa. But see F. W. Thomas in ERE viii.497: this hymn of Mātṛceṭa was translated by I-Tsing into Chinese. The originals of both Varṇanāṛha-varṇana and Śata-pañcāśatka are found in fragments among the "MS Trouvailles from Chinese Turkstan".

22. See I-Tsing (Takakusu) 156f: 'A nightingale in the wood, seeing the Buddha ... began to utter its melodious notes ... The Buddha, looking back to his disciples, said, "The bird, transported with joy at sight of me, unconsciously utters its melodious notes. On account of this good deed, after my nirvāṇa this bird shall be born in human form, and named Mātṛceṭa, and he shall praise my virtues with true appreciation."'

23. V 'he (Aśvaghōṣa). V seems throughout to accept Tāranātha's identification of Mātṛceṭa with Aśvaghōṣa.

Towards the latter part of his life, king *Kanika sent a messenger to this ācārya and invited him. He was then too old to go to the king. Still he helped the king to remain firm in the Doctrine by writing a letter to him²⁴ and also by sending his own disciple Jñānapriya²⁵ for preaching the Doctrine to the king as his ācārya.

He resolved to compose a work in which, instead of depending merely on the written works like the sūtra-s etc, he intended to depend also on the oral tradition of the upādhyāya-s and ācārya-s [Fol 47B] and narrate each of the ten Jātaka-s ten times in accordance with the ten pāramitā-s.²⁶ After completing thirty four of these, he passed away.

According to another account, he thought: 'Just as the Bodhisattva offered his own body to a tigress, I can also do the same. It is not a difficult task.' Thus, on coming across in a similar way a famished tigress followed by her cubs, when he was about to offer his own body, he had a little hesitation. [Hence he realised the real greatness of the Bodhisattva and] he became more profoundly reverent for the Buddha. With his own blood, he wrote the Seventy prañidhāna-s.²⁷ He offered a little blood to the tigress, which gave some strength to her weak body [and thus enabled her to be strong enough to devour him]. Then he offered his body to them.

24. Mahārāja-kaṇiṣka-lekha (mDo xxxiii.34 & xciv.29) by Mātṛceṭa or Maticitra. The colophon: 'letter sent by ācārya Maticitra to mahārāja Kaṇiṣka,' though in the Tibetan form this name occurs as Kanika. The corrector of the translation Śrīkūṭa says that this probably refers to the Kuṣāna king Kaṇiṣka. It is translated by F. W. Thomas in IA xxxii.345f, who, in ERE xiii.496, comments, 'Undoubtedly, the most interesting of Mātṛceṭa's writings is the epistle to king Kaṇiṣka ... Beginning with excuses for not accepting the great king's invitation and for boldness in offering advice, he proceeds to counsel the young sovereign as to his moral policy, the concluding 20 out of 85 verses containing a pathetic appeal on behalf of the dumb animals and deprecating the chase. The latter topic was familiar on Buddhist lips, as we may see from the Edicts of Āśoka. The whole epistle is full of mildness, gracious courtesy and moral worth; that it is an old man's writing appears on the surface.'

25. ye-śes-sñan-pa.

26. S-ed bcu-phrag-bcu, which is followed here. P-ed phrag-bcu (ten) is missing. Tār evidently refers here to the Jātakamālā of Āryaśūra—Śūra being for him only another name of Mātṛceṭa or Aśvaghōṣa.

According to others, he who did this was actually ācārya Parahitagoṣa-āraṇyaka²⁸ and who was much later than ācārya Mātṛceṭa.

He²⁹ composed many other śāstra-s like the Prajñā-pāramitā-saṃgraha.³⁰ He showed equal compassion for the monks of both Mahāyāna and Hinayāna and was not partial to the Mahāyānī-s. Hence the Śrāvakas also had great respect for him. He belonged to all the Buddhists and hence had a very high reputation.

Ācārya Rāhulabhadra,³¹ though a śūdra by birth, was all-perfect in physical charm and wealth. He received ordination at *Nalendra and became a monk proficient in the three piṭaka-s. Sitting at the feet of ācārya *Āryadeva, he realised the truth. When he resided at *Nalendra, a huge pot raised by him to the sky used to be filled with delicious food. Thus he provided many saṃgha-s with livelihood. At last in *Dhīn-koṭa he had the direct vision of Amitābha Buddha.

[Fol 48A] He passed away facing Sukhāvātī. I have already written about him in my 'Account of Tārādevī.'³²

The eighteenth chapter containing the account of the period of ācārya Mātṛceṭa and others.

27. P-ed bdun-cu-pa, (lit. seventy) smon-lam (lit. prañidhāna). S 'a prayer consisting of seventy śloka-s.' Tg contains Prañidhāna-saptati-nāma-gāthā (mDo xxxiii.53 & cxxxvi.38) by ācārya bhaṭṭāraka Parahitagoṣa-āraṇyaka.
28. gshan-la-phan-pa'i-dbyaṅs-dgon-pa-ba. V & S Parahita Svarakāntāra. But see note 27.
29. V 'he (Aśvagoṣa) ...'
30. śer-phyin-bsdus-pa. Does Tār refer here to the Ārya-prajñā-pāramitā-saṃgraha-kārikā-vivaraṇa of Triratnadāsa (mDo xiv.3)? See F. W. Thomas in ERE viii.496—the tradition identifying Triratnadāsa with Mātṛceṭa.
31. sgra-gcan-'dsin-bzañ-po.
32. sgrol-ma'i-lo-rgyus.

CHAPTER 19

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF THE RENEWED HOSTILITY TO THE DOCTRINE AND OF
ITS RESTORATION

After that, in the east [ruled] *Dharma-candra, son of king *Śrī-candra.

He also extensively worshipped the Law of the Buddha. He had a brāhmaṇa minister called *Vasunetra,¹ who had a great reverence for the Law of the Buddha and who attained direct vision of ārya Avalokiteśvara.

He [Vasunetra] obtained from the Nāgas various medicines and cured all diseases all over the kingdom of Aparāntaka. Thrice did he establish equality by writing off everybody's debts.

At that time there lived in Kashmir a king called *Turuṣka.² He lived for a hundred years and was highly religious.

During the reign of *Dharmacandra, there ruled in *Moltan and *Lahore king *Ban-de-ro, alias *Khuni-ma-mpta, the Persian king. Between this king and king *Dharmacandra, there took place repeated wars and treaties of peace. Once, during a period of peace, some greedy monks were used as messengers to each other by both sides. The Persian king sent presents of horses and jewels to the king of madhya-deśa. In return, the latter sent presents of elephants and fine silk to the Persian king.

*Dharma-candra, king of Aparāntaka, once sent to the Persian king a present of highly precious and very fine silken robe made without any stitch.³ Unfortunately, because of

1. of the prophecy quoted from Mañjuśrī-mūla-tantra by Bu-ston ii.117f.

2. Ibid ii.119, according to which Turuṣka lives for 300 years.

3. srebs-med-pa.

faulty weaving there appeared something like a foot-print⁴ on that part of the robe which covered the chest. [Fol 48B] This roused suspicion of black magic. On another occasion, he [Dharmacandra] wanted to send some fruits as a present. A brāhmaṇa wrote charmed circles on pieces of birch-bark and left these in the sun [to dry]. [One of these] was carried by the wind into the opening of the flower that turned into a banana bunch. He [Dharmacandra] sent to the Persian king the present of fruits including this [banana bunch] in a box containing melted butter [as the preserver]. When the charmed circle was found inside the fruit, [the Persian king] became convinced of the use of black magic.

So he [the Persian king] destroyed *Magadha by the *Turuṣka army, ruined many temples and heavily damaged Śrī *Nalendra. Even the ordained monks fled away.

After this, *Dharmacandra passed away. He was succeeded by one of his nephews, who, however, submitted to the *Turuṣkas and remained powerless.

Buddhapakṣa,⁵ son of *Dharmacandra's maternal uncle, was the king of *Vārāṇasī. He sent a number of Sautrāntika ācārya-s to China.⁶ In return for this kindness, the Chinese king sent to king Buddhapakṣa presents of precious articles. These were carried by ten thousand persons, of whom one hundred carried gold.

With this wealth, he [Buddhapakṣa] pleased the kings, big and small, as well as the feudatory lords and chiefs of the western and central regions, mobilised them in a war against the Persian king and killed many Persian heroes including king *Khuni-ma-mpta.

King Buddhapakṣa sent orders to most of the kingdoms of Aparāntaka and of the west to reconstruct all the damaged temples and to invite the monks back. In Śrī *Nalendra

4. V 'print of a horse-hoof'. cf Sachau ii.11 for Al-beruni's account of similar stories.

5. saṅs-rgyas-phyogs. cf Bu-ston ii.119.

6. rgya-nag.

[Fol 49A] eightyfour centres of the Doctrine were established. Of these, seventyone were established by the king himself and the remaining ones by the queen and the ministers.

There lived then the later *Maticitra,⁷ who had direct vision of Mañjuśrī. He became the guru of the king. [The king] entertained the monks on top of the royal palace and fed the īrthika-s outside the gate. Thus he restored the Law that had been damaged before.

The nineteenth chapter containing the account of renewed hostility to the Doctrine and of its restoration.

7. maticitra phyi-ma-gcig. V n 'Perhaps the author or even the historians before him finding various legends about Mātṛceṭa, assume several persons instead of one. Apparently, there should not be any doubt that this later Mātṛceṭa is the same Aśvaghōṣa, who is referred to in the ancient Chinese biography. And thus, was the king Buddhapakṣa same as Vikramāditya, the liberator of India from the Indo-Scythians? But we do not find any reference in the Chinese histories that they rendered aid to the Indian kings, though it has been mentioned that during the first Han dynasty, the Chinese spent much on gifts. The reference to the first introduction of Buddhism into China after A.D. 64 is conjectural; it began to spread there in the fourth century.' But Takakusu (I-Tsing) p. xvii: Buddhism first introduced into China in A.D. 67, the date of the arrival of the first Indian śramaṇa-s,—Kāśyapa, Mātāṅga, etc—who were invited by the Chinese Emperor Ming-ti (A.D. 58-75).

CHAPTER 20

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF THE THIRD HOSTILITY
TO THE DOCTRINE AND OF ITS RESTORATION

Then, in the country of *Kṛṣṇarāja in the south, there lived an exponent of the Prajñā-pāramitā called ācārya *Mālikabuddhi. He established in the madhya-deśa twentyone big centres of the Doctrine, built one thousand caitya-s containing the images of deities, extensively propagated the Prajñā-pāramitā for twenty years and was at last murdered by the *Turuṣka robbers. His blood flowed in the form of milk, flowers came out from within his heart and filled the sky.

In the same country was born ācārya Muditābhabhadra,¹ whose words [lit. throat] were ornamented with thousands of sūtra-s, who acquired the twelve dhūta-guṇa-s² and attained the stage of anupattikadharmakṣānti. He also rebuilt the caitya-s previously damaged, surrounded each with ten new caitya-s and led all the householders and brāhmaṇa-s to the reverence [for the Buddha].

At that time there were many ordained monks in the madhya-deśa who did not properly observe the vows. [Fol 49B] He helped those who agreed to atone for their violation of the vows, while those who refused to do so were expelled by him. So [the expelled ones] became hostile to this great monk and started slandering him. Thus he felt worried and prayed to ārya Samantabhadra³ and received his direct vision. He prayed, 'Please take me to a place where I can work for the welfare of all living beings.'

1. V & S Muditābhabhadra, which occurs in S-ed. P-ed Muditābhabhadra.
2. sbyaṅs-ba'i-yon-tan-beu-gñis. D 939—talents or qualifications kept up, used or practised; ascetic practices. cf. I-Tsing (Takakusu) 56-57, 57n.
3. kun-tu-bzañ-po.

[Samantabhadra] said, 'Hold the corner of my robes.' The moment he held it, he reached Li-yul. Working there for the welfare of the living beings for many years, he passed away.

In these ways, the Doctrine was extensively spread for forty years.

*Kakutsiddha,⁴ a minister of the king,⁵ built a temple at Śrī *Nalendra. During its consecration he arranged for a great ceremonial feast for the people. At that time, two beggars with tīrthika views came to beg. The young naughty śramaṇera-s threw slops at them, kept them pressed inside door panels and set ferocious dogs on them. These two became very angry. One of them went on arranging for their livelihood and the other engaged himself to the sūrya-sādhanā.⁶

For nine years, he sat in a deep pit dug into the earth and pursued the sādhanā. Yet he failed to attain siddhi. So he wanted to come out of the pit.

His companion asked, 'Have you attained siddhi in the spell?' He said, 'Not yet.'

The other said, 'In spite of famine conditions all around, I have obtained livelihood for you with great difficulty. So, if you come out without acquiring mantra-siddhi, I shall immediately chop off your head.'

Saying this he brandished a sharp knife. This made him afraid and he continued in the sādhanā for three more years. Thus he attained siddhi through the endeavour of twelve years.

He performed a sacrifice (yajña)⁷ and scattered the charmed ashes all around. [Fol 50A] This immediately resulted in a miraculously produced fire. It consumed all the eightyfour temples, the centres of the Buddha's Doctrine.

The fire started burning the scriptural works that were kept in the *Dharmagañja of *Śrī *Nalendra, particularly in the big temples called *Ratnasāgara, *Ratnodadhi and *Ratnaraṇ-

4. P-cd Kakudasiddha (?). V Kakudasimha. Vidyabhusana HIL 516 gives the name as Kakudasiddha from Sum-pa.

5. S 'a kṣatriya minister of the king.' But V does not mention kṣatriya.

6. ñi-ma-sgrub-pa.

7. sbyin-sreg,

ḍaka,⁸ in which were preserved all the works of Mahāyāna piṭaka-s. At that time, from certain works kept in the upper floor of the nine-storeyed *Ratnodadhi temple, came out water to extinguish the fire. The works to which this water reached remained unburnt.

It is said that these [unburnt] works, on being examined later, were found to be works of the five esoteric tantra-s.⁹ According to others, these were works only on the Guhyasamāja. In any case, these works belonged to the class of *anuttara-tantra*¹⁰ and there is no difference of opinion on the Guhyasamāja being included in these.

Many temples in other places were also burnt and the two tīrthika-s, apprehending punishment from the king, escaped to *Ha-sa-ma [Assam] in the north. But they were themselves burnt by the self-kindled fire produced in their body by their sins.

The vastly learned monks living in all directions then assembled and wrote out the scriptural works from what remained of these in their memory as well as in the form of written works.

The temples damaged by the fire were reconstructed by king Buddhapakṣa, the brāhmaṇa *Śaṅku,¹¹ the brāhmaṇa Bṛhaspati¹² and many householders who were full of reverence.

Of the fifteen parts of the Mahāyāna piṭaka-s that came to the human world, [Fol 50B] two parts were destroyed during each of the two hostilities to the Doctrine that had taken place before this incident [i.e. four parts in all were previously destroyed], one part of these was lost without any act of hostility,

8. S-ed Ratnaraṇḍaka. S Ratnakaraṇḍaka. Vidyabhusana HIL 516, depending on Sum-pa, gives the name as Ratnarañjaka.

9. ? tantra-s of the insiders. The text has nah-rgyul-sde-lha. V tr 'five sections of the tantra-s of the "insiders" (? internal tantra-s).'

10. V anuttara-yoga.

11. Tg contains the Siddha-garuḍa-śāstra (rG lxxi.405) attributed to brāhṛṇa Śaṅku.

12. phur-bu. Tg contains four works attributed to brāhmaṇa Bṛhaspati--rG lxxi.396 ; 397 ; lxxvii-lxxx ; mDo cxxiii.25.

nine parts were destroyed by this hostile fire. Only one part of these now survives.

This [surviving part] includes the fortynine chapters of Ārya-ratnakūṭa-samāja,¹³ which originally contained one thousand chapters. Similarly survived thirty eight of the one thousand chapters of the Avatamsaka,¹⁴ only nine of the thousand chapters of the *Mahā-samāja*¹⁵ and only one small chapter viz. the *Tathāgata-hṛdaya*¹⁶ of the Laṅkāvatāra.¹⁷ These are only a few examples.

The twentieth chapter containing the account of the third hostility to the Doctrine and of its restoration.

13. 'phags-pa-dkon-mchog-brtsegs-pa-'dus-pa.

14. phal-bo-che. V Buddha-avatamsaka.

15. 'dus-pa-chen-po.

16. de-bshin-gśeḡs-pa'i-sñiñ-po. V 'heart of Tathāgata'.

17. laṅkāra-gśeḡs-pa.

CHAPTER 21

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF THE FINAL
ACTIVITIES OF KING BUDDHAPAKṢA AND OF THE PERIOD OF KING KARMAÇANDRA

Now, near the coast of the ocean, on the top of a hill in the country of *Oḍiviśa in the east, king Buddhapakṣa, in the latter part of his life, built a temple called Ratnagiri.¹ He prepared three copies of each of the scriptural works of the Mahāyāna and Hīnayāna and kept these in this temple. He established there eight great centres for the Doctrine and maintained² five hundred monks.

A monastery called Devagiri³ was built on the model of Ratnagiri on a hill on the sea coast near *Bhaṅgala.⁴ His [Buddhapakṣa's] minister built the temple there and the brāhmaṇa *Śaṅku arranged for [the copies] of the scriptural works. The brāhmaṇa Bṛhaspati provided it with all the articles of worship and the queen maintained the monks and the centre of the Doctrine.

Now about the brāhmaṇa *Śaṅku.

In *Puṅḍravardhana, which was situated between *Magadha and *Bhaṅgala, there lived a wealthy brāhmaṇa called *Saro along with his seven brothers. [Fol 51A] He tried to subdue the Nāgas by acquiring the spells of Mahādeva. But they could not be subdued. The entire brāhmaṇa family, inclusive of the seven brothers, died of the bite of poisonous snake.

The brāhmaṇa had a son named *Śaṅku. Out of love for him, his relatives kept a large number of mongoose on the ground floor of the building. Outside the building, they kept

1. rin-chen-ri-bo.

2. P-ed 'tshogs-pa (collected). S-ed 'tsho-ba (maintained). The latter reading followed.

3. lha'i-ri-bo.

4. V Baṅgala.

the animals called *śela-s⁵ that killed the snakes. On the top of the building, they kept a number of peacocks and thus ensured protection against the snakes. They tried also to master the spell as well as to obtain other articles to subdue the snakes.

After this, the Nāgas once appeared and made the loud sound : *phuṭ.⁶ This scared the peacocks which flew away. The *śela animals were driven into their holes by a terrible storm. A very lean snake scaled up the building by one of its corners, entered the room and bit *Śaṅku to death.

His wife⁷ took out the dead body, put it into a small raft and floated on the *Gaṅgā for three days, saying : 'Who can bring him back to life !'

During these three days, the shepherds [on the bank] jeered at her. Then appeared a woman, who uttered spell on some water, washed his body with it and brought him back to life.

Returning to his place, he enquired about what had been going on. He was told that the brāhmaṇa *Śaṅku had died seven days back and that all his household articles were being offered to the brāhmaṇa-s. He entered the house and, failing to believe what was happening, wondered if it was real or only a magic show. Thus he was afraid.

At last he realised what had happened and felt happy. Then [Fol 51B] he searched for spells to subdue the Nāgas. He once witnessed [the following] : A woman came to work in the field and uttered a spell. Suddenly there appeared a snake from where nobody knew and touched with its mouth the foot of her little son, who immediately died as it were. But when her

5. S śaila. S n : 'In the text, there is śela, which is evidently derived from the Sanskrit śaila. Yet I cannot ascertain which animal of the hill is here referred to.' But could it be a corrupt form of the Bengali word śeyāla (শয়াল) or śyāla (শ্যাল) ?

6. phutkāra ? See Monier-Williams 718.

7. cf the folklore of Behulā (Manasūmaṅgala), where also the name Śaṅku or Śaṅkara-gāruḍi occurs as an expert in the spell against snake.

work in the field was over, a snake appeared and the moment it bit the foot of the child, the child came back to life.⁸

Realising that she was a ḍākinī, [Śaṅku] fell at her feet and said, 'Teach me, please, the spell.'

'You are not fit to receive the spell and it is difficult to obtain the articles for the rite.' Though she refused thus, as he remained clinging to the earth and went on urging her, she consented.

The article required for the rite was eight palmful of thickened milk (kṣīra) of perfectly black bitch. After obtaining this, he asked for the spell. She chanted the charm a number of times and asked *Śaṅku to drink it.

Six handfuls of this filled his stomach and he could not drink any more. Then she said, 'If you fail to take this [remaining milk], the snake will kill you first and after that will kill many others.'

With this threat, she forced him to drink more. He swallowed another handful, but, with his best efforts, could not swallow the remaining handful. So the ḍākinī said, 'Did I not tell you at the very beginning that you were unfit for it? You can now subdue and bring under your control the seven classes of Nāgas. But you will not be able to do this with the Vāsuki-s.⁹ So you are going to die in the future of the bite of Vāsuki-nāga.'

Wielding great magic power, the brāhmaṇa then became very strong. He commanded the Nāgas to do whatever he liked, both good and evil. [Fol 52A] Everyday he arranged for the recital of the scriptures by the brāhmaṇa-s, offered them gifts and performed other pious acts. Every night, he used to go to the pleasure garden and satisfy the five-fold lust in the company of the female Nāgas. He built with aṣṭa-dhātu* a temple near *Puṇḍravardhana of bhaṭṭārikā āryā Tārā-devī and elaborately worshipped there the Three Jewels.

There was among the female Nāgas an attendant of the

8. of the washer-woman Netā in the folklore of Bebulā (Manasūmaṅgala).

9. nor-rgyas.

Nāga king Vāsuki. The brāhmaṇa did not know of her identity and remained careless. She bit him on his forehead and escaped.

Then [the brāhmaṇa] told his servant, 'Go and fetch "white cuttle-fish bone."¹⁰ While returning with it, you must not look back, must not listen to others and must not speak.' With these instructions, he sent the servant with the enchanted material for swift transport.

As he [the servant] was coming back, somebody called him from behind. He did not respond at first.

'I am a physician. I can cure the diseases and also cases of poisoning',—being thus told, he looked back and saw a brāhmaṇa carrying a medicine chest, who said, 'Show me the medicine you are carrying.'

He [the servant] showed him the white cuttle-fish bone. Immediately the brāhmaṇa threw it on the ground and vanished.

After meeting *Śaṅku, he [the servant] reported this. [Śaṅku] said, 'Bring it along with the earth on which it has fallen.'

But he failed to collect it, because when he reached the place it was already flooded by the sea caused by the magic power of the Nāgas. Thus died *Śaṅku.

Such a¹¹ brāhmaṇa *Śaṅku built a stone pillar called the Garuḍa-stambha¹² in Khagendra in the south. Cases of poisoning were cured immediately after offering worship to it. [Fol 52B] Drinking or bathing in the water with which this pillar was washed, effected cure of leprosy.¹³

Now about brāhmaṇa Bṛhaspati.

As he was an adept in the *Kurukullā¹⁴ spell, the king asked him 'Show me *Takṣaka, the king of the Nāgas.' He threw a stone into the sea after chanting the *Kurukullā spell. Then the sea started boiling and at its centre emerged the dome

10. rgya-mtsho'i-lbu-ba, lit. sea-foam. See Monier-Williams 718: 'supposed to be indurated foam of the sea.'

11. de-lta-bu (similar). V tr 'such a brāhmaṇa Śaṅku.'

12. nam-mkha'-ldiñ-gi-mchod-sdon.

13. klu-nad, lit. nāga-roga. D 45.

14. V Kurukullī.

of the palace of the Nāgas. The king along with his attendants saw this. But the Nāga could not be shown. [By the mere sight of the dome] many men and cattle died of the Nāga poisoning, and everything disappeared again into the sea.

This brāhmaṇa Bṛhaspati built many temples of the Buddha in the city of *Kaṭaka in *Oḍiviśa and he arranged for the entertainment of a large number of saṃgha-s.

King Buddhapakṣa. After him *Karmacandra, the nephew of *Dharmacandra. During their time came ācārya Rāmapriya,¹⁵ ācārya Aśvaghoṣa the junior,¹⁶ Rāhulamitra¹⁷ the disciple of Rāhulabhadra and his [Rāhulamitra's] disciple Nāgamitra.¹⁸ They spread the Mahāyāna. However, from the commentary on *Stotra-śata-pañcāśatka*¹⁹ now current in Tibet, it is clear that the commentator ācārya Rāmapriya²⁰ came after Dignāga and others. Therefore, [the ācārya] of this period had similarity only in name with [the ācārya] of that period.

The twentyfirst chapter containing the account of the period of the final activities of king Buddhapakṣa and of the period of king Karmacandra.

15. dga'-byed-sñan-pa. V Nandapriya.

16. rta-dbyaṅs-chuñ-ba.

17. sgra-gcan-'dshin-bśes-gñen. Tg contains a work attributed to śiddha mahācārya Rāhulaśrīmitra—rG xxxiii.22.

18. klu'i-bśes-gñen. Tg contains Kāyatrayāvātāramukha-nāma (mDo xxix 1) attributed to Nāgamitra. Another work (mDo xxxiii.83 & lxi.8) is a commentary by ācārya Jñānacandra on a work by Nāgamitra, which, however, is not traced in Tg.

19. Śatapañcāśatka-nāma-stotra-ṭikā (bsTod.39) by bhikṣu Rāmapriya.

20. V Nandapriya.

CHAPTER 22

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF
'BROTHERS ĀRYA ASAṄGA'

[ASAṄGA & VASUBANDHU]

After this, about the time of king *Karmacandra.

Gambhīrapakṣa,¹ son of king Buddhapakṣa, established his capital in Pañcāla.² He ruled for a period of about forty years.

[Fol 53A] In Kashmir, *Turuṣka Mahāsammata, son of king *Turuṣka,³ lived for one hundred and fifty years. He had a vision of Krodha-amṛta-kuṇḍali.⁴ He also ruled for about one hundred years. He brought under his rule Kashmir, Thogar, *Gajni, etc. He used to worship the Jewels. Specially in *Gajni, he built a great caitya containing the tooth [relic] of the Buddha.⁵ He employed bhikṣu-s and bhikṣuṇi-s, upāsaka-s and upāsikā-s—a thousand each—for maintaining the religious services of the caitya. He built an immensely large number of various types of images.

Bhikṣu *Jīvākara and upāsaka Dharmavardhana,⁶ along with

1. zab-mo'i-phyogs. cf Bu-ston ii.119.
2. lha-len.
3. cf Bu-ston ii.119. V & S 'Mahāsammata, son of king Turuṣka.'
4. khro-bo-bdud-rtsi-'khyil-ba. S Krodhāmṛtāvarta. V n 'Kg vol. sha fol 220 has Amṛta-kuṇḍali-āgama.'
5. saṅs-rgyas-kyi-tshems. cf prophecy quoted by Bu-ston ii.110: 'In the northern border-land, in the village Hīṅgala, the teeth of the Buddha will be greatly worshipped and many monks endowed with the highest morality will appear.'
6. chos-'phel. cf prophecy quoted by Bu-ston ii.110: 'In the north, in the place called Vistaravatī many brāhmaṇa-s and householders devoted to the Doctrine are to appear ... And in that place, a devotee of the laity called Dharmavardhana (chos-'phel) possessed of miraculous powers will likewise appear. In the north, moreover, a Mahāyānist monk called Jīvaka ('tsho-byed) will arise. He will restore the monuments of the Buddha, that will have undergone destruction and richly decorate them with gold and the like.'

five thousand bhikṣu-s and five thousand upāsaka-s meditated on the significance of the Prajñā-pāramitā and enjoyed the bliss of Tathāgata-sādhana. [Among them] hundreds of bhikṣu-s and upāsaka-s attained ṛddhi. The practice of the ten virtues also became extensive.

After twelve years of king Gambhīrapakṣa's reign, king *Karmacandra passed away. His son *Vṛkṣacandra ascended the throne. Since he was not very powerful, *Jaleruha, king of *Oḍiśa [Oḍiśa] conquered most of the eastern region.

The period of the rule of these kings synchronised with the period of the second half of the life of mahā-bhikṣu *Arhat,⁷ with the period of ārya Asaṅga's⁸ activities for the welfare of the living beings and with the period of the earlier career of ācārya Vasubandhu,⁹ Buddhadāsa¹⁰ and Saṃghadāsa.¹¹

7. cf prophecy quoted by Bu-ston ii.112—

'At the time which is to come
A monk called Arhat is to appear.
He is to know the meaning of the secret charms,
Become versed in the tantra-s and greatly learned.
By uttering the charm of the Yakṣa-s
He will secure a precious vessel.'

8. thogs-med.

9. dbyig-gñen. Bu-ston ii.145 gives the following meaning of the name : he 'was possessed of the wealth (yasu) of the Highest Wisdom and, having propagated the Doctrine out of mercy, had become the friend (bandhu) of the living beings.'

10. sañs-rgyas-'bañs. Watters i.353f : Yuan-chuang mentions one Buddhadāsa as the author of the Mahāvībhāṣā; but Watters comments—'as this work was a book of the Sarvāstivādin school of the Hīnayāna, its author cannot have been the Buddhadāsa, who was a contemporary of Vasubandhu and a disciple of his brother Asaṅga. Very little seems to be known about any śāstra writer with the name Buddhadāsa and there is no author with this name in the catalogues of Buddhist books known in China and Japan.' Neither any work is attributed to him in Tg.

11. dge-'dun-'bañs. Tg does not contain any work by Saṃghadāsa, but contains two works by his disciples vajrayānācārya Guhyadatta (rG lxxi.27) and śrī ārya Viśākhadeva or Sagadeva (mDo lxxix.1 : Vinaya-kārikā or Puṣpamālā).

[Fol 53B] Ācārya Nāgamitra lived for a long time. His disciple was Saṃgharakṣita.¹²

Not that the esoteric Yoga and Anuttara Tantras were not prevalent among the fortunate people before their time. Shortly after the spread of the Mahāyāna doctrine, there were a hundred thousand vidyādhara-s. Most of them, like those of *Urgyana who attained the stage of the vidyādhara, attained it by the help of the anuttara-mārga. However [during this earlier period] mantra-yāna was preached to groups of hundred or thousand fortunate people by Guhyapati¹³ and others who suddenly appeared before them. They attained the rainbow-bodies and left nothing in the form of preaching.

People of the earlier generations had the capacity of tenaciously keeping the secret. Therefore, nobody could know them as practising the Guhya-mantra so long as they did not attain the vidyādhara-siddhi. All those who attained *mahā-ṛddhi*¹⁴ used to vanish into the sky. Only after this, others wondered : 'Ah, so they were practising the mantra-s !' That is why, there was nothing in the form of teachings imparted in the preceptor-disciple tradition.

Beginning with the period of the spread of Mahāyāna, the study of the rituals and spells of the kriyā and caryā. Tantra was quite considerable. However, because these were being studied under extreme secrecy, outside the guhya-mantracāri-s themselves, nobody knew who was practising what. Therefore, they could perform the rites and attain siddhi without any difficulty.

[Fol 54A] Therefore, it is clearly well-known that the tradition of teachings coming down in preceptor-disciple succession began from the time of *Saraha and Nāgārjuna 'the father and son'¹⁵ [i.e. Nāgārjuna and Āryadeva] up to siddha *Śabari-pā.¹⁶ Before this, no ācārya is known to have entered

12. dge-'dun-sruñ-ba.

13. gsaṅ-ba'i-bdag-po.

14. V mahā-māyā.

15. V tr 'Saraha, the teacher of Nāgārjuna with his pupils.'

16. See Supplementary Note 15.

the tradition of transmitting anuttara guhya-mantra.¹⁷ Though in the *Caryā-saṃgraha-pradīpa*¹⁸ are mentioned *Padmavajra¹⁹ and *Kambala-pā²⁰ as the original authorities [of the mantrayāna], the former did not obviously work for the welfare of the living beings in ārya-deśa and I have not come across any account of the latter.²¹ Hence it is said that there exists practically nothing in the form of the commentary on the *anuttara-tantra*²² before what was written on the anuttara-śāstra-s by the Great Brāhmaṇa,²³ Nāgārjuna 'the father and son' and others. Besides, even these treatises are not as well-known as the collection of the Mādhyamika śāstra-s.²⁴ These were entrusted only to Nāgabodhi, who attained the vidyādhara-sihāna and these were made extensively available later on during the period of

17. V anuttara-yoga.

18. spyod-bśdus-sgron-me—Tg mDo xxxi.23 & mDo xxxiii.2 by Dīpaṅkara-śrī-jñāna.

19. On the view of Padmavajra being one of the earliest teachers of tantra, see BA i.356ff—a view sought to be vigorously refuted by Tār in Fol 136Af. Tg contains a number of Tāntrika works attributed to ācārya mahāpaṇḍita śrī Padmavajra (rG xxiv.5), siddhācārya Padmavajra (rG xi), mahācārya Padmavajra (rG xlviii.115); in certain other works in Tg, the author Padmavajra is only a synonym of Saroruhavajra (rG xxi.1; xxi.2; etc). In the list of the 84 siddhācārya-s, we come across one Pañkaja-pā—a disciple of Nāgārjuna; another siddhācārya called Saraha-pā belonged to the period of king Dharmapāla—see R. Sankrityayana Purātattva-nivandhāvali 147ff.

20. The usual Tibetan form of the name is Lva-va-pā (see BA i.362). Lva-va means blanket, kambala. He was thus called because he 'used to wear only one piece of blanket as his raiment'—D 1203. In Fol 96B, Tār relates how Lva-va-pā and Saroruhavajra brought the Hevajra Tantra. In the account of the 84 siddhācārya-s, Kambala-pā is mentioned as belonging to Oḍviśa, as being a disciple of Vajraghaṇṭa and as being preceptor of the sidha king Indrabhūti—see R. Sankrityayana op. cit. 162.

21. Assuming the identity of Lva-va-pā and Kambala-pā, this statement of Tār is strange, because in Fol 96Bf he gives an account of Lva-va-pā. Does Tār think the two to have been different?

22. V anuttara yoga.

23. i.e. Saraha or Rāhula.

24. V madhyama-vidyāgaṇa.

king *Deva-pāla and his son. Hence the absence of any remote succession accounts for the purity of the Ārya and *Buddhakapāla*²⁵ [Tantras], as in Tibet there is no corruption of the works in circulation [because these are copies from] the sealed texts.²⁶

From then on, for two hundred years the Tantras of kriyā and caryā were extensively propagated and openly practised. However, before the attainment of siddhi, nobody openly practised the yoga and anuttara-yoga Tantras. Still, these were more extensively spread and various commentaries [Fol 54B] were composed on these, compared to the earlier period. Some great and famous siddha-s appeared at this time. At this time also lived ācārya Paramāśva,²⁷ mahā-ācārya *Lui-pā,²⁸ siddha *Ca-rba-bi-pā²⁹ and others. Their account is clearly given in other works.

25. In Tg several works on the Buddhakapāla-tantra are attributed to Saraha alias Rāhulabhadra : rG xxiv.4 ; 7 ; 9.
26. V tr 'Here is the reason why the (account of) succession of Anuttara-yoga known under the name of Sacred Sections—of Buddhakapāla and others—appeared separately and not at a very early period. It does not matter, for example, as to what (happened) in Tibet, to the pure (yañ-dag-snañ-gi-chos) teaching and the uncorrupted books found out in treasures.'
27. In Tg Śrī-paramasvarūpa-mahāsukhapada-vajra-nāma-samādhi (rG lxxiv.27) is attributed to ācārya Paramāśva.
28. S n 'His name is written as Lu-yi-pā, but more often as Lūi-pā and he has the surname ñā-ito-ba, fish-belly, perhaps equal to matsyodara. This may recall to one the names Matsyendra, Matsyanātha, Mīnanātha—on which names I refer to the St. Petersburg Dictionary. The last name is mentioned there besides Carpaṭi, many works by whom are preserved in Tg.' V quotes this note and adds : 'In the account of the 84 siddha-s included in Thob-yig, Lūi-pā is the first. He attained the mahā-mudrā siddhi by studying the Cakrasaṃvara system. On the bank of the Gaṅgā in Baṅgala, he lived by eating the intestine of fishes left by the fishermen. This is how the name Lūi-pā has been derived.' For works attributed to Lui-pā, see Supplementary Note 21.
29. V & S Carpaṭipāda, In Tg the Lokeśvara-stotra (rG lxxviii.29),

Now, about ācārya *Arhat. During the period of king *Karmacandra he practised asceticism and became a master of the three piṭaka-s. Engaging himself in the mahā-koṣa-kalāśa-sādhana,³⁰ he gradually attained success. In *Vārāṇasī, he discovered from under the earth a jar one yojana deep and full of gems. With this he used to provide tens of thousands of monks.

He once forgot to keep the jar protected and, during the night, the yakṣa-s stole [the gems] away. In the morning, opening it for the provision of the monks, he found it empty. This monk, with his spells and great miraculous power, summoned the great gods like Brahmā and others and started coercing them to force the yakṣa-s to appear and thus got the treasure jar refilled. People knew of the coming of the gods from signs like the shaking of the earth, shower of flowers and the fragrance continuing for seven days.

He entertained the monks for about forty years. He alone could see the treasure jar, while others saw him only digging the ground.³¹

Now, the account of 'Brothers ārya Asaṅga.'

In the past, during the time of king *Gauḍavardhana, there lived a monk with a mastery of the three piṭaka-s. He followed ārya Avalokiteśvara as his tutelary deity. He once had a difference with another monk, deeply wounded his sentiments and started arguing with him. [Fo] 55A He arrogantly abused the other and said, 'You are a person with a female Ārya-avalokiteśvarasya-carpaṭi-racita-stotra (rG lxviii.31) and Sarva-siddhikara-nāma (rG lxxxvi.8) are attributed to him, where his name occurs as Ca-ra-pa-tri, Car-pa-ti'i-pāda and Carya-ḍi-pā. V n 'he is not mentioned among the 84 siddha-s'. But this is not correct. In the list of the 84 siddha-s, Carpaṭi occurs as the 59th one: he is also called Pacari and is described as the resident of Campā, a Kāhār by caste and the preceptor of Mīna-pā—see R. Sankrityayana op. cit. 152 & 200.

30. gter-gyi-bum-pa-chen-po. D 525 gter, the wishing pot, which yields whatever precious object is sought. cf the prophecy quoted in Note 7 of this chapter.

31. V n 'S remarks that this legend has been taken from the Mūla-tantra.'

brain.' Ārya Avalokiteśvara then told him, 'As the result of this act of yours, you are going to have repeated births as a woman. However, I shall continue to be your kalyāṇa-mitra, so long as you do not attain enlightenment.'

When reborn as a woman during the time of king Buddha-pakṣa, she was brāhmaṇī Prakāśāśīlā.³² Possessing as she did the memory of the past life, she used to understand from her very early age the collection of the sūtra-s and the abhidharma-s by mere reading or listening. She always worshipped ārya Avalokiteśvara, was instinctively placed in the path of the ten-fold virtue and had the inner capacity of a bodhisattva.

However, it will be a mistake to believe that she was a nun.³³ On growing up she united with a kṣatriya and gave birth to a son with auspicious marks. She performed the rites for making the son keenly intelligent.³⁴

As the son grew up, he received from his mother sound instructions in eighteen branches of learning like writing, arithmetic, the eight-fold examination,³⁵ grammar, debate, medicine, fine arts, etc, and he became highly proficient in all these.

When he enquired about the profession appropriate for his birth, [his mother told him], 'You are not born, my son, to follow the profession of your birth. You are born for spreading the Doctrine. Therefore, take up ordination and devote yourself to learning and meditation.'

32. Bu-ston ii.137 gives the name as gsal-ba'i-tshul-khrims, reconstructed by Obermiller as Prasannaśīlā. Tār does not mention Asaṅga's place of birth. According to Yuan-chuang, the two brothers were natives of Gandhāra—Watters i.357.

33. V & S tr 'However, her wish to become a nun was not fulfilled.' This is perhaps because of taking the word 'dod in the sense of wish, though the word also means 'to believe'. Besides, 'khrul-pa in the text clearly means mistake.

34. blo-rno-ba'i-cho-ga. cf Bu-ston ii.137 'The mother drew on their tongues the letter ā and performed all the other rites in order to secure for them an acute intellectual faculty.'

35. brtag-pa-brgyad. J 225.

Accordingly, he went in for ordination and spent a year serving the upādhyāya, ācārya and the saṃgha.

[Fol 55B] He spent five years in studying [the scriptures] after receiving the upasampadā. Every year, he memorised a hundred thousand śloka*-s and grasped their significance. Thus, it was not difficult for him to have a general understanding of the three piṭaka-s and most of the Mahāyāna sūtra-s. However, finding it difficult to understand the Prajñā-pāramitā-sūtra without being confused by its verbal repetitions,³⁶ he concentrated on having a vision of the tutelary deity. For this purpose, he received abhiṣeka from ācārya *Arhat,³⁷ about whom we have discussed before. The flower offered at this time reached jina Ajita [Maitreyanātha]. However, the nature of the Tantra and the maṇḍala of the abhiṣeka are not clear, though the latter appears to have been the māyājāla-maṇḍala, because this ācārya practised the *maitreya-sādhana*³⁸ with the māyājāla-tantra.³⁹ This is said by [my] paṇḍita teacher.⁴⁰

Then in a cave of the *Gur-pa-parvata,⁴¹ which is mentioned in the scriptures as the *Kukkuṭapāda-parvata,⁴² he spent three years propitiating ārya Maitreya. But he felt disheartened by the absence of any sign [of success] and came out [of the cave].⁴³ He noticed that in the course of a long time the stones were worn out by birds' wings, though these wings touched the stones only when in the morning the birds, which had their nests on the rocks, went out in search of food

36. brjod-bya-ma-zlos.

37. According to Yuan-chuang, Asaṅga began as a Mahīśāsaka and afterwards became a Mahāyānī—Watters i.357.

38. see Tg Ārya-maitreya-sādhana (rG lxxi.345) by ārya Asaṅga.

39. Tg contains a considerable number of works on Māyājāla-tantra—see Lalou 39.

40. bla-ma paṇḍita. Tār apparently refers to some of his Indian teacher, without mentioning his name.

41. S n 'According to Yuan-chuang, the mountain was called Gurupāda, because Kāśyapa lived there.' See note 9, ch. 2.

42. cf Bu-ston ii.137.

43. Ib. ii.137f.

and once when in the evening they returned to their nests. 'So, I have lost assiduity'—thinking thus, he continued the propitiation for three more years.

Similarly, he came out again. Noticing the stones eroded by drops of water, he propitiated for another three years and again came out. This time, he saw an old man rubbing a piece of iron with soft cotton and saying, 'I am going to prepare fine needles out of this. I have already prepared so many needles by rubbing iron with cotton.' And he showed a box full of needles.

[Fol 56A] So he propitiated for three more years. In this way, twelve years passed by ; but he saw no sign of success. Disappointed, he came out and went away.

In a city he came across a bitch, infested with worms on the lower half of her body, furiously scratching her wound.⁴⁴ The sight made him full of compassion. He thought : 'If these worms are not removed, the bitch is going to die. But if removed, the worms are going to die. So I am going to place the worms on a piece of flesh cut off from my own body.'

He brought a shaving razor from the city called *Acintya,⁴⁵ placed his begging bowl and staff on a sitting mat, slashed the thigh of his own body and, with his eyes shut, stretched his hands to catch the worms. Failing to reach the worms, he opened his eyes and saw there neither the worms nor the bitch. He saw instead bhṛṅgāraka Maitreya with the halo of lakṣaṇa-s and vyañjana-s. To him he said with tears flowing from his eyes :

'Oh my father, my unique refuge,
I have exerted myself in a hundred different ways,
But nevertheless no result was to be seen.
Wherefore have the rain-clouds and the might of the ocean,

44. The text has mi (man). S tr 'biting men' and V tr 'licking the people'. But this word may be a corruption of rma (wound), which seems to give a better sense. cf Bu-ston ii.138 'As he was about to go away, he saw a dog ; the lower part of its body was eaten by worms, but the upper part (was still free) and it was barking and biting.'

45. Bu-ston ii.138 also mentions the city as Acintya.

Come only now, when, tormented by violent pain
I am no longer thirsting ?⁴⁶

[Maitreya] answered,

‘Though the king of the gods sends down rain,
A bad seed is unable to grow
Though the Buddhas may appear [in this world]
He who is unworthy cannot partake of the bliss.’⁴⁷

‘I have been throughout present near you’, [continued Maitreya] ‘but remaining under obscurations as you did by your own karma, you have failed to see me. The obscuration of your sin is now removed by the accumulated power of your previous repetition of the charm along with your present great compassion as expressed in the rigorous form of cutting off the flesh of your own body. That is why, you can now see me. Now, take me up on your shoulder and carry me to the city to show me to the people there.’

When he was being thus shown, others saw nothing. [Fol 56B] Only a woman wine-seller saw him carry a pup. As a result, she later became enormously rich. A poor porter saw only the toes. As a result, he reached the stage of samādhi and attained sādhāraṇa-siddhi. The ācārya immediately attained the srotah-anugata-nāma-samādhi.⁴⁸

[Maitreya asked,] ‘What do you desire ?’

‘I have the desire to spread the Mahāyāna.’

‘Then catch hold of the corner of my robe’.

The moment he [the ācārya] caught it, he reached the Tuṣita. In the older marginal note on the *Bhūmi-s*⁴⁹ it is said

46. This translation of the passage is taken from Obermiller, Bu-ston ii.138.

47. Abhisamaya-alaṅkāra viii.10. Tr Obermiller—Bu-ston ii.138.

48. chos-rgyun-gyi-tiñ-ñe-'dsin. See D 431. V ‘samādhi of stream of faith.’

49. sa-sde, an abbreviated form of referring to Asaṅga’s work on the Yogacaryā-bhūmi in five divisions, viz. Bahubhūmika-vastu, Nirṇaya-saṃgraha, Vastu-saṃgraha, Paryāya-saṃgraha and Vivarāṇa-saṃgraha—see Bu-ston i.54ff. For works of Asaṅga, see Supplementary Note 21.

that he spent six months in Tuṣita. According to some others, he spent fifteen human years in Tuṣita. Different views like these are current. However, according to the popular belief prevalent in India and Tibet, he spent fifty human years [in Tuṣita]. This calculation of fifty years appears to be based on counting every half year as one year, for the Indians say that he actually spent twentyfive years there.⁵⁰

In Tuṣita, he listened to the Mahāyāna doctrine in its entirety from Ajitanātha [Maitreya-nātha] and learnt the real significance of the whole collection of sūtra-s. Then he listened to the 'Five Works of Maitreya'.⁵¹ While doing this he attained samādhi on each aspect of these Five-fold Teachings separately at the very moment he listened to it.

After this, when he returned to the earth⁵² and worked for the welfare of all living beings, he was already in possession of *paracitta-abhijñāna*⁵³ and he could, along with his attendants, cover in a day—or even in one prahara—the distance which ordinarily took one month or half a month to cover.⁵⁴

Though over ninety years old,⁵⁵ he remained at the same youthful stage when he first received the vision of Maitreya. He had thirty-two auspicious marks on his body [Fol 57A] and he clearly acquired the quality of reaching the stage of 'the ārya who attained the bhūmi'.⁵⁶ 'He had no selfish idea even in dreams and he practised meditation in all forms. He

50. V tr 'The Indians affirm that considering a year as half year, he spent 25 years'.

51. byams-pa'i-chos-līa. Bu-ston i.53f; these five works are the Sūtrālamkāra, Madhyānta-vibhaṅga, Dharma-dharmatā-vibhaṅga, Uttaratantra and Abhisamaya-alaṅkāra. See also Supplementary Note 22.

52. For Yuan-chuang's account, see Watters i.355ff.

53. mñon-śes D 365.

54. ref. to dūratva-gāmi-siddhi.

55. V n 'According to the Mūla-tantra, he was born 900 years after the death of Buddha and lived for 150 years. But if a year is taken to be a half, it will come to be less.'

56. sa-thob-pa'i-'phags-pa. Though the text has yon-tan-mñon-gyur (lit. the sixth bhūmi called abhimukti—D 1257), the passage is translated differently, because Tār shortly says that Asaṅga reached the third bhūmi.

was very tender, humble and, at the same time, extremely firm. He had a sharp intellect for defeating those who followed the wrong doctrines or the wrong practices. He is to be considered as one who reached the third bhūmi,⁵⁷ because he followed the principles in their purity like 'Having no satiation in listening [to the Doctrine] and preaching the Doctrine without consideration of material benefit'.⁵⁸

This ācārya built a vihāra in the forest called *Veluvana⁵⁹ in *Magadha. Residing in it, he used to preach the profound significance of the Mahāyāna doctrine to eight disciples who observed the moral vows and were vastly learned. All of them attained kṣānti,⁶⁰ acquired the miraculous power of attracting the public veneration and were vastly learned in the sūtra-s. Hence, the place became famous as the Dharmāṅkura-vihāra.⁶¹

In this place, he put in written form the Five Works of Maitreya. Here he also wrote most of his treatises⁶² like the Abhidharma-samuccaya,⁶³ the Mahāyāna-saṃgraha,⁶⁴ the Five

57. sa-gsum-pa, i.e. the third bhūmi called 'od-byed-pa or prabhākari—D 1257. cf Bu-ston ii.140f. V n 'Buddhism divides Bodhisattvas (just like arhat-s) into learners and non-learners, the former pass through ten stages called bhūmi-s. The third stage referred to is prabhākari.'

58. *thos-pas-mi-homs-ñid-dah-ni |
zaiñ-ziñ-med-par-chos-sbyin-dah ||*

59. V & S Piluvana, which occurs in S-ed. P-ed Veluvana. cf Watters i.354.

60. bzod-pa—D 1112.

61. chos-kyi-myu-gu'i-dgon-pa. S n Dharmāṅkura-aranya. But dgon-pa means both monastery and wilderness—D 275. V n 'Dharmāṅkura-aranya. According to Yuan-chuang, it was located in the east of Ayodhyā, in Prayāga, in an āmra-forest.'

62. See Supplementary Note 21.

63. V n 'chos-mñon-pa-kun-las-btus-pa (Tg mDo lvi.2). It is also called higher one, as distinguished from the Abhidharma of Vasubandhu or the lower one (mñon-pa-goh-'og). Here ārya Asaṅga wanted to employ the Hīnayāna teaching for the Mahāyāna. That is why the eight treatises are presented with their titles changed. The contents constitute an abridgement of the first two sections of the Yogacaryā-bhūmi.'

64. theg-pa-chen-po-bsdus-pa. Tg mDo lvi.1. V n 'Abridgement of Mahāyāna based on the Sandhinirmocana. It explains the ten qualities of the words of Buddha.' cf Bu-ston i.56.

Bhūmi-s,⁶⁵ the exposition of the Abhisamaya-alamkāra.⁶⁶

After this, under the patronage of king Gambhīrapakṣa⁶⁷ the monks of the four directions assembled in the monastery of *U-sma-pu-ri⁶⁸ [Uṣmapurī] in the city of *Sa-ga-ri⁶⁹ in the near-west.⁷⁰ In this assembly, ārya Aṣaṅga delivered many sermons according to the understanding of each. He expounded the three piṭaka-s of the śrāvaka-s and the collection of about five hundred Mahāyāna-sūtra-s. [Fol 57B] For leading everybody to the ultimate truth, he introduced to them the Mahāyāna views. The number of those whose knowledge was enriched by the understanding of the sūtra-s reached beyond a thousand.

Though the Mahāyāna had extensively spread in the early period, with the passage of time the capacity to understand it became feeble. It [also] suffered by the three hostilities⁷¹ to it. At the time of the appearance of this ācārya, though there were many monks following the Mahāyāna, there was none to understand the Mahāyāna fully. Many of them could recite a few sūtra-s, though without understanding their real significance. As the result of the preaching of the Doctrine there by the ācārya himself and his eight foremost disciples,⁷² the

65. V 'Yogacaryā-bhūmi in five sections.' V n 'In all 45,000 śloka-s in 150 chapters. The five sections are: 1) Yogacaryā-bhūmi itself, 2) Systematic exposition explaining the essence of existence, 3) a survey of the fundamentals of the Sūtra-s and Vinaya, 4) Terminologies and 5) Explanations.'

66. No commentary on Abhisamaya-alamkāra by Asaṅga is traced in Tg. Haribhadra, in his introductory verse of the Abhisamayālamkāra (mDo vi.1) refers to Asaṅga's commentary on Abhisamayālamkāra called the Tattvaviniścaya, but Tsoñ-kha-pa does not accept this as Asaṅga's work—see Obermiller Bu-ston ii.140 n.

67. zab-mo-phyogs.

68. V Uṣmapura.

69. V '? Sāgar, Saugar ?'

70. V 'not far from the west (of India).'

71. V 'three-fold enmities (to the Doctrine),' cf Bu-ston ii.136-7.

72. Yuan-chuang mentions Buddhasiṃha as 'a great scholar, who was a friend and disciple of Asaṅga'—Watters i.358.

Mahāyāna, which once declined, was again spread in all directions and acquired fame.⁷³

King Gambhīrapakṣa used then to recite the Prajñā-pāramitā-sūtra everyday.⁷⁴ He thought: This ācārya is famed as an ārya and as capable of reading others' thoughts. If this is true, I shall also praise his qualities. If, however, this is false, people are being deceived and hence I should make him humble by challenging him publicly.—Thinking thus, he consulted about five hundred of his trusted men, inclusive of his ministers and the brāhmaṇa-s.⁷⁵

In the courtyard of his palace, he invited this ācārya and his disciples to a public gathering and offered them food and robes lavishly. He kept concealed within a room a black buffalo with a whitewash on it. He filled with filth a golden jar, put honey on its top, covered it up with a piece of cloth and took it up on his hands.

He asked, 'What is there in that room? What am I holding in my hands?'

[FoI 58A] [The ācārya] said what these actually were.

'Even persons of petty wisdom are found to have the little power of knowing what is kept concealed. But can he read the thoughts of others?'—Thinking thus, the king [mentally] devised six questions in all. Three of these were related to the words and three to the significance of the Prajñā-pāramitā-sūtra. He mentally questioned the ācārya about these. The ācārya offered correct replies and in accordance with these composed small works like the Tri-svabhāva-nirdeśa.⁷⁶

The three questions related to the words were :

1. 'Since, to the question, "What is referred to by the word bodhisattva?" it is replied, "The bodhisattva is not something

73. V tr 'The news spread everywhere that the Mahāyāna, which once declined, was again spread in all directions.'

74. S tr 'used to listen to the recital of (Prajñā-pāramitā-sūtra).' The text has kha-ton-đu-byed-do, 'to read with devotion'—D 694.

75. V tr 'He consulted (his) ministers, brāhmaṇa-s and five hundred trusted men.'

76. In Tg, Tri-svabhāva-nirdeśa (mDo lviii.4) is attributed to Vasubandhu.

visible"—is this not useless as a definition ?"⁷⁷

2. 'To what is applied the analogy of a huge bird—as huge as covering five hundred yojana-s ?'

3. 'What is meant by "the boundary with an unseen destination"—when, without seeing the sign of the hill or the forest, it is said that the sea is very near ?'

To these three [the answers were] :

The first is indicative of the adhyātma-śūnyatā [which, being internal, is invisible like the bodhisattva].

The second is indicative of the great power of pious acts.

The third is indicative of the mahā-dharma-uttama [i.e. the unseen limit which, when crossed, the prṭhak-jana becomes an ārya].

The three questions related to significance were :

1. Does the *ālaya-vijñāna*⁷⁸ objectively exist ?⁷⁹
2. When it is said that everything is nature-less (a-svabhāva), does it not imply that even nature-lessness is without its own nature (svabhāva) ?
3. When it is said that emptiness (śūnyatā) itself does not make everything empty, what is meant by the emptiness which does not make everything empty and by the cause of not making empty ?

[His answers were]:

First, it [i.e. the ālaya-vijñāna] has relative [pragmatic] reality (saṃvṛti satya) but no absolute reality (pāramārthika satya).⁸⁰

Secondly, the nature-less is conceived in three ways. Therefore, what is nature-less is again divided into two, namely as having its own nature and as having no such nature.

Thirdly, [Fol 58B] by the emptiness of that which cannot make everything empty is simply meant the concept of emptiness itself. By the cause of [making everything empty] is meant the negation of any rule according to which that which was

77. V tr 'is it not one of the undefined theories ?'

78. S-ed kun-śes-rnam-par-śes-pa. S suggests that it should have been kun-gshi-rnam-par-śes-pa, which actually occurs in P-ed.

79. V tr 'Does the universal cause (ālaya) exist as an object or not ?'

80. V tr 'Relatively, this is the thing ; but absolutely this does not constitute the concept (idea) in the cognitions of the mind.'

previously existing ceases later to have its existence. Thus is refuted the view that something previously existing ceases later to have existence.⁸¹

In these ways, he answered [the three] questions relating to significance.

This amazed the king and the assembled people. Thus making the king feel humble, the ācārya led him to establish twentyfive centres of the Mahāyāna doctrine. One hundred bhikṣu-s and a large number of upāsaka-s were accommodated in each of these. During his stay in this place, he also converted his younger brother Vasubandhu. But the account of this will be given later.

There lived then a brāhmaṇa called *Basunāga in *Kṛṣṇarāja in the south. He heard that an ārya called Asaṅga, having received instructions from Jina Ajita, was spreading the Mahāyāna over again. Along with his five hundred attendants, the brāhmaṇa himself came to madhya-deśa. He worshipped the caitya-s of the eight holy places⁸² and requested the ācārya to come to the south and lead the brāhmaṇa-s and householders to the virtuous path.

Along with the brāhmaṇa and his attendants, the ācārya was about to proceed [to the south] accompanied by twentyfive of his own followers, when a messenger came with the news that the brāhmaṇa's mother was ill. The brāhmaṇa became anxious to proceed quickly and the ācārya said, 'If the brāhmaṇa wants it, we can reach very quickly.' [The brāhmaṇa] said, 'Please do it.' Then they entered the path and the ācārya, along with the brāhmaṇa and the attendants, [miraculously] reached *Kṛṣṇarāja by the same afternoon. *Kṛṣṇarāja was situated in *Tri-liṅga and was at a distance of three months. It was reached only in two prahara-s.

[Fol 59A] Also, when invited by the merchant *Dhanarakṣita of *Urghana in the west, the ācārya, accompanied by the

81. V tr 'The emptiness, which makes emptiness, has the sense of taking the form of emptiness—and in reducing it (to causes) are refuted (the concepts) that (there is something which) previously existed.'

82. V 'eight great places'.

merchant and the attendants, covered the entire distance between *Magadha and *Urgyana in the course of a single day. He stayed and preached the Doctrine for a long time in both *Kṛṣṇarāja and *Urgyana and propagated the Mahāyāna among a large number of persons. In both these places, he built a hundred caitya-s and twentyfive temples and established in each of these a centre of the Mahāyāna doctrine. Similarly, were built [by him] a hundred caitya-s and twentyfive centres of the Doctrine also in *Magadha.

He was once preaching the Doctrine to a feudatory prince in a non-Buddhist⁸³ city of India near *Ayodhyā. There was then a settlement of the Garlogs⁸⁴ nearby. At the time the ācārya was preaching, the Garlog army attacked them. He advised those who were listening to the Doctrine to remain patient. So they sat in meditation. All the arrows thrown by them [i.e. the Garlogs] turned into dust. Even when the chief of the Garlogs hit the ācārya with a sword, no harm was done to him and the sword broke into a hundred pieces. In spite of all the insults, they remained unmoved. So they [the Garlogs] bowed down in great reverence and went away.

Because this ācārya could know the minds of others, he explained while preaching all the points about which the pupils were ignorant or doubtful. Therefore, there was none who listened to the Doctrine from the ācārya and yet did not become learned.

[Fol 59B] There was practically no Mahāyāni of that time who did not listen to at least one sūtra from him.

This ācārya established one hundred centres of the Doctrine from his personal resources and maintained at least two hundred students in each of these. Speaking in general, the number of

83. mtha'-'khob, meaning either 'border country' or 'barbarous (i.e. non-Buddhist) country'. S & V accept the former sense.

84. D 217 & J 68. Roerich SW 516n 'Gar-log or Qarlūq, name of a Central Asian Turkish tribe. This is the usual Tibetan translation of the Sanskrit Turuṣka. About the Gar-log in Tibetan literature, see H. Hoffmann, Die-Qarlūq in cer. Tibetaischen-Literatur, ORIENS iii,2,1950, pp.190-208.

disciples who listened to the Doctrine from him could not be counted. All of them followed his views with great reverence. Thousands of them attained the bhūmi and the yoga-mārga. He taught in every way without showing any bias for any sūtra or siddhānta. That is why, even the śrāvaka-s of the time respected him highly. Many śrāvaka-s learnt their own sūtra-s and abhidharma [from him].⁸⁵

Having acquired proficiency in the *Gandhāri mantra,⁸⁶ he used to visit the Tuṣita and, in a moment's time, could reach distant places. Because of his proficiency in the Kalpa-vidyā-mantra,⁸⁷ he could read others' thoughts.

'He was of strong moral conduct and vastly learned. It is a great wonder that he was still an adept in the Vidyā-mantra !' —the others [Hīnayānīs] used to say—'His only fault was that of entering the Mahāyāna.'

Before him, even during the time of the most extensive sprcad of the Mahāyāna, the number of the Mahāyāna monks did not reach ten thousand. Even in the days of Nāgārjuna, most of the monks were śrāvaka-s. During the time of this ācārya, the number of Mahāyāna monks reached tens of thousands. Because of these reasons, it is said that he became the foremost [preacher] of the Mahāyāna Law. Still, the number of the disciples who were constantly attached to this ācārya did not exceed twentyfive.⁸⁸ All of them were of strong moral conduct [Fol 60A], vastly learned in the Piṭaka-s and their tutelary deities removed all their doubts. All of them attained kṣānti.⁸⁹

85. V n 'From this it can be inferred that even ārya Asaṅga did not separate out Mahāyāna from the general teaching of Buddhism. Even Vasubandhu was more a Śrāvaka than a Mahāyānist.'

86. D 213—a Buddhist mantra or charm, which has the power of enabling one to move in space. V n 'S has traced in Tg (Vol du of Tantras) two works bearing the title Vajra-gandhāri-sādhanā.'

87. rtog-byed-kyi-rig-shugs.

88. V n 'probably this was then the real circle of Mahāyānist.'

89. V 'freedom from rebirth.'

He spent twelve years in Śrī *Nalendra⁹⁰ during the latter part of his life, when, in the winter,⁹¹ the tīrthika-s came everyday to challenge him in debate. He refuted their views and thus humbled them. Then he preached the Doctrine to them. He conferred ordination on about a thousand [converted] tīrthika-s. He reformed according to the Doctrine all the monks of all the monasteries who had fallen from the right view, right conduct (śīla), right practices (caryā) and right observances (vidhi) and made them extremely pure.

At last he passed away in the city of Rājagṛha,⁹² where his disciples built a caitya with his relics.

Now, about the younger brother Vasubandhu.

According to some in Tibet, he was a twin brother of ārya Asaṅga. I find others calling him 'a brother by faith'. But the Indian scholars do not say so.

His father was a brāhmaṇa versed in the three Vedas. He was born the year after ācārya ārya Asaṅga's ordination. The two ācārya-s were real brothers, because they were born of the same mother.⁹³ From the performance of the rite for making him keenly intelligent to the stage of being vastly learned and of being established in meditation, his account is the same as that of his elder brother Asaṅga.

He was ordained in Śrī *Nalendra and thoroughly studied the three Śrāvaka-piṭaka-s. Moreover, he went to Kashmir and studied mainly under ācārya *Saṃghabhadra⁹⁴ for a deep

90. V n 'According to Yuan-chuang, ārya Asaṅga appears only in Gandhāra and Ayodhyā. But later on, the legends about Nālandā connected all the Buddhist celebrities, including ārya Asaṅga, to this centre.'

91. dgun-gyi-dus.

92. rgyal-po'i-khab. Bu-ston does not mention the place where Asaṅga died. From other sources it appears to have been Puruṣapura—Watters i.358.

93. cf Bu-ston ii.137: 'From her union with a kṣatriya, (a son named) Asaṅga, and (later on) from another union with a brāhmaṇa (a second son named) Vasubandhu were born.'

94. Bu-ston ii.142-3: 'Vasubandhu received his education in the school of Saṃghabhadra in Kashmir ... After that he resolved to go back to India ... and came to Nālandā'. In Tg the Abhidharmakoṣa-śāstra- understanding of the Abhidharma and for learning the views of the eighteen schools and all the branches of knowledge. After learning the Vibhāṣā, the scriptural works of the eighteen schools—particularly where the Vinaya-s and Sūtra-s of the different schools differed—[Fol 60B] and all the works of the six systems of ūrthika philosophy and the technique of debate in its entirety, he became a great scholar.

He explained there [in Kashmir] for a number of years the Śrāvaka-piṭaka-s and distinguished between what was right and wrong in these.

When he was returning to the madhya-deśa, the robbers and yakṣa-s on the way could not stop him.⁹⁵ Thus he reached *Magadha. Here also he lived for a number of years preaching in a highly learned manner the scriptural works to many śrāvaka monks.

At that time he read the Five Bhūmi-s, [the Yogacaryābhūmi in five sections], the work of ārya Asaṅga, but failed to understand the Mahāyāna. He did not believe that [ārya Asaṅga] received these from his tutelary deity. And it is said that he remarked :

‘Alas ! Though Asaṅga meditated for twelve years in the forest, instead of attaining success in his meditation he has composed a work [useless in sense but heavy enough] to be an elephant’s load.’⁹⁶

In any case, Vasubandhu said something sarcastic about Asaṅga. Hearing this, his elder brother ārya [Asaṅga] thought : ‘It is time to convert⁹⁷ him.’ He made a monk to kārikā-bhāṣya (mDo lxiv.2) is attributed to ācārya Saṃghabhadrā alias Saṃgamaśrībhadra of Kashmir, a student of ācārya Vinītabhadra. Another work, the Ārya-mūla-sarvāstivādi-śramaṇera-kārikā (mDo xc.1) is attributed to ācārya Nāgārjuna and equally to Saṃghabhadrā of Kashmir ! In Fol 63B, the name is given as ‘dus-bzah’.

95. cf Bu-stom ii. 143 for the story in more details.

96. Bu-ston ii. 143—Obermiller translates the verse more freely.

97. This story of Vasubandhu’s conversion is practically the same as given by Bu-ṣton ii. 143. But see Watters i, 358 : ‘In other works, Asaṅga uses the pretext of fatal sickness to bring his brother from Ayodhyā memorise the *Akṣayamati-nirdeśa-sūtra*⁹⁸ and another the Daśabhūmi-sūtra.⁹⁹ He sent them to the younger brother with the instruction: 'While reciting, recite first the Akṣayamati and then the Daśabhūmi-sūtra'.

The two [went to Vasubandhu] and in the evening [one of them] recited the Akṣayamati. [Vasubandhu] thought: 'The Mahāyāna appears to be logically well-founded. However, will it not lead to indolence?'¹⁰⁰ When, in the morning, [the other monk] recited the Daśabhūmi-sūtra, [Vasubandhu] realised that [the Mahāyāna] was sound both in theory and practice. [He thought] 'So I have committed a great sin by showing disrespect to the Mahāyāna', and he wanted to get a razor to cut off the tongue¹⁰¹ that had uttered these disparaging remarks.

[Fol 61A] The two monks said, 'Why should you cut off the tongue for this? Your brother knows how to absolve you of the sin. You better go to the ārya and pray to him.'

So he went to ārya Asaṅga.

The account of his conversion as current in Tibet¹⁰² today is as follows :

After [Vasubandhu] studied all the Mahāyāna scriptures, when the two brothers discussed the Doctrine, the younger one showed signs of keener intelligence. The elder one, though without such a quick grasp, could evolve better answers. On being asked about it, [he said] 'I am answering after learning these from my tutelary deity.' The younger brother also prayed to have a vision of him. [Asaṅga said] 'You are not to visit him at Puruṣapura and there reasons with him and converts him to Mahāyāna.'

98. blo-gros-mi-zad-pas-bstan-pa'i-mdo. Kg mDo Vol ma xvi. 4.

99. sa-bcu-pa'i-mdo. Kg Vol ji xxxvii.1. Commentary on it by Vasubandhu—Tg mDo xxxiv.14, Ārya-daśabhūmi-vyākhyāna.

100. V 'confusion'. But the text has gyel-lam, 'slumbering, indolence'—D 1155.

101. cf Watters i.358.

102. cf Bu-ston ii.143-4.

yet fortunate enough for it.' After this, he preached to him the way of atoning for the sin. Thus it is said.

In the Indian account, however, I have not come across all these. Nor do these appear to be coherent. [Vasubandhu] listened to the Mahāyāna-sūtra-s from ārya Asaṅga. It was not proper for decent people in the good old days to argue with one's own preceptor, nor to show one's greater skill after learning a treatise by oneself, i.e. without any systematic instruction from the preceptor. Therefore, assuming that in decent society one could not argue with one's own preceptor, how can it be said that he [Vasubandhu] had argued with ārya Asaṅga? [Further] it was known to all that Asaṅga received the scriptures from Maitreya. Therefore, it does not appear to be coherent to say that Vasubandhu was ignorant of it, asked about it and that ārya Asaṅga concealed it from his younger brother with the remark, 'I am answering after consulting a tutelary deity.'

Accordingly, the Indian version is as follows :

To continue the previous account—When [Vasubandhu] asked about the means of atoning for the sin, the ārya consulted Jina Ajita [Fol 61B] and said [to Vasubandhu], 'Preach the Mahāyāna doctrine extensively. Prepare commentaries on many sūtra-s. Recite for a hundred thousand times the Uṣṇiṣa-vijayā-dhāraṇī.'¹⁰³

Thus instructed, he learnt all the Mahāyāna-sūtra-s after listening to these only once from his elder brother. He received instructions on mantra from a mantra-ācārya and chanted five hundred dhāraṇī-sūtra-s.¹⁰⁴ He attained siddhi by chanting the *Guhyapati-dhāraṇī*¹⁰⁵ and realised the ultimate truth. He excelled in meditation and memorised all the teachings of the Buddha that survived then in the human realm.

It is said that after the nirvāṇa of the Teacher, there was

103. gtsug-tor-rnam-par-rgyal-ma'i-rig-shags. V n 'In Kg Vol pha there are ten works relating to this dhāraṇī'. Tg also contains two works related to Uṣṇiṣa-vijayā—rG lxxxvi 51 & 52.

104. gzuñs-mdo.

105. gsaṅ-ba'i-bdag-po'i-rig-shags.

none as profoundly learned in the scriptures as ācārya Vasu-bandhu. To mention these separately: [he learned] each of the five hundred sūtra-s of the Śrāvaka Tripiṭaka containing three lakhs of śloka-s, the collection of fortynine Ārya-ratnakūṭa-samāja, the Avatamsaka and the Samāja-ratna.¹⁰⁶ Besides these he learned the five hundred big or small Mahāyāna-sūtra-s like the Prajñā-pāramitā-śata-sāhasrikā and also five hundred dhāraṇī-s. He learned all these word for word and also their significance. Normally it took a whole year to read all these.¹⁰⁷ However, placing himself in a tub of til*-oil, he could read all these uninterruptedly in fifteen days and nights. He used to read everyday in an hour¹⁰⁸ or two the whole of the Prajñā-pāramitā-aṣṭa-sāhasrikā.¹⁰⁹

When this ācārya entered the Mahāyāna, about five hundred scholars of the Śrāvaka Piṭakas also entered the Mahāyāna.

[FoI 62A] After the passing away of ārya Asaṅga, he became the upādhyāya of Śrī *Nalendra. Everyday, he used to recite various religious works, confer the pravrajyā and upasampadā on others according to their different requirements, himself acted as the upādhyāya and the ācārya in the pravrajyā and bhikṣu-dīkṣā [of others], [helped others to] rectify their faults by voluntary confession, himself continuously observed the ten-fold duties of the monk and helped thousands of others to observe their ten-fold duties fully. On special occasions he explained for twenty continuous prahara-s¹¹⁰ the incomparable religious significance of the Mahāyāna-sūtra-s. In the evening he dispelled differences of opinion by discussing the scriptures and by summing up the essence of the Doctrine. He listened 106. 'dus-pa-rin-po-che—D 687. S n 'It is certainly the Mahā-samaya-sūtra'.

107. V tr 'He read these once every year'.

108. chu-tshod—D 419 danḍa, lit. the measure of time by a water-clock, the Indian hour.

109. V tr 'The 8,000-prajñā-pāramitā repeated by him every month could ordinarily be read (by him) in one or two quarters of an hour'.

110. thun—D 580 yāma, prahara, period of three hours, etc.

to the Doctrine from the tutelary deity even in the short sleep¹¹¹ of one prahara at midnight and sat in deep meditation at dawn. In the intervals of all these activities, he composed treatises and defeated the tīrthika-s in debate. He wrote¹¹² fifty commentaries expounding the short and long Mahāyāna and Hīnayāna sūtra-s, like the Prajñā-pāramitā-pañcaviṃśati-sāhasrikā, the Akṣayamati-nirdeśa, Daśabhūmaka, Buddha-anu-smṛti,¹¹³ Pañcamudrā-sūtra,¹¹⁴ Pratītya-samutpāda-sūtra, Sūtrā-lamkāra, *Vibhaṅgadvaya*¹¹⁵ etc. He also wrote eight original prakaraṇa*-s.¹¹⁶

He recited the Uṣṇiṣa-vijayā[-dhāraṇī] for a hundred thousand times and acquired mastery of this charm. After that he had a direct vision of Guhyapati and attained the stage of perfect meditation.

Three commentaries composed by this ācārya like the Pratītya-samutpāda-sūtra-ṭīkā [Fo] 62B] are counted in this country [Tibet] as included in the eight prakaraṇa*-s.¹¹⁷ However, a commentary is not a prakaraṇa and it is difficult to characterise the Vyākhyā-yukti as a prakaraṇa. By prakaraṇa is meant a short treatise discussing a specific and important topic. When a large work like the Sūtrālamkāra cannot be called [a prakaraṇa], how can its commentary [which is bigger in volume] be called one? Nor can it be said that, among the

111. P-cd mnal-ba'i-ñah-la, 'while asleep'. S-cd mnal-ba'i-dad-las, which, as S says in note, appears to him as inexplicable.

112. dbyig-gñen. For works attributed to Vasubandhu, see Supplementary Note 23.

113. dkon-mchog-rjes-dran, lit Ratna-anu-smṛti. Does Tār refer to Vasubandhu's Buddha-anu-smṛti-ṭīkā (mDo xxxiv. 7 of Tg)?

114. phyag-rgya-lñā'i-mdo.

115. V 'the two Vibhaṅga-s'. V n—see Supplementary Note 24.

116. rañ-rkañ, lit. 'on his own feet', hence translated as 'original'. Bu-ston i. 56f mentions the eight treatises of Vasubandhu, of which the last three are commentaries. These eight are: Triṃśaka-kārikā-prakaraṇa, Viṃśaka-kārikā-prakaraṇa, Pañcaskandha-prakaraṇa, Vyākhyā-yukti, Karma-siddhi-prakaraṇa, and the commentaries on Sūtrālamkāra, Pratītyasamutpāda-sūtra and Madhyānta-vibhaṅga.

117. Does this refer to the view of Bu-ston? see note 116.

eight prakaraṇa-s, some contain the word prakaraṇa in the title while others do not.

This ācārya did not visit any non-Buddhist¹¹⁸ part of the country nor any distant land. He stayed mostly in *Magadha. He filled the whole of *Magadha with centres of the Doctrine by way of reconstructing those that were previously damaged and building one hundred and eight new centres of the Mahāyāna doctrine.

He once visited *Gauḍa in the east. When he preached many sūtra-s to a congregation of numerous citizens there, the gods showered golden flowers. Even the beggars collected golden flowers one mahā-droṇa in quantity. Here also he established one hundred and eight centres of the Doctrine.

A brāhmaṇa called *Makṣika of *Oḍiviśa invited him. He entertained there twelve thousand Mahāyāna monks for three months. In the house of this brāhmaṇa were revealed five mines of gems. He [Vasubandhu] made the brāhmaṇa-s, householders and kings of the place full of reverence and established one hundred and eight centres of the Doctrine. Moreover, the number of the centres of the Doctrine built under the instruction of this ācārya in the south and other places [Fol 63A] equals¹¹⁹ to those already mentioned. It is said that altogether these made a total of six hundred and fifty four.

The number of monks during this time was greater than that of ācārya ārya Asaṅga. It is said that the total number of monks all over the country came to about sixty thousand. The number of monks who stayed with this ācārya and accompanied him in his travels was about a thousand. All of them observed the moral discipline and were vastly learned.

Wherever the ācārya stayed, he used to receive articles of worship [even] from non-human beings [i.e. Nāgas, Yakṣas, etc] and the miraculous phenomena like the finding of mines of gems used to take place. By virtue of his supernatural 118. mtha'-'khob. V borderland.

119. V n 'i.e. 324 centres established in Magadha, Gauḍa and Oḍiviśa.'

fore-knowledge, he rightly answered all questions [concerning] both good and evil.

When the fire broke out in the city of Rājagṛha, he extinguished it by his solemn prayer. With his solemn prayer, again, he brought under control the epidemic that broke out in the city of Jananta.¹²⁰ By virtue of his vidyā-mantra, he controlled his own longevity. There is no end to the miraculous anecdotes like these.

He defeated about five hundred tīrthika rivals in all [i.e. before and after entering the Mahāyāna]. In all he brought five thousand brāhmaṇa-s and tīrthika-s to the Law of the Buddha.

At last, he went to Nepal¹²¹ accompanied by a thousand ācārya-s. There also he established the centres of the Doctrine and vastly increased the number of the monks.

Finding a bhaṭṭāraka with religious robes living in his house and ploughing his field, he felt shocked and said, 'The Law of the Teacher is degenerated.' So he preached the Doctrine among the monks, [Fol 63B] thrice chanted the Uṣṇīṣa-vijayā-dhāraṇī in the reverse order¹²² and died there.¹²³ This was described as the setting of the sun of the Doctrine for the time being. His disciples built a caitya there.

According to the account current in Tibet, when he composed the Abhidharmakośa and sent it to Saṃghabhadra¹²⁴ in Kashmir, he [Saṃghabhadra] was pleased. But when the commentary was shown to him, he felt displeased and came to *Magadha to argue with him [Vasubandhu]. By that time, ācārya Vasubandhu had left for Nepal.

Such an account of pleasing and displeasing Saṃghabhadra with the Abhidharmakośa and its commentary may be correct. But in India it is not clearly said that Saṃghabhadra actually 120. mthar-skyes. V Janantapura. V n '3 assumes that the name Yanantapura is derived from Jayantapura'.

121. bal-yul.

122. cf Bu-ston ii, 145.

123. But see Watters i, 359—according to the Chinese biography of Vasubandhu, he died at Ayodhyā at the age of 80.

124. 'dus-bzuñ.

came to *Magadha. Even assuming that he came there, it is clear that this must have taken place earlier. It is also clear that by the time of Vasubandhu's departure for Nepal, many years had elapsed after the passing away of Saṃghabhadra.¹²⁵

After receiving the ordination, ācārya Asaṅga worked for the Doctrine for seventyfive years. In the prediction, 'He will live for one hundred and fifty years'—each year is to be counted as a half-year. This agrees with his religious career.

It is certain that he [? Vasubandhu] worked for the welfare of the living beings for over thirty years. In the opinion of some of the Indians this was over forty years. Ācārya Vasubandhu lived up to the age of nearly one hundred years. He worked for the welfare of the living beings for many years during the life-time of ārya Asaṅga and for about twentyfive years after the ārya.

It is said that this great ācārya [Vasubandhu] was a contemporary of the Tibetan king Lha-tho-tho-ri-gñan-btsan.¹²⁶ This seems to be correct. [Fol 64A]

The twentysecond chapter containing the account of the period of Brothers ārya Asaṅga.

125. But see Watters i. 324f for a totally different account of Saṃghabhadra and his relation with Vasubandhu.
126. On Lha-tho-tho-ri, see A. Chattopadhyaya AT 179. V n 'Lha-tho-tho-ri was the fifth of the earlier successive kings before Sroṅ-btsan-gam-po. Therefore, he would have lived not earlier than A.D. 450. For understanding how the later Buddhists exaggerate the stories about their celebrities and distort their biographies, it will be worthwhile to compare the biography of Vasubandhu given by me in the first part of my work on Buddhism with the account of Yuan-chuang. According to my own account, he lived during the reign of Vikramāditya and his successor Prāditya and established three centres in all. He died at the age of 80. According to his (Yuan-chuang's) account of the biography, not Saṃghabhadra (probably Saṃghabhadra) but Vasubandhu was older. But the two accounts agree in this that he (Vasubandhu) died in Ayodhyā, and hence Nālandā—and even Nepal, Gauḍa, Oḍiṣā—linked themselves to him later on.'

CHAPTER 23

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF ĀCĀRYA
DIGNĀGA AND OTHERS

During the latter half of the life of the great ācārya Vasubandhu and after the death of king Gambhīrapakṣa, there lived an extremely powerful king called *Śrīharṣa. He was born in *Maru in the west. He conquered all the kingdoms of the western region. Later, he became respectful to the Law of the Buddha and accepted ācārya Guṇaprabha¹ as his preceptor.

Roughly in the same period, there ruled in the east king *Vigamacandra, a descendant of king *Vṛkṣacandra, and his [i.e. Vigamacandra's] son *Kāmacandra. Both these kings had great power and wealth. They delighted in making gifts and ruled the kingdom righteously. But they did not take refuge to the Three Jewels. They showed respect to both the

1. yon-tan-'od. The commentary on the Bodhisattva-bhūmi attributed to Guṇaprabha in Tg (mDo liv.5 &6) mentions him as the preceptor of king Harṣavardhana Śīlāditya of Thāneśvara. The Vinaya-sūtra-vṛtti-abhidhānasya-vyākhyā (Tg mDo lxxxiii-lxxxiv) mentions the author as Guṇaprabha of Mathurā, who belonged to the Mūla-sarvāstivāda sect and who composed this commentary in the mahāvihāra Śrī-Siñā (Śrī Siñā ?) during the earlier period of the reign of Harṣavardhana Śīlāditya of Thāneśvara. The Tg also contains the Vinaya-sūtra (mDo lxxxii.1) and its auto-commentary (mDo lxxxviii) by Guṇaprabha. Bu-ston ii.160 refers to him as a brāhmaṇa and as a great authority in the Vinaya of the Mūla-sarvāstivādī-s, but rejects as an anachronism the view that he was a disciple of Upagupta or Sudarśana. The Ekottara-karmaśataka attributed to him in Tg (mDo lxxxii.2) is, according to some, the work of Vinītadeva (Bu-ston ii.160). Tg (mDo lxxxv-lxxxvi) contains a commentary on his Vinaya-sūtra by his disciple Dharmamitra of Tukhāristān, the great expert in Vinaya and belonging to the Mūla-sarvāstivāda sect. For Guṇaprabha, see also I-Tsing (Takakusu) lviii-lix & 181 ; Watters i. 323f.

insiders and outsiders and had special reverence for the Nirgranthas.

It is said that at this time, Kashmir was ruled by Mahā-sammata.²

This was the period when, in the east, ācārya Sthiramati³ and Dignāga⁴ worked for the welfare of the living beings and, in the west, Buddhādāsa,⁵ the disciple of ārya Asaṅga, worked for the welfare of the living beings in the latter part of his life. This was also the zenith of Guṇaprabha's career, and the time when in Kashmir bhaṭṭāraka Saṅghadāsa⁶ also extensively worked for the welfare of the living beings, when ācārya Dharmadāsa⁷ used to visit the different countries to preach the Doctrine and ācārya Buddhapālita⁸ went to the south. This was the period of the earlier career of Bhavya⁹ and Vimuktasena.¹⁰

[Fol 64B] In *Oḍiviśa, during this period also lived *Nāgeśa, son of king *Jaleruha and his brāhmaṇa minister *Nāgakeśa. While ruling for seven years, he became extremely powerful. As a result, even *Vigamacandra submitted to him.

2. maiṅ-poṣ-bkur-ba.
3. blo-gros-brtan-pa, cf Bu-ston ii.147ff, one of the four outstanding disciples of Vasubandhu who surpassed even Vasubandhu. Yuan-chuang mentions him as one of his own contemporaries—see Watters ii.109,168f; cf I-Tsing (Takakusu) lviii, 181 & 225.
4. phyogs-kyi-glaṅ-po, lit dik-hastin, see Watters ii.211f on the name.
5. saṅs-rgyas-'baṅs, said to have been an uncle of Vimuktasena (Tg mDo i.2), cf Watters i.353 & 359.
6. dge-'dun-'baṅs. Tg mentions vajrayānācārya Guhyadatta (rG lxxx.27) and Viśākhadeva (mDo lxxxix.1) as his disciples, but contains no work by him.
7. chos-'baṅs.
8. saṅs-rgyas-bskyāṅs.
9. legs-ldan. Bhavya or Bhāvaviveka, alias Nirāloka (snaṅ-bral)—colophon of mDo xviii.9 of Tg.
10. rnam-grol-sde.

Ācārya *Lo-yi-pā¹¹ converted¹² them and led them to renounce the kingdom. After they attained siddhi, the king was called *Dārika-pā¹³ and his minister *Diŋgi-pā.¹⁴

Ācārya Triratnadāsa¹⁵ was a contemporary of ācārya Bhavya. Also in *Oḍiviśa a brāhmaṇa called *Bhadrapālita worked extensively for the Law.

Among them, king *Śrīharṣa was incomparable as a king. He wanted to wreck the religion of the mleccha-s. In a small place near Maul-tan,¹⁶ he built a masita, that is a big monastery of the mleccha-s. The whole of it was made only of wood. He invited all the mleccha teachers there, lavishly offered gifts to them for several months and made them collect all their scriptural works there. Then he set fire to it, and, as a result, twelve thousand experts of the doctrine of the mleccha-s perished.

At that time, there lived in *Khorosan only a weaver well-versed in the mleccha religion. From him the mleccha-s of the later period gradually grew in number. As a result of this wreck [of the mlecchā religion] by this king, there remained for about one hundred years only a few to follow the religion of the Persians and Turuṣkas.¹⁷

11. In Tg the name occurs variously as Lo-yi-pā, Lū-yi-pā, Lū-hi-pāda, Lū-i-pā, Lū-yi-shabs; also as ñā'i-rgyu-ma-za-ba (lit. 'one who eats the intestines of fishes'; hence Matsyāntrāda; ñā-lto-pa or Matsyodara; Mīna. See Supplementary Note 20.
12. P-ed btu (to subdue or convert), S-ed bskul (to inspire).
13. Mentioned also as Dāri-pāda and Dārika-pāda. See Supplementary Note 25.
14. As reviser of Lūi-pā's Buddhodaya-nāma (Tg rG lxxiii,62) is mentioned Deki-pā, Dheñki, Dhanakuṭṭi, Dhaki, Diñka-pā, Deñgi-pā, Diñga-pā, Idiñgi-pā, Tenki-pā, Teñgi-pā, Śrī Tañki-pāda.
15. dkon-mchog-gsum-gyi-'bañs. The following are attributed in Tg to Triratnadāsa or Ratnadāsa: Bhagavat-śākyamuni-stotra (bsTod 43), Guṇāparyanta-stotra (bsTod 44 & mDo xxxiii.96) and Ārya-prajñā-pāramitā-saṃgraha-kārikā-vivaraṇa (mDo xiv.3). cf Watters ii.213.
16. S Maulasthāna. Watters ii.254 modern Multan. It is of interest to note that Tg contains a work called Nāgānanda-nāma-nāṭaka (mDo xcii.3) the author of which is probably Harṣadeva of Kanauj.
17. S Śākeras, V Sakas. V n 'sog-po, this is how the Mongolians are now called by the Tibetans'.

After this, to atone for his sin he built a big monastery at each of the places, like *Maru, *Mālava, *Mewār, *Pituva and *Citavara. In each of these, he maintained a thousand monks. As a result, the Doctrine was widely spread.

[Fol 65A] Now, about mahā-ācārya Guṇaprabha.

He was born in a brāhmaṇa family of Mathurā. After thoroughly studying the Vedas and all the śāstra-s, he received in a monastery there the pravrajyā and upāsampadā ordination. Under mahā-ācārya Vasubandhu, he studied the Śrāvaka Tripiṭaka and many Mahāyāna-sūtra-s and became a scholar in the Vinayas and all the scriptures of the different sects. He used continuously to recite from his memory the 'collection of a hundred thousand Vinayas'.¹⁸

He resided in a monastery called *Agrapurī in Mathurā. Along with him there lived five thousand monks. They immediately rectified even the slightest transgressions of the vow, and thus purified their conduct, as it was done in the good old days when the arhat-s were looking after the Law. Among them many were vastly learned in the sūtra-s and Abhidharmas and about five hundred of them regularly recited [lit knew by heart] the 'collection of a hundred thousand Vinayas'.¹⁹

As a royal punishment, the eyes of a minister of king *Śrīharṣa, called *Mātaṅgarāja, were once plucked off. By the power of the resolute prayer of the ācārya, resulting from his pure moral conduct, he got back the eyes. Being the preceptor of the king, he used to receive everyday immeasurable wealth and he immediately converted these into virtue [i.e. spent on virtuous purposes]. He never allowed himself to fall from the ascetic practices (dhūta-guṇa-s).

Now about ācārya Sthiramati.²⁰

When ācārya Vasubandhu recited the śāstra viz. 'The Collection of a Hundred Thousand Śloka-s in Ninety-nine Sections', [Fol 65B] an intelligent dove that lived in the edge of 18. 'dul-ba-'bum-sde.

19. S 'hundred thousand Hīnayāna sections'. But the text has 'dul-ba-'bum-sde.

20. For works of Sthiramati, see Supplementary Note 26.

the beams listened to it with great reverence. After its death, it was reborn as the son of a merchant in *Daṇḍakāraṇya in the south.²¹

Immediately after birth, he asked 'Where is the ācārya ?'

When asked, 'Which ācārya ?' he replied, 'Vasubandhu of *Magadha.' On enquiries being made to the merchants of that place, they said 'Yes [that an ācārya like that was there]'.²²

So, at the age of seven he was sent to ācārya Vasubandhu. He studied the branches of learning and, without difficulty, became wise.

He had a handful of beans, wanted to eat these in the temple of Tārā and thought that it was not proper to eat without offering to the āryā. He offered a few beans, which rolled back. He thought : 'It will not be proper for me to eat so long as the āryā does not accept it'. He went on offering till the beans were exhausted. Being a child after all, he broke into tears. The āryā directly appeared before him and said, 'Do not weep. You have my blessings.' Immediately, his intelligence became limitless. The image also came to be known as *Māṣa-Tārā (i.e. Tārā with Beans).²³

He eventually became a sthavira with a mastery of the three piṭaka-s. He became a scholar specially of the abhidharma of both Mahāyāna and Hīnayāna. He used regularly to recite the Ārya Ratnakūṭa. In all his actions, he used to be led by the predictions of āryā Tārā. He wrote commentaries on the Ratnakūṭa-samāja-ūnapoñcāśaka and the Mūla-madhya-maka.

Shortly after the passing away of ācārya Vasubandhu, he defeated many īrīhika challengers like *Viṣṭa-pāla²⁴ and others

21. Bu-ston ii.147 gives practically the same account, though adding that at that time Vasubandhu resided at the Bhaga-vihāra and differing from Tār in maintaining that Sthiramati was born as the son of a Śūdra.

22. V tr : When asked, 'Which ācārya ?', he replied, 'Vasubandhu' and was told that he (Vasubandhu) resided in Magadha. cf Bu-ston ii.147.

23. cf Bu-ston ii.147-8.

24. S Viṣṭa-pāla.

and became famous as the master of debate. He wrote glosses on most of the commentaries composed by ācārya Vasubandhu [Fol 66A] and composed many commentaries on his original works. It is said that he also wrote a commentary on the Abhidharmakośa. But I am not sure whether it was done by this ācārya.²⁵

It is said that during his time as most of the centres of the Doctrine established by the previous ācārya-s had become defunct, this ācārya established a hundred centres of the Doctrine.

Now about ācārya Dignāga.

He was born in a brāhmaṇa family in the city of *Siṅga-vakta²⁶ near *Kāñcī in the south. There lived at that time an upādhyāya belonging to the Vātsīputriya²⁷ sect called Nāga-datta, who was profoundly learned in all the doctrines of the tīrthika-s. [Dignāga] received pravrajyā under him and became a scholar of the Śrāvaka Tripiṭakas. He prayed to this upādhyāya for upaśeśa. He [the upādhyāya] instructed him to seek the 'indescribable self'.²⁸ In spite of searching for it with an intense critical effort, he could not find anything like that. So he used to throw open all the windows during the day and used to light lamps all around during the night and, denuding himself, he repeatedly examined himself from all sides, both in and out.²⁹

One of his friends found him doing so and reported it to the upādhyāya. Questioned by the upādhyāya, he said, 'Oh upādhyāya, because of my weak intellect and little insight, I fail to see what

25. However, Tg contains Abhidharmakośa-bhāṣya-ṭīkā Tattvārtha-nāma (mDo cxxix-cxxx) by Sthīramati, a commentary on Vasubandhu's commentary on the Abhidharmakośa.

26. S Siṃha-vaktra and adds in note that the text has Siṃha-vakta.

27. gnas-ma-bu. cf Stcherbatsky BL i.32 'This sect admitted the existence of a real personality as something different from the elements of which it is composed.' cf also Stcherbatsky Central Conception ... 31.

28. brjod-du-med-pa'i-bdag. cf Bu-ston ii.149 'the principle of the Ego, which was said to be inexpressible as being neither identical with the groups of elements nor differing from them.'

29. cf Bu-ston ii.149f.

you instruct me to seek. Therefore, suspecting that it is covered by some obscuration, I am searching for it in this way.'

It was an indirect refutation of him [the upādhyāya]. So the upādhyāya became angry and said, 'You are trying to find fault with my doctrine. Therefore, you leave this place.'

[Fol 66B] Thus he [upādhyāya] drove away somebody whom it was not right to drive away. He [Dignāga] could defeat him with arguments ; but since this was not proper, he bowed down before him and went away.

Eventually, he went to ācārya Vasubandhu and listened to all the Piṭakas of the Mahāyāna and Hinayāna and thus became proficient in five hundred sūtra-s,—those of the Mahāyāna, Hinayāna—and even the dhāraṇī-s. It is said that he specially received vidyā-mantra from a mantra-ācārya, attained siddhi and had the direct vision of ārya Mañjuśrī. He listened to the Doctrine [from Mañjuśrī] to his heart's content.

In a very solitary place of a forest in *Oḍiviśa, he sat in the cave of a hill called *Bhoṭa-śela³⁰ and attained samādhi with intense concentration.

After some years there took place at Śrī *Nalendra a big debate with the īrthika-s. Among them there was a brāhmaṇa called *Sudurjaya, who had the vision of the deity he propitiated. He learnt the technique of debate extremely well and it was most difficult to defeat him. Failing to compete in debate, the Buddhists invited ācārya Dignāga from the east. He thrice defeated that īrthika and converted all the assembled īrthika-s to the Law of the Buddha after defeating them individually. He explained many sūtra-s to the monks there, propagated the Abhidharma more extensively, wrote many works on Vijñāna-vāda and on logic.³¹ It is said that he wrote one hundred works in all.

After this, he returned again to *Oḍiviśa [Fol 67A] and devoted himself to meditation.

There he resolved to compose the logical treatise called

30. S-eḥ Bhoṭa-śaila.

31. For works of Dignāga, see Supplementary Note 27.

Pramāṇa-samuccaya, in which he wanted to unite his previous scattered products of extraordinary keen intellect and he wrote the opening verse embodying his resolution :

'I salute him who is the personified Logic,
Who pursues the weal of the living beings,
The Teacher, the Blessed One, the Protector,
And, in order to demonstrate the means of Logical Proof,
I shall unite here under one head
The different fragments from all my other treatises.'³²

When he had written this with a piece of chalk³³ [on the rock], the earth shook, a light blazed forth and a thunderous sound was heard.

A brāhmaṇa called Kṛṣṇa³⁴ realised the significance of these signs. When the ācārya had gone out for alms, he [Kṛṣṇa] came and wiped the words off.

Similarly, he wiped off for the second time.

He [Dignāga] wrote it for the third time, and added : 'Know this to be extremely important. Therefore, you must not wipe it, if you are wiping just for the fun of it. If, however, you think it to be wrong and want to have a debate, appear in person.'

After this, when he went out for alms, [the brāhmaṇa] came to wipe it. But noticing the note, he kept on waiting. The ācārya returned and, staking their respective creeds, entered into a debate. The tīrthika was repeatedly defeated. He [Dignāga] said, 'You have now to accept the Law of the Buddha.' At this, he [Kṛṣṇa] threw enchanted dust, which burnt the belongings of the ācārya and even the ācārya himself narrowly escaped the fire.

The tīrthika fled.

The ācārya thought : 'How can I be fit to work for the 32. Tr Obermiller Bu-ston ii.150.

33. Bu-ston ii.150 'Accordingly in the cavern known by his name, he wrote on the side of a rock'...

34. nag-po. cf Bu-ston ii.150 'a heretical teacher called Kṛṣṇa-muni-rāja.'

welfare of others when I fail to bring welfare even to a single person like this!' Thinking thus, when he was about to renounce his citta-utpādana, [Fol 67B] ārya Mañjuśrī appeared before him and said, 'Oh son, do not do it. Do not do it. Wrong ideas result from evil company. Know it for certain that the īrthika-s can do no harm to your treatise. I shall remain your kalyāṇa-mitra, as long as you do not attain Buddhahood. In the future [your treatise] will be the only eye of all the śāstra-s.'

Then the ācārya said, 'I cannot bear this unbearable distress. My mind is revelling in wrong conduct. It is so difficult to encounter a venerable soul, —but how does it help me if you are not giving me your blessings in spite of already appearing before me?'

When he said this, [Mañjuśrī answered] 'Oh son, do not be depressed. I shall protect you from all dangers.' Saying this, he disappeared.

Then he [Dignāga] composed the śāstra excellently.

He was once slightly indisposed. After his [daily round of] alms in the city he entered a forest which he saw, felt sleepy and fell asleep. In his dreams, he had visions of many Buddhas and he attained many samādhi-s. The gods showered flowers around him, all the flowers of the forest bowed at his feet and the elephants provided him with cool shadow.

The king of the country, along with his attendants, while roaming there for pleasure, witnessed this scene. He felt amazed, woke him up with the sound of musical instruments and asked, 'Are you Dignāga?'

'So am I called.'

Then the king fell at his feet.

After this, he [Dignāga] went to the south. [Fol 68A] He defeated the īrthika rivals of different places and reconstructed most of the damaged centres of the Doctrine established by the earlier ācārya-s.

Now, the king of *Oḍḍiśa had a minister called *Bhadrapālita, who acted as the royal treasurer. [Dignāga] made him a follower of the Law of the Buddha. That brāhmaṇa [Bhadrapālita] built sixteen big monasteries, each accommodating a large number of monks. In each of these monasteries were established various centres for the Doctrine.

As a mark of his pure moral conduct, this brāhmaṇa had a *haritaka*³⁵ tree in his garden. It was called the *Muṣṭi-haritaka and it cured all diseases and thus benefitted a large number of people. The tree was once drying up. So the ācārya offered prayers for saving it and it was revived in seven days.

By defeating most of the tīrthika rivals in debate, he acquired the fame of being the leading logician.³⁶ The devout followers of his creed filled the four directions. But he had not even a novice as his attendant. He had little desire of his own, was always self-content and, after devoting his whole life to twelve ascetic practices,³⁷ he passed away in a solitary forest of *Odiviśa.

Now about bhaṭṭāraka Saṃghadāsa.

He was a disciple of ācārya Vasubandhu. By caste a brāhmaṇa, he was born in the south and belonged [originally] to the Sarvāstivādī sect. He spent a long time in Vajrāsana and established there twentyfour centres of Vinaya and Abhidharma. [Fol 68B] He went to Kashmir in response to the invitation from king *Turuṣka *Mahāsammata. He built the vihāra called Ratnagupta³⁸ and *Kumbhakuṇḍali.³⁹ After extensively propagating the Mahāyāna doctrine, he passed away in that country. Formerly, the Law of the Mahāyāna was not much in vogue in Kashmir. During the time of the brothers Asaṅga [i.e. Asaṅga and his brother] it was spread there, though in a limited form. From the time of this ācārya, it began gradually to spread more and more.

35. a-ru-ra.

36. rtsoḍ-pa'i-khyu-mchog. V n 'lit. the bull of debate'.

37. sbyaṅs-pa'i-yon-tan-bcu-gñis, lit. dvādaśa-dhūtaguṇa—D 939. But V tr 'twelve subjects of learning.'

38. rin-chen-sbas-pa.

39. V & S Kumbhakuṇḍala.

Now about ācārya Dharmadāsa.

Born in *Bhaṅgala in the east, he was a disciple of Asaṅga and his brother. He went round the countries all around and built in each direction a temple of ārya Mañjuśrī. He is said to have prepared a commentary on the entire Yogacaryā-bhūmi.

Now about ācārya Buddhapālita.

Born in a place called Haṃsakriḍa⁴⁰ in *Tambala in the south, he received there the pravrajyā and became vastly learned in the scriptures. Under ācārya Saṃgharakṣita,⁴¹ a disciple of ārya Nāgamitra,⁴² he learnt the original works of ācārya Nāgārjuna. He attained the highest knowledge through intense meditation. He had a direct vision of ārya Mañjuśrī and he delivered many sermons on the Doctrine while residing in the *Dantapurī⁴³ monastery in the south. He expounded⁴⁴ many scriptural works composed by the 'ārya-s father and son' [i.e. Nāgārjuna and Āryadeva], ācārya Śūra etc.

At last he practised Guṭikā-siddhi and attained success.

Now about ācārya Bhavya.⁴⁵

Born in a noble Kṣatriya family in *Malya-ra of the south [Fol 69A] he received pravrajyā there and became a scholar of the Tripiṭakas. He came to the madhya-deśa and learnt under ācārya Saṃgharakṣita many sūtra-s of the Mahāyāna and the teachings of Nāgārjuna. He went back to the south and received the vision of Vajrapāṇi. He attained viśiṣṭa-samādhi,⁴⁶ became the head of about fifty monasteries in the south and delivered many lessons on the Doctrine. He studied the works of ācārya Buddhapālita after the latter had passed away. Taking his stand on the views of Nāgārjuna, he resolved to compose a commentary refuting the views of the earlier

40. ñāñ-pas-rtse-ba.

41. dge-'dun-sruñ-ba.

42. klu'i-bśes-gñen.

43. S-ed Dantapurī. P-ed Daṅṭapurī.

44. Tg contains only Buddhapālita-mūlamadhyamaka-vṛtti (mDo xvii.20) by Buddhapālita.

45. See Supplementary Note 28 for the works of Bhavya or Bhāvaviveka.

46. tiñ-ñe-'dsin-khyab-par-can.

ācārya-s as expressed in their expositions of the Madhyamaka-mūla. Thus he wrote commentaries on some sūtra-s. At last he also practised Guṭikā-siddhi and attained success.

Both these ācārya-s [Bhavya and Buddhapālita], after leaving their mortal bodies, went to the Vidyādhara-sthāna.⁴⁷

Now, these two ācārya-s composed the basic texts on the Mādhyamika doctrine of nature-lessness (svabhāva-hīna-vāda). The number of disciples of Buddhapālita was not very large, while ācārya Bhavya had a large number of disciples and, because he had thousands of monks as his followers, his views were more extensively spread.

Before the appearance of these two ācārya-s, all the Mahāyāni-s were under the same Law. But these two ācārya-s [thought], 'The doctrines of ārya Nāgārjuna and of ārya Asaṅga are fundamentally different. The doctrine of Asaṅga is not indicative of the path of the Mādhyamika. It is merely the doctrine of viññāna. [Fol 69B] What we uphold is the real view of ārya Nāgārjuna.'

Saying this, they refuted the position of the others. As a result after the passing away of Bhavya, the Mahāyāni-s were split into two groups and started having controversies among themselves.

In this [controversy], ācārya Sthiramati wrote the work explaining the Madhyamaka-mūla from the standpoint of viññāna.⁴⁸ When copies of this work reached the south, the disciples of Bhavya objected to it. So they came to *Nalendra and had a debate with the disciples of Sthiramati. The followers of the doctrine of nature-lessness claim that in this debate the disciples of Bhavya were victorious. But this debate should be viewed as similar to that between *Candragomī and Candrakīrti.

Many Tibetans say that Buddhapālita was a disciple of ārya Nāgārjuna during the first half of his [Nāgārjuna's] life, while 47. V n 'i.e. changed their usual human bodies into celestial bodies'. cf Watters ii.223f.

48. dbu-ma-rtsa-ba'i-dgoṅs-pa-rnam-rig-tu-'grel-'pa'i-rnam-bśad. See Supplementary Note 12.

Bhavya was his disciple during the second half of his life, that they entered into a controversy and that Buddhapālita was reborn as Candrakīrti. All these are, however, irrational and groundless. Others reject all these and try to resolve the difficulty with the claim : 'These [ācārya-s] were direct disciples of ācārya Nāgārjuna. Nāgārjuna acted as the upādhyāya at the upasampadā of Bhavya. Candrakīrti was the direct disciple of Āryadeva.' But how could the doctrines of these two differ even during the lifetime of Āryadeva, on whom both equally depended ? How can a person with a critical faculty believe all these ?

Now about ārya Vimuktasena.⁴⁹

Born near Jvālā-guhā⁵⁰ situated between the madhya-deśa and the south, he was the nephew of ācārya Buddhādāsa.⁵¹ [Fol 70A] The ārya received ordination of the *Kaurukullaka sect.⁵² Being a scholar of the doctrine of this sect, he had reverence for the Mahāyāna and so he went to ācārya Vasubandhu. After listening to the Prajñā-pāramitā, he fully memorised the entire Prajñā-pāramitā-sūtra. However, failing to listen to his instructions, he became the last disciple of ācārya Saṃgharakṣita and received from him the instructions on the Prajñā-pāramitā.

According to the account current in Tibet, this ācārya was a disciple of ācārya Vasubandhu⁵³ and surpassed him as a scholar in Prajñā-pāramitā. According to some Indians, he was a

49. cf Bu-ston ii.155f : 'He was the principal of many great monasteries, belonged (at first) to the sect of the Kaurukullakas and was the nephew of the teacher Buddhādāsa. He attained the stage of joy (yab-tu-dga'-ba=pramuditā).' Practically the same is said in the eolophons of his Ārya-pañcaviṃśati-sāhasrikā-prajñāpāramitopadeśa-sūtra-abhisamaya-alamkāra-kārikā-vārtika (mDo ii.1) and vṛtti (mDo i.2). Obermiller Bu-ston ii.156n—Tsoñ-kha-pa in his gSer-phreñ expresses doubt as regards the authorship of Abhisamaya-alamkāra-vārtika.

50. 'bar-ha'i-phug.

51. V wrongly translates the name here as Buddhapālita.

52. see note 49 above.

53. V n 'i.e. he was not his contemporary, which is probable.'

disciple of Dignāga and could not have touched the feet of Vasubandhu; he listened to the Prajñā-pāramitā-abhisamaya from ācārya Dharmadāsa, though he received instructions on it from Bhavya. However, from the account most widely spread in the ārya-deśa, it appears that he was the last disciple of Vasubandhu. Among the followers of this ācārya the following account is current.

Feeling tired of too many scriptural works, he wanted to remove his weariness in the meditation on the Prajñā-pāramitā. As a result of this meditation, he had a special form of bliss. He had no doubt about the significance [of the Prajñā-pāramitā]. Still he felt disturbed by certain discrepancies between the wordings of a sūtra and those of certain parts of the Abhisamaya-alamkāra. At that time, ārya Maitreya instructed him in dream: 'Go to the monastery of Vārāṇasī, where you will attain great success.' [Fol 70B] As he went there in the morning, he met upāsaka Śāntivarman,⁵⁴ who was renowned for his gift of the *gab*⁵⁵ and who brought the text of the [Pañca-viṃśati-sāhasrikā-aṣṭa-adhyāya]⁵⁶ from *Potala in the south. He found [on the basis of this] the wordings of the sūtra to agree with those of [Abhisamaya]-alamkāra and felt relieved. He composed a work explaining the Sūtra-aṣṭa-adhyāya and Abhisamaya-alamkāra from the Mādhyamika standpoint of nature-lessness. In this he synthesised all the sūtra-s and alamkāra-s. Such [a work] did not exist before this ācārya, because the [Pañca-viṃśati-sāhasrikā-āloka]⁵⁷ says, 'This was not realised before by others.'

Later on, he became the preceptor of a feudatory ruler in the east and, as the head of twentyfour monasteries, he assiduously read and taught the Prajñā-pāramitā. Among the listeners to the Prajñā-pāramitā-sūtra, the number of only the bhikṣu-s exceeded thousands within a short period. About

54. shi-ba'i-go-cha.

55. P-ed lcags-kyi-byin-pa-can. S-ed ljags-kyi-byin-pa. (lcags=armour, ljags=gab). The latter reading followed.

56. V 'Twenty thousand pāramitā-s in eight sections.' But in the note, he says Pañca-viṃśati-sāhasrikā.

57. ñi-khri-snañ-ba- thirty years passed like this. Both in India and Tibet, this ācārya is famed as one who reached the first stage of saintly perfection [prathama-bhūmi].⁵⁸

According to some, he was not really an ārya, for he was still in the yoga-mārga. Still he was called an ārya because he reached a stage very near it. According to some others, he was really a pr̥thak-jana and the word ārya is only a part of his name Ārya-vimuktasena: just as the word Buddha in the name of king Buddha-pakṣa is not taken by any for the Buddha himself. According to still others, he was a bodhisattva, who had previously traversed the path of the Hina[-yāna].

There are many anecdotes like these. But I have come across no difference of opinion in the matter of viewing him as a great and wonderful person. How could one know whether internally he was a pr̥thak-jana or an ārya in spiritual perfection? His conduct and teachings were obviously those of a pious pr̥thak-jana.

Now about ācārya Triratnadāsa.

[Fol 71A] He listened to the Abhidharma-piṭaka from ācārya Vasubandhu, studied under many piṭaka-dhara scholars of different places and was a close friend of Dignāga. He also became a disciple of Dignāga, because he studied the Prajñā-pāramitā under him. It is said that in wisdom he was equal to Dignāga. He composed⁵⁹ the commentary on the Aṣṭa-sāhasrikā [-prajñā-pāramitā-] saṃgraha. Dignāga also prepared a work⁶⁰ on the precise meaning of the Guṇāparyanta-stotra written by him.

According to some historians of the Doctrine, ācārya Triratnadāsa was but another name of ācārya Śūra,⁶¹ and further Śūra and Dignāga were mutual preceptors and disciples, inasmuch as he [Dignāga] appended the Miśraka-stotra to

58. Bu-ston ii.155 also refers to the stage of pramuditā (the first stage), though the colophon of mDo ii.1 refers to his attainment of the sixth bhūmi, called adhimukti.

59. See note 15 of this chapter.

60. Tg bsTod 46 = mDo xxxiii.97 Guṇāparyanta-stotra-tīkā by Dignāga.

61. V Śūra (Aśvaghoṣa).

[Śūra's] Stotra-śata-pañcāśatka.⁶² Such a statement must be due either to listening to a wrong history or to the wrong recording of what was rightly told. In any case, the statement is fanciful. Besides, in the Miśraka-stotra of Dignāga are either analysed the compounds of the Stotra-śata-pañcāśatka or are merely clarified its significance.⁶³ Therefore, it simply formed a commentary. The works of these two ācārya-s are to be understood as different.

Later on, this ācārya [Triratnadāsa] went to the south and, as the head of several monasteries, preached the Doctrine to many people. He went to *Drabala,⁶⁴ established fifty new and large centres for the Doctrine and for a long time added lustre to the Law. He eventually brought a yakṣiṇī under control and went to the great mountain called The Hundred Flowers.⁶⁵ [Fol 71B] During the same period, upāsaka Śāntivarman also went to-*Potala.⁶⁶

62. V n 'Mātṛceṭa (i.e. Aśvaghōṣa himself).' Evidently, Tār also has here in mind the same idea of identification of Mātṛceṭa, Aśvaghōṣa and Śūra. In Tg, Miśraka-stotra (bsTod 41) is attributed to Dignāga and Mātṛceṭa, while Śatapañcāśatka-stotra (bsTod 38) to Aśvaghōṣa. cf F. W. Thomas in ERE viii.496, who quotes I-Tsing in this connection.

63. In Tg, the commentary (bsTod 39) on Satapañcāśatka-stotra is attributed to Rāmapriya. cf I-Tsing (Takakusu) 151, who attributes the stotra to Mātṛceṭa, and comments, 'There are many who have written commentaries on them, nor are the imitations of them few. Bodhisattva Jina (Dignāga) himself composed such an imitation. He added one verse before each of the one hundred and fifty verses, so that they became altogether three hundred verses, called the Mixed Hymns. A celebrated priest of the Deer Park, Śākyadeva by name, again added one verse to each of Jina's, and consequently they amounted to four hundred and fifty verses, called the Doubly Mixed Hymns.'

64. S-ed Dvravali.

65. me-tog-hgya-pa. V Śatapuṣpa. V n 'which, S remarks, can be the same as Śatruṅjaya.' see Sircar CGEIL 104

66. D 785—Potala or Potalaka, the residence of Avalokiteśvara and āryā Tārā on a hill situated in a harbour somewhere in the Indian Ocean. cf Watters ii.229ff.

This upāsaka attained most of the marks of siddhi by propitiating ārya Avalokiteśvara in a forest of *Puṇḍravardhana. A king called *Śubhasāra saw in his dream as if ārya Avalokiteśvara was invited and brought to his country and immediately Jambudvīpa was rid of famine and epidemic and prosperity was restored there. [And it was predicted that] for this purpose, the same upāsaka dwelling in the forest had to be sent to the *Potala mountain.

The king summoned the upāsaka and gave him a pearl necklace, the letter of invitation and paṇa-s (money) for travelling expenses. The upāsaka thought : 'The journey being long and full of hazards is likely to involve the risk of life. Since, however, he is requesting me to go to the abode of the tutelary deity, it will not be proper to disobey him.' Thinking thus, he started with the road-guide⁶⁷ on his way to *Potala. He reached the Śrī Dhānyakaṭake⁶⁸ caitya in the island of *Dhanaśrī. While moving from there to *Potala, he had to go through a subterranean way a little and then by a route over the earth, which, though existing at that time, is now under the sea. That is why people these days cannot use this route.

Then he failed to cross a great river on the way. Following the road-guide, he prayed to Tārā and an old woman appeared with a boat and took him across. Further on, failing to cross another sea, when he prayed to Bhṛkuṭī, a girl with a raft appeared and took him across. Then he reached the fringe of a forest and could not pass through it because of a forest fire. When he prayed to Hayagrīva [Fol 72A] it rained and the fire was extinguished. Lightning showed him the way. Again, he could not proceed because the path was cut off by a ravine many yojana-s deep. When he prayed to Eka-jatī, a huge serpent appeared and served as a bridge, enabling him to cross it. Then his path was obstructed by many apes, as big as elephants. When he prayed to Amoghapāśa, these huge apes gave him the way and brought delicious food for him.

67. lam-yig—D 1210. Interestingly, Tg contains a work, attributed to śrīmat Potalaka Bhaṭṭāraka (Avalokiteśvara), with the title Potalaka-gamana-mārga-patrikā (rG lxxii.51).

68. 'bras-spi.ās. Roerich in BĀ ii.754—Amarāvati in the Sattenapalle Taluka of Guntur District, Madras. cf Watters ii.214ff.

From there he reached the foot of *Potala but could not climb up the rocky hill. When he prayed to ārya Avalokiteśvara, there came down a ladder made of canes. With this he climbed up. Because of dense fog he failed to see the way. When he prayed for a long time, the fog cleared up. He saw the image of Tārā at the third stage of the hill and on its middle the image of Bhṛkuṭī. Reaching the top of the hill [he saw] nothing but some flowers remaining scattered in an empty place. He sat in a corner there and prayed for a month. Then appeared a woman who said, 'Ārya has arrived. Come along.' Saying this, she took him along and opened one thousand doors of the palace one after the other. With the opening of each door, he attained a stage of samādhi. Then he saw ārya Pañca-deva.⁶⁹ He offered flowers to him and placed before him the king's letter and offerings. When he prayed to him to visit the Jambudvīpa, he [ārya] accepted it, gave the upāsaka a large sum of paṇa*-s as his travelling expenses and said, 'On your way back, spend these for your maintenance. I shall come when these paṇa*-s [Fol 72B] are exhausted.' Thus saying he directed him the route back. He had direct vision of the goddesses whose images were there in the middle and on the third stages of the hill. Of the fifteen days of his journey back, when the fourteenth day arrived, he felt delighted to see the hills of Puṇḍravardhana and spent the remaining paṇa-s in purchasing food and drink in excess, which he consumed.

Before reaching the city of the king, when he reached the place of his own meditation [i.e. the forest], all his paṇa*-s were spent out. He sat there and expected the ārya at day-break. But he [Avalokiteśvara] did not appear. As he fell asleep at midnight, he woke up by the sound of musical instruments.

69. lha-līa. V & S 'five deities'. V n 'probably the deities meant here are those of body, word, heart, merit and fate.'

Noticing the gods worshipping in the sky, he asked 'Whom are you worshipping?' [The gods said] 'Oh thou foolish son of Jambudvīpa, the ārya has arrived along with his attendants on the tree on which you are leaning back.' Then he saw the Pañcādeva himself⁷⁰ sitting on the tree. He bowed down to him and prayed, 'Please come to the country of the king.'

'That would have happened, had all your paṇa*-s been not exhausted. I shall now remain here in this way.'

As this message was sent to the king, the king felt displeased and it is said that he did not offer any reward to the upāsaka. A temple was built in that forest and it came to be known as that of Khasarpaṇa*.

It is said that [the name] Khasarpaṇa* was derived from the fact that he 'came through the sky' or because he 'came when the paṇa*-s were exhausted.'⁷¹ But it is better to use it in the sense of coming through the sky. In the alternative interpretation, Kharsa* is an equivalent for 'the price of food' and paṇa* means gold and silver coins,⁷² which is now called taṅkā*. Thus the name means, 'Coin as the price for food.'

[Fol 73A] Thus it is commonly known in India.

According to the account of the [Pañca]-viṃśati-sāhasrikā-aṣṭa-adhyāya, there is no mention of [the upāsaka] being sent by the king. Thrice he went to Potala* by himself. His first visit was in the form of a personal pilgrimage. On the second occasion, he was sent by the monks of Vārāṇasī* for solving the problem of the discrepancy [in wordings] between Abhisamaya-alaṅkāra and the sūtra. However, instead of raising this topic, he invited ārya Khasarpaṇa* himself. [After he came to Vārāṇasī] Khasarpaṇa*, on being prayed [to solve 70. V & S 'five deities themselves'.

71. S tr 'It is said that the name is Khasarpaṇa, or "moving through the sky", because Avalokiteśvara came through the sky. Others maintain that it means "the exhausting of the paṇa-s", as he (Avalokiteśvara) arrived after the paṇa-s were exhausted.'

72. The derivation suggested: khasarpaṇa = karṣa & paṇa = karṣūpaṇa or kārṣūpaṇa. karṣa, a weight of gold and silver, about 280 gr.

the problem] said, 'I am only an incarnation [of Avalokiteśvara and not Avalokiteśvara himself]. So I do not know it.' When he [the upāsaka] went to *Potala for the third time with the purpose of solving the problem, he brought back with him the Aṣṭa-adhyāya.

It is said that ārya *Khasarpaṇa Pañcadeva⁷³ personally appeared before him and directly received the offerings made by him. When the robbers, greedy for the wealth of this upāsaka, were about to kill him, he thought that this was but the inevitable result of his past actions and said, 'Place my head on the hand of [the image of the] ārya.' The robbers did accordingly. Tears came out of the eyes [of the image] of the ārya and entered into the hole of his [upāsaka's] skull⁷⁴ and it turned into a relic. From then on, he [ārya] does not accept any direct offering. Thus it is said.

The twentythird chapter containing the account of the period of ācārya Dignāga and others.

73. S 'the five ārya Khasarpaṇa gods'. V 'the five deities Khasarpaṇa.'

74. S-ed klad-khu-sa-ru. V & S tr 'and as the forehead fell on the earth, it became a relic'. P-ed klad-khuñ-du: 'entered into the hole of his skull.'

CHAPTER 24

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF KING ŚĪLA

After king *Śrīharṣa, his son Śīla¹ became the king.

He was previously (i.e. in his previous birth) a monk well-versed in the three piṭaka-s. He went to beg at the palace of a certain king where a grand festival was going on. But he received no alms and was turned out by the gate-keepers. He fasted and, while dying of hunger, prayed, 'May I become a king, worship the Three Jewels and [Fol 73B] satisfy the ordained monks with food.'

As a result, he became a very prosperous king and offered good food to the monks of the four directions.

He built a palace in the city called *La-tā and lived for one hundred and forty years. He ruled for about a hundred years. He ascended the throne towards the end of Guṇaprabha's life.

In the east there was a very powerful king called Siṃha,² belonging to the *Licchavi line. During his time was born ācārya *Candragomī.

King *Bharṣa [? Varṣa], son of king Siṃha, also ruled for a long time.

In the *Candra dynasty, king *Siddhacandra ascended the throne. Because of his limited power, he had to obey the orders of kings Siṃha and *Bharṣa.

This was the period of the second half of the lives of Bhavya and ārya Vimuktasena and the period of the latter half of ācārya Sūryagupta,³ of Paramasena,⁴ a disciple of Vimuktasena,

1. ñān-tshul.

2. señ-ge.

3. ñi-ma-sbas. Evidently not the logician Ravigupta who belonged to a much later period (Stcherbatsky BL i.43f) and who is mentioned in Tibetan as ñi-ma-bsruñ-ba (author mDo civ.1 & cviii.3). We have in Tg a number of works on Tārāsādhana (rG xxvi.3 ; 4 ; 5 ; 6 ; 7 ; 8 ; lxxii.47 ; lxxxii.51) by one Sūryagupta of Kashmir, whose name in Tibetan is given as ñi-ma-sbas. Tār in Fol 74A mentions him as Tārā-śiddha. Hence, the reconstruction of the name here as Ravigupta by V appears to be unacceptable.

4. mchog-sde. V & S Varasena.

and of *Kamalabuddhi, a disciple of Buddhapālita.

Ārya Candramaṇi,⁵ a disciple of Guṇaprabha, and Jayadeva,⁶ the upādhyāya of *Nalendra, were contemporaries. In the south also lived ācārya Candrakīrti.⁷ This was about the period of the first part of the lives of ācārya Dharmapāla,⁸ ācārya Śāntideva⁹ and of siddha *Vīru-pā. Evidently, ārya *Saga-deva¹⁰ also lived during this period, because in the Puṣpa-mālā-tantra,¹¹ translated by lo-tśā-ba Prajñākīrti¹² of sñel-tsor, is said : 'It [Puṣpa-mālā] was composed by ārya *Saga-deva, a disciple of ārya Saṅghadāsa.' Hence it is necessary to determine whether he was a Śrāvaka arhat or not.

[Fol 74A] Of these [ācārya-s] belonging to this period, I have not heard the account of Paramasena and *Kamalabuddhi. I have not come across any detailed account of Candramaṇi beyond that he was the preceptor of king Śīla.

Now about Sūryagupta.

He held that the views of ācārya Nāgārjuna were the same as those of Asaṅga. In both Kashmir and *Magadha he built twelve big centres for the Doctrine. He employed the yakṣa-s to collect the materials required for these. He protected all the 'insiders' from the eightfold dangers.¹³ He was also a

5. zla-ba'i-nor-bu.

6. rgyal-ba'i-lha. Tg contains a commentary by Dīpaṅkara-śrī-jñāna (rG xlvi. 145) on Jayadeva's Mūlapatti, which however is not traced in Tg.

7. zla-ba-grags-pa.

8. chos-skyoñ. see Fol 80B.

9. shī-ba-lha.

10. sa-ga-lha. V & S Viśākhadeva, which is another name by which he was known. See next note.

11. Tg mDo lxxxix.1 Ārya-mūla-sarvāstivāda-vinaya-kārikā Puṣpa-mālā-nāma by saga-lha (Sagadeva or Viśākhadeva), a disciple of mañā-vinayadhara ārya Saṅghadāsa. cf BA i.82.

12. śes-rab-grags.

13. viz. dangers from lion, elephant, fire, snake, robber, chains (prison), water and flesh-eater (śa-za). Tg contains several works on Aṣṭa-bhaya-trāṇa: (rG lxxviii.46 by Lakṣmīṅkarā; rG lxxi.38 by Atīśa; etc).

bhikṣu proficient in magic spells and was Tārā-siddha. His account is to be known from other sources.

Also Jayadeva, a scholar of many śāstra-s, lived for a long time in *Nalendra as a mahā-ācārya. I have not come across any detailed account of him.

At that time the tooth¹⁴ relic of the Buddha reached *Ha-sa-ma [Assam] in the north. The poet Guhyadatta,¹⁵ a disciple of ācārya Saṅghadāsa, and *Ratnamati,¹⁶ a disciple of Dharmadāsa,¹⁷ along with hundreds of thousands of others belonging to 'the four classes of followers' who acted according to the Doctrine, began to worship the tooth-relic. The tradition of this (worship) still continues in *Pu-khañ.¹⁸

Now about Śrī Candrakīrti.

He was born in *Samanta¹⁹ in the south. He mastered all the branches of knowledge at an early age, was ordained in the same place in the south and became a scholar of all the piṭaka-s. He learnt all the śāstra-s and upadeśa-s of Nāgārjuna [Fol 74B] from many disciples²⁰ of Bhavya and from *Kamalabuddhi, a disciple of Buddhapālita.²¹ He became the master-scholar among scholars and the upādhyāya of Śrī *Nalendra.

He extensively propagated the doctrine of Buddhapālita by composing²² the Mūla [i.e. the Mūla-madhyamaka-vṛtti-

14. mche-ba. D 435, tooth—though generally the canine tooth.

15. gšan-ba-byin. Tg contains Rakta-yamāntaka-pañcadvēbhīsamaya-siddhi Mañjari-nāma (rG lxxxi.27) and Sapta-kumārikā-avadāna (mDo xxxiii.42=mDo xc.20) by Guhyadatta, a disciple of Saṅghadāsa.

16. The name is mentioned in the colophon of Tg mDo cxvi.16.

17. chos-'bañs.

18. See Fol 129A.

19. The colophon of Tg mDo xxiv.1 mentions the birth-place of Candrakīrti as Samata (Samanta). cf Bu-ston ii.134—Samana.

20. S 'a disciple', but the text has mah-po (many).

21. S tr 'from Kamalabuddhi, a disciple of Bhavya as well as of Buddhapālita.'

22. For works of Candrakīrti, see Supplementary Note 29. Bu-ston ii.134f—'the most celebrated of his works, those which resemble the sun and the moon', are the Prasannapadā (commentary on the Mūla-madhyamaka) and Pradīpa-uddiyotana (commentary on Guhya-saṅgajātāntara).

Prasannapadā-nāma], the Avatāra [i.e. the Madhyamaka-avatāra-kārikā-nāma], the Cataḥ [i.e. the Bodhisattva-yoga-caryā-catuḥśataka-tīkā],—these three and the Yukti-ṣaṣṭikā-vṛtti.

By milking the milk cow drawn on a picture, he used to satisfy the entire saṃgha with thickened milk (kṣīra). Even the stone-pillar could not obstruct the movement of his hand. He could freely move through the wall.²³ He showed many wonderful feats like these and defeated many tīrthika opponents.

At last he went to the south (again) and in the country called *Koñ-ku-na²⁴ defeated many tīrthika rivals, converted most of the brāhmaṇa-s and householders into the followers of the Law and established many big centres for the Doctrine.

According to the mantra-ācārya-s, he again spent a long time in the *Manu-bhaṅga hill, strove after the highest siddhi following the mantra-yāna and attained the rainbow-body.

According to the Tibetan account, he lived for three hundred years and showed marvellous feats like driving away the *Turuṣka army while riding a stone-lion.

The latter (account) could have been true. As for the former, however, if he did attain the rainbow-body, he must have had become immortal. As such, the question of [living for] three hundred years does not arise. Obviously, it can neither be claimed that he lived [for three hundred years] in this world with his mortal body.

Now about ācārya *Candragomī.

In the east, [Fol 75A] in Varendra, there lived a paṇḍita who attained the vision of ārya Avalokiteśvara. He entered into a debate with a tīrthika Lokāyata²⁵ teacher. He defeated his [tīrthika's] views no doubt; yet [the tīrthika claimed] that arguments depended on intellect and hence one with keener intellect gained victory. [So he said]

'There is no direct evidence for anterior and posterior existence. So I do not admit this.'

23. cf Bu-ston ii.134.

24. P-ed Goñ-ku-na. S-ed Koñ-ku-na. The latter reading followed.

25. rgyah-'phen-pa.

Being thus told, he kept the king and others as witnesses and said, 'I am going to be reborn. Put a mark on my forehead.'

He placed on his forehead a mark of vermilion cut deep into the flesh. Putting a pearl into his mouth, he (the paṇḍita) died on the spot.

His corpse was kept in a covered copper-vessel and it was sealed by the king.

According to his promise to be reborn as the son of a kṣatriya paṇḍita* called Viśeṣaka*, a son with auspicious marks was born to the latter. His forehead was found to have the mark of vermilion and within his mouth was found the pearl. On being examined by the king and others, the deadbody was found to have no mark of vermilion on the forehead and the place where the pearl was kept was found empty. It is said that the same tīrthika then believed in the past and future existence.

Immediately after being born, the child bowed down before the mother and said, 'I hope you did not suffer much²⁶ during these ten months.' The mother thought it was ominous for a new-born baby to speak and so she said, 'Stop talking.'

He did not speak for seven years and passed for one dumb.

At that time a tīrthika rival composed an extremely difficult [Fol 75B] treatise in verse. The purport of this poetry was the refutation of the views of the Buddhists. [Copies of it] were offered to the king and scholars.

A copy reached the house of Viśeṣaka*. In spite of examining it for a long time, he could not understand even its literal meaning, not to speak of refuting it. Pondering on it, he went out of the house for some work. The seven years old Candragomī* examined the poem, understood its purport and found no difficulty in refuting it. He explained its purport in the form of a short gloss and also wrote verses in refutation of it.

As the father returned home and found this piece of writing, he asked Candragomī*'s mother whether any one had come to the house.

26. V & S tr 'I hope you did not faint during these ten months.' This is perhaps because of misreading 'o-brgyal-ba (suffer) as brgyal-ba (faint).

'Nobody came. This dumb boy was reading and writing.'

On being questioned by the father, the son kept dumb, looking at the mother's face.

The mother said, 'Speak out.'

Then he said, 'I wrote this' and added, 'It is not at all difficult to defeat this rival.'

The next morning, a debate was organised between *Candragomī and the ūrthika teacher. *Candragomī was declared victorious and he received a grand reward.

Thus by himself he acquired proficiency in grammar, logic and all other general branches of knowledge without studying these [under anybody]. His fame was spread in all directions.

He then received the śaraṇa-gamana and the five śikṣā-s from a Mahāyāna teacher and learnt by heart most of the Sūtra-s and the Abhidharma-piṭaka [Fol 76A] after listening to these only once from mahā-ācārya Sthiramati. He received instructions from a vidyādhara ācārya called Aśoka,²⁷ attained siddhi in magic spells and had direct vision of ārya Avalokiteśvara and Tārā. Thus he became a profound scholar.

He next composed²⁸ many treatises on medicine, prosody, fine arts²⁹ etc, in the land of king *Bharṣa [? Varṣa] in the east. He excelled particularly in treatises on grammar.

He next married princess *Tārā and received a province from the king.³⁰

He once heard a female attendant addressing her as *Tārā and he thought that it was not proper to live [the conjugal life] with anybody bearing the same name as that of the tutelary deity. So the ācārya was about to leave for some other place.

The king came to know of this and said, 'If he does not live with my daughter, put him into a box and throw it into

27. mya-han-med-pa. Tg contains a number of Tāntrika treatises attributed to Aśoka or Aśokaśrī—rG lxi.13 ; 16-22 ; lxxi.359 ; lxxxi.18.

28. For works of Candragomī, see Supplementary Note 30.

29. V architecture. The Indian equivalent seems to be śilpa-sthāna-vidyā—Roerich SW 506n.

30. cf Bu-ston ii.132.

the *Gaṅgā.³¹ This was done as ordered by the king. The ācārya prayed to *bhaṭṭārikā āryā Tārā*³² and was drifted to an island at the confluence of the *Gaṅgā on the sea.

According to some, this island was miraculously created by the āryā and it was called the *Candradvīpa, because *Candragomī lived there. It is said that the island still exists and is large enough to have seven thousand villages.

While residing on the island, he set up the stone images of ārya Avalokiteśvara and [āryā] Tārā. The fishermen first heard about these and gradually other people also collected there and it grew into a city.

[Fol 76B] Instructed by ārya Avalokiteśvara, he became a gomī*³³ upāsaka. His own name was *Candra. Thus he came to be known as *Candragomī.

The merchants took him to the Siṅ-ga-la* (Siṃhala) island which was infested with *nāga-roga*³⁴ (leprosy). As he built the temple of ārya Siṃhanāda,³⁵ the disease was miraculously stamped out. Here also he widely spread the knowledge of the fine arts, medicine and other branches of learning. Thus he caused welfare in various forms to the simple folk of this small island. He also preached there—though partly—the Mahāyāna doctrine. With the wealth obtained from the Yakṣa ruler of the place, he built there many centres for the Doctrine.

He then returned to the south of Jambudvīpa*. In the temple of brāhmaṇa Vararuci, he came across the image³⁶ of 31. Ib.

32. sgrol-ma.

33. V & S 'gomī or upāsaka'. S n 'unless gomī was not a special form of upāsaka'. But Roerich BA i.297—vows of gomī, 'abstaining from sexual life'.

34. klu-nad. In Tg a work called Kuṣṭha-cikitsopāya (rG lxx.151) is ascribed to Candragomī.

35. Tg contains Siṃhanāda-sādhana (rG lxxi.24=lxviii.165) ascribed to Candragomī.

36. The text is obscure. It has the word bkod-pa, lit. 'form'. Hence S translates 'image' (Aufban). But V tr 'In the temple of (founded by) Vararuci, he came across the tenets of grammar heard from the Nāga and a commentary on Pāṇini composed by Śeṣa Nāga.'

[Vararuci] listening to grammar from the Nāga and the commentary on *Paṇi grammar as expounded by *Śeṣa-nāga.

[He thought] A commentary should be brief in words, profound in significance, without repetition and complete. But the naive Nāga [prepared a commentary which is] verbose, poor in purport, full of repetitions and is incomplete.

Thus criticising [the Nāga], he composed a commentary on *Paṇi.³⁷ It is called the *Candra-vyākaraṇa and is complete in all the sections. 'This work, though brief, is clear and complete,'—even this comment was a harsh criticism of the Nāga.

Then he went to Śrī *Nalendra, the mine of learning.

At that time, those among the *paṇḍita-s of *Nalendra who were capable of arguing with the tīrthika-s preached the Doctrine outside the boundary walls while those who were incapable of this preached within. Candrakīrti, who was then the upādhyāya, was once preaching outside [the boundary wall]. *Candragomī reached there and stood listening.

[Fol 77A] Usually those who wanted to challenge did like this [i.e. remained standing]. Others either did not listen at all or listened with reverence. So Candrakīrti thought, 'Is he an opponent calling for a debate?' And he asked 'Where do you come from?'

'I am coming from the south' [Candragomī] said

On being asked, 'What subjects do you know?' he said, 'I know the three, viz. *Paṇi grammar, the *Stuti-śata-pāñcāśikā*³⁸ and the Nāma-saṃgīti.'³⁹

Thus, though in words he did not express pride in so far as he said that he knew nothing beyond these three treatises, by implication he claimed that he knew all about grammar, sūtra and tantra.⁴⁰

[Candrakīrti] thought, 'So, is this *Candragomī?' and asked him accordingly.

37. cf Bu-ston ii.133. For grammatical works attributed to Candragomī, see Supplementary Note 30.

38. bsTod 38,

39. Tg rG lix=lx.

40. cf Bu-ston ii.132.

'Thus I am known in this world'.

'Then it is not appropriate for a great scholar to appear like a flash of lightning. He should be properly welcomed by the saṃgha. So, please return to the city for the time being.'

*Candragomī said, 'I am only an upāsaka. How can I be welcomed by the saṃgha ?'

Candrakīrti said, 'There is a way out. An image of ārya Mañjuśrī will be invited. Please come fanning the image with a cāmara.⁴¹ The saṃgha will welcome the image of Mañjuśrī.'

When this was arranged, there came three chariots in the middle one of which was placed [the image of] ārya Mañjuśrī, Candrakīrti waving the cāmara from the right and *Candragomī from the left. The saṃgha welcomed from the front. Numerous people gathered to see this. The image appeared as real Mañjughoṣa to *Candragomī who offered the stuti : 'Oh Mañjughoṣa, though thou art eulogised by tens of millions [Fol 77B] of tathāgata-s of the ten directions...'

The image of Mañjuśrī turned its face sideways, as if listening to him. The people said, 'Look ! look ! what the image is doing !' So it (the image) remained fixed. Hence it was called the Ārya with the Neck Turned Left.⁴² *Candragomī's reverence became most profound.

As the charioteer failed to pull back, his chariot moved before that of Candrakīrti.⁴³ Candrakīrti thought, 'He is highly insolent and hence I must have a debate with him.'⁴⁴

In this [debate], following the views of Asaṅga, *Candragomī defended the doctrine of vijñāna. Following the śāstra-s of Nāgārjuna as interpreted by Buddhapālita and others, Candrakīrti defended the doctrine of nature-lessness (svabhāva-hīnatā). For seven years they went on arguing with each other. A large number of people was always present to listen to this 41. r̥ṇa-yab.

42. cf Bu-ston ii.133.

43. V tr 'Candragomī, swept by the power of reverence, did not control the wheel and went ahead of Candrakīrti, who thought...'

44. S tr 'and he wishes to have a debate with me'. But the text has bdag-gis-rtsoḍ-par-bya'o, 'I must have a debate with him'.

debate. Even the local boys and girls understood it partially and they sang :⁴⁵

‘Ah, the śāstra of ārya Nāgārjuna is medicine for some, but poison for others. The śāstra of Ajita and ārya Asaṅga is nectar for all.’⁴⁶

Once, towards the end of the debate⁴⁷ [the following happened].

*Candragomī used to sit in the temple of Avalokiteśvara and to receive from him during the night answers to the arguments put forth by Candrakīrti during the day. In the (next) morning he used to offer these answers, which Candrakīrti could not refute. This went on for many months. So Candrakīrti thought : ‘Somebody must be teaching him these arguments.’ Thinking thus, he followed *Candragomī [FoI 78A] to the temple. From outside the door, he overheard the stone-image of ārya Avalokiteśvara teaching the Doctrine to *Candragomī, much in the manner in which an ācārya teaches his disciple.

‘So is not the ārya showing partiality ?’⁴⁸—Saying this Candrakīrti opened the door and he [Avalokiteśvara] immediately turned himself into a stone-image [again]. Its finger remained raised in the posture of teaching the Doctrine. From then on, it came to be known as ‘the ārya with the fore-finger raised.’

And thus the debate came to its end.⁴⁹

Being earnestly prayed to by Candrakīrti, Avalokiteśvara told him in a dream, ‘You are already blessed by Mañjuḥṣa

45. S tr ‘started taking sides’. V tr ‘partially’.

46. V tr ‘Ah ! Of the works of ārya Nāgārjuna,

Some are a medicine and the others poison.

But the works of Ajita (Maitreya) and ārya Asaṅga

Are only a nectar for all people.’

47. cf Bu-ston ii.134. See Roerich SW 549 for Chag lo-tṣā-ba’s account of the same.

48. V & S tr ‘Candrakīrti opened the door to see whether the ārya was nearby.’ But the text has ñe-riñ, which should better be taken here as ‘partial’—D487.

49. V n ‘Because Candrakīrti considered it impossible to argue with divinity.’

and as such you are not in need of my blessings. So I have bestowed some blessings on *Candragomī.⁵⁰

Such is the generally prevalent account. But the followers of the Guhyasamāja claim that on being prayed for another vision [by Candrakīrti, Avalokiteśvara] said, 'Meditate on the Guhya-samāja.' After seven days of meditation, he had the vision of the coral-red body of Avalokiteśvara at the western gate of the maṇḍala.

After this he [Candragomī] stayed at *Nalendra and preached⁵¹ the Doctrine to many. He came across there an excellent verse treatise on grammar called the *Samantabhadra*⁵² by Candrakīrti. He realised that his own work on grammar was not of much poetical worth. He thought that it was not going to cause welfare to the living beings and threw the work into a well. But bhaṭṭārikā āryā Tārā told him, 'You worked on this with the noble intention of causing welfare to the living beings. In the future it will be immensely useful for the intelligent living beings. Since Candrakīrti is proud of his scholarship, [Fol 78B] it [his work] will be of limited use for others. So you take out your book from the well.'

As a result of this prediction,⁵² he took it out of the well. Those who drank water from this well were immediately filled with great wisdom. From then on, that [work] of *Candra remains widely prevalent until now. All the 'insiders' and 'outsiders' study it. But the Samantabhadra was soon lost, the existence of the book is hardly known today.

After this, he (Candragomī) composed treatises on hundred subjects like fine arts, grammar, logic, medicine, prosody, dramaturgy, dictionary, poetics, astronomy, etc.

When he was teaching all these to the pupils, āryā Tārā told him :

50. P-ed bskul. S-ed bstan. The latter followed.

51. In Tg Vyākaraṇa-liṅgāvatāra (mDo cxxiv.4) of Thon-mi-sambho'a, section 6 of which is the Samantabhadra-vyākaraṇa attributed to Candrakīrti. cf Bu-ston ii.133.

52. luñ-bstan. V instruction.

'Better read the works like the Daśabhūmaka, Candrapradīpa, Gaṇḍālamkāra, Laṅkāvatāra and the Prajñā-[pāramitā-sūtra] of the Jinas. What is the use of your construing verses on trivial subjects?'⁵³

Thus instructed, he curtailed the teaching of secular knowledge⁵⁴ and continuously studied and preached these five wonderful sūtra-s. He also prepared the gists of these sūtra-s

It is said that in all he composed four hundred and thirty-two separate works, of which one hundred and eight were stotra-s, one hundred and eight treatises on esoteric knowledge, one hundred and eight treatises on secular knowledge and one hundred and eight on the fine arts. In the work called the Pradīpa-mālā* [Pradīpa-mālā-śāstra] were shown all the stages of the path (mārgakrama) of the Bodhisattva. But this is not now much in circulation.⁵⁵

[Fol 79A] It is said that in the Drāviḍa⁵⁶ country and in the *Siñ-ga-la island, its teachings are still existing. All the Mahāyāna paṇḍita-s that came after him studied his Samvara-viṃśaka [*Bodhisattva-samvara-viṃśaka*⁵⁷] and the Kāya-traya-avatāra.⁵⁸ The Tārā-sādhana-śataka and the Avalokiteśvara-sādhana-śataka of this ācārya are extant in Tibetan translations. Thus it is clear that, generally speaking, he composed a large number of treatises.

53. Given in verse. V tr 'Read (teach) Prajñāpāramitā-(sūtra-s), on ten bhūmi-s

And Candrapradīpa, the mother of victors,
Gaṇḍālamkāra and Laṅkāvatāra !
 Why should you engage yourself to prosody
 And useless and false composition ?

54. V 'external sciences'.

55. cher-ma-dar. S tr 'But the text is no longer extant'.

56. gro-ldiū*. V & S Dramila.

57. mDo lxi.12.

58. cf Bu-ston ii.133. Tg has a number of works on Kāyatraya (by Nāgārjuna—bsTod 15 ; by Nāgamitra—mDo xxxix.1 ; by Jñāna-candra—mDo xxix.2 ; an anonymous one—bsTod 16); but no such work is attributed to Candragomī.

Now, an old and poor woman had a beautiful daughter. Having no means to arrange for her marriage, she went round begging in various places. On reaching *Nalendra, she heard about the enormous wealth of Candrakīrti and went to beg of him.

[Candrakīrti said] 'Being only a bhikṣu, I do not possess much wealth. The little that I have is necessary for the temples and the saṅgha. *Candragomī lives in that house. Go there and beg.'

Thus instructed, when the old woman went to *Candragomī and begged, he had nothing but a set of robes on him and a copy of the Ārya-aṣṭa-sāhasrikā[-prajñā-pāramitā]. There was a picture of Tārā drawn on the wall. Moved by the compassion for the pauper, he earnestly prayed to her [Tārā] with eyes full of tears. It [the picture] became real Tārā, took off all her ornaments made of various jewels—inclusive of an invaluable gem—and gave all these to the ācārya. He also gave all these to her.

[The old woman] was full of joy. Bereft of all the ornaments the image came to be known as Tārā without ornaments.⁵⁹ [Fol 79B] The empty places caused by the removal of the ornaments were aflame.

Working thus for the welfare of the living beings, he at last resolved to go to *Potala and sailed to the island of *Dhanaśrī from *Jambudvīpa.

*Śeṣa-nāga, to avenge the harsh criticisms of the past, sent huge tidal waves in the sea and his ship was about to be wrecked. From inside the sea, came the voice: Throw out *Candragomī.⁶⁰

When he prayed to Tārā, the company of the five—the āryā herself and her attendants—came flying there on the back of Garuḍa.⁶¹ The Nāgas fled in terror. The ship safely reached *Dhanaśrī.

59. Chag lo-tṣā-ba was shown the image—Roerich SW 558.

60. phyun-shig (to expel, to throw out). V tr 'Candragomī come out.'
S tr 'Candragomī will be saved.'

61. mkha'-ldiñ.

In the Dhānyakāṭaka caitya there, he worshipped Tārā and ārya Avalokiteśvara and built a hundred temples for each of them. He went to the *Potala hill and is still living there without renouncing his mortal body. To his disciple, he sent a letter,—the Śiṣya-lekha.⁶² This was sent through the merchants of *Potala to prince Ratnakīrti,⁶³ who was previously ordained but who eventually renounced it.⁶⁴ It is said that after receiving the Śiṣya-lekha he went on acting according to the Doctrine.

The period of the first half of the lives of Śrī Candrakīrti and *Candragomī is to be understood as the period of the reign of kings Siṃha and *Bharṣa [? Varṣa] and also the first half of the life of Dharmapāla. The period of the meeting of Candrakīrti and *Candragomī at *Nalendra was the period of the second half of their lives. It was also the period of ācārya Dharmapāla's activities for the welfare of the living beings and the period of king Pañcamasiṃha.

The twentyfourth chapter containing the account of the period of king Śīla.

62. Tg mDo xxxiii.33 Śiṣya-lekha addressed to Vīra Ratnakīrti, alias the royal prince Ratnakīrti, a disciple of Candragomī,
63. rin-chen-grags-pa. But Bu-ston ii.133 : 'At that time, there was (in Nālandā) a pupil, a monk of the kṣatriya race, who had trespassed, and had committed many sinful deeds. In order to subdue (this monk, Candragomī) wrote the Śiṣya-lekha.'
64. The text has rab-tu-byuh-ha-babs-pa-shig, lit. 'one who had fallen from the stage of ordination.' In the two commentaries on the Śiṣya-lekha, two different reasons are given for Ratnakīrti's renunciation of ordination. Vairocanamitra in the Śiṣya-lekha-ṭippaṇa (Tibetan Tripiṭaka, Vol 129, p. 227, last folio, line 4) says that when Ratnakīrti was being led by the minister to ascend the throne, Candragomī sent this letter to him. But Prajñākaramati in the Śiṣya-lekha-yṛtti (ib., Vol. 129, p. 278, first folio, line 4) gives a more romantic reason for this. According to him, Ratnakīrti renounced the vow of ordination and made love to a princess; for the purpose of bringing him back to the vow of the ordained, Candragomī wrote this letter to him. V & S misunderstand Tār and translate—'Ratnakīrti, the time of whose ordination was near ...'

CHAPTER 25

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF THE KINGS CALA, PANCAMASIMHA AND OTHERS

After the passing away of kings *Bharṣa [? Varṣa] [Fol 80A] and *Siddhacandra,¹ the king called Cala² of *Mālava³ in the west became very powerful. He could vie with king Śīla.⁴ He reigned for about thirty years and died at the same time as king Śīla.

In the east, king Pañcamasiṃha, son of *Bharṣa [?], was extremely powerful. King *Bālacandra, son of king *Siddhacandra⁵ was driven out of *Bhaṅgala and he reigned in *Tirahuti.

King Pañcamasiṃha brought under his rule the territory upto Tibet in the north, *Triliṅga in the south, *Vārāṇasī in the west and the sea in the east.

This was the period of Paramasena's⁶ disciple Vinītasena⁷ [? Vinayasena], of bhaṭṭāraka Vimuktasena⁸ of *Magadha, of Guṇaprabha's disciple Guṇamati,⁹ an expert in the Abhidharma,

1. V Siṃhacandra.

2. gyo-ba.

3. S-ed ma-mkhar, P-ed Mālava. S Mātṛkoṭa. V n 'probably Mecca'.

4. S tr 'He ruled in union with Śīla'. Could this be because of reading bdo-ba as bde-ba?

5. V Siṃhacandra.

6. mchog-sde. V & S Prasena, though V suggests as alternative Vīrasena. In Fol 73B, S reconstructs the same name as Varasena.

7. dul-ba'i-sde.

8. grol-sde. V Muktasena. V n 'This Muktasena (btsun-pa-grol-sde) or may be Mokṣasena, is clearly distinguished by the author from Vimuktasena (rnam-grol-sde), mentioned in the previous chapter. Besides, in Tg there is a commentary on the Abhisamaya attributed to 'phags-pa-grol-ba'i-sde and another commentary attributed to btsun-pa-rnam-grol-sde.' However, in Fol 80B Tār says that he has not found any detailed account of this bhadanta Vimuktasena.

9. yon-tan-blo-gros. cf Watters ii.165 & 246—mentioned by Yuan-chuang as a contemporary of Sthiramati, cf I-Tsing (Takakusu) Iviii, lix, 181.

of ācārya Dharmapāla, of Īśvarasena,¹⁰ of *Sarvajñamitra*¹¹ of Kashmir and of king Prasanna,¹² the younger son of king Bharṣa* of Magadha*. His (Prasanna's) kingdom, though small in area, was highly prosperous.

There was a king called *Puṣpa*¹³ who conquered all the territories bordering the Vindhya mountain¹⁴ in the south.

King Cala built temples in each of the four sides of his palace. For twelve years he used to offer to anybody that approached him from the 'four classes of followers' the excellent gift of the three, i.e. food, clothes and money. Their number reached about two lakhs¹⁵ in all.

King Pañcamasiṃha had reverence for both 'insiders' and 'outsiders'. For the insiders, he established about twenty¹⁶ centres for the Doctrine and built many caitya-s.

Now about king Prasanna.

[Fol 80B] He had reverence for all the scholars of Śrī Nalendra* like *Candrakīrti*¹⁷ and Candragomī*. He donated one hundred and eight¹⁸ golden¹⁹ jars filled with pearls to the funds²⁰ of this centre for the Doctrine. He made special offerings to all the temples and caitya-s of Magadha*.

I have not come across any detailed account of Vinītasena and *bhaṭṭāraka*²¹ Vimuktasena.²²

It is said that in a certain temple Vinītasena built an image of Ajitanātha who told him, 'To facilitate your work

10. dbaṅ-phyug-sde.

11. thams-cad-mkhyen-pa'i-bśes-gñen. In Tg are attributed to him rG xxvi. 10-13 ; 40 ; lxxi.379.

12. gsal-ba.

13. me-tog. V & S Puṣpa, though V suggests the alternative Kusuma.

14. ri-bo-bigs-byed.

15. bum-phrag-gñis* (two lakhs). V 'about twenty thousand'.

16. ñi-śu (twenty). V twentyfive.

17. V Dharmakīrti. Is it a misprint ?

18. brgya-rtsa-brgyad. V 'one hundred'.

19. gsev-gyi-bum-pa (golden jar). V omits golden.

20. S-ed thes (benefit), P-ed thebs (fund).

21. btsun-pa (bhaṭṭāraka). S ārya.

22. V Muktasena.

for the welfare of the living beings, build also [an image] of āryā Tārā.²³ Thus instructed, he invited *Candra-gomī and built it. Apprehensive of the *Turuṣkas, these two images were later brought to Devagiri,²⁴ which remained²⁵ there since then.²⁶

Similarly it is said of bhaṭṭāraka Vimuktasena²⁷ that he propitiated Ajitanātha for ten years. Yet he had no sign of success. So he asked ācārya Candrakīrti what was to be done. He (Candrakīrti) advised him to perform a *homa*²⁸ for removing the obscurations caused by sin. After offering twelve lakhs of homa-s, he received the vision [of Ajitanātha] in the kuṇḍa.²⁹

Now about ācārya Guṇamati.

After acquiring proficiency in all the branches of learning, he composed³⁰ a gloss³¹ on the commentary of the Abhidharma-kośa and [a commentary] on the Madhyamaka-mūla, in which, following Sthiramati, he refuted the views of Bhavya.

*Sampradūtaḥ, a disciple of Bhavya, was his contemporary. A debate (between the two) lasted for a long time in *Balapuri in the east and, it is said, that in this Guṇamati was victorious.

Now about ācārya Dharmapāla.³²

23. S adds 'who is my companion'.

24. lha'i-ri-bo.

25. V 'remained (? remains)'.

26. phyis-'byuñ (afterwards). V 'until recent (? present) time'. S 'till recent times'.

27. V Muktasena.

28. sbyin-sreg.

29. thab.

30. In Tg Pratītya-samutpādādi-vibhaṅga-nirdeśa-ṭīkā (mDo xxxvi.2) and Vyākhyā-yukti-ṭīkā (mDo lx) are attributed to Guṇamati, cf Watters i.324.

31. V & S 'he composed a commentary on the Abhidharmakośa'. This is perhaps because they overlook 'grel-bśad (ṭippani, secondary commentary) of the text.

32. chos-skyoñ, cf Watters ii,109—Yuan-chuang's preceptor Śīlabhadra received ordination under Dharmapāla. Surely not the guru of Suvarṇadvīpa who was much later—cf A. Chattopadhyaya AT 84ff. See Supplementary Note 31.

He was born in the south in a family of bards. Already in the period when still an upāsaka [Fol 81A] he became highly renowned as a bard and acquired proficiency in most of the śāstra-s of the 'insiders' and 'outsiders'. He received ordination under ācārya Dharmadāsa and listened to the Vinaya from him. Thus he became a great scholar and came to the madhya-deśa.

From ācārya Dignāga, he listened over again to the Piṭakas along with all the auxiliary branches of study and became supreme among the scholars. He used to recite a hundred major sūtra-s. He went to Vajrāsana and offered many eulogies to the tutelary deities. He propitiated bodhisattva Ākāśagarbha³³ and received his vision as appearing on top of the bodhi tree. From then on, he constantly listened to the Doctrine from ārya Ākāśagarbha.

He preached the Doctrine at Vajrāsana for over thirty years and succeeded Śrī Candrakīrti as the upādhyāya of Śrī *Nalendra. In these places he could make those pupils that fell from the main path of the Bodhisattva atone for their transgressions in the presence of ārya Ākāśagarbha either directly or in dream. It is said that receiving wealth from the treasury of ārya Ākāśa, he met all the needs. Thus, for his own maintenance and the maintenance of the saṃgha, he used to beg from Ākāśa instead of begging from the donors. He used to silence the fīrthika opponents by the power of Krodhanīla-daṇḍa.³⁴

He composed a commentary on the *Madhyamaka-catuḥ-śatikā*³⁵ from the Vijñāna-vāda standpoint. This commentary [Fol 81B] was composed at Vajrāsana and was clearly enough earlier than Candrakīrti's Catuḥ-śataka-ṭīkā.³⁶

33. nam-mkha'i-sñiñ-po.

34. khro-bo-dbyug-pa-ñon-po.

35. Such a commentary by the earlier Dharmapāla is not traced in Tg, though in Tg madhyamaka commentaries are attributed to the later Dharmapāla of Suvarṇadvīpa, the guru of Atīśa.

36. Bodhisattva-yoga caryā-catuḥ-śataka-ṭīkā mDo xxiv.2.

It is said that he (Dharmapāla) went to the Suvarṇadvīpa in the east towards the end of his life.³⁷ He attained proficiency in alchemy and at last departed for the abode of the gods. He was the upādhyāya of *Nalendra for only a brief period. After him Jayadeva³⁸ became the upādhyāya. His [Jayadeva's] disciples were Śāntideva³⁹ and *Virū-pā.⁴⁰

Now, about the account of the latter (Virū-pā).⁴⁰

While studying in the monastery of *Nalendra, he once went to Devikoṭa.⁴¹ A woman gave him an utpala flower and a cowrie.⁴² As he accepted these, people took pity on him and said, 'Ah ! Poor fellow ! He is marked by the ḍākinī-s.'⁴³ When he asked them the cause for this, they said, 'Throw these away.' He tried to throw these off, but these remained stuck to his hands and he could not get rid of these.

Then he met an 'insider' ḍākinī and said, 'Please save me.'

She said, 'Whoever among us—be she an insider or an outsider—first offers the flower, acquires the right.'

'Is there then no way out ?'

'You will be saved if you can move beyond five yojana-s (today).'

Thus told, he moved on till the evening but could not reach it. He went to an inn, crept under an upturned earthen cauldron and meditated on the void. During the night the ḍākinī-s called everybody there. Failing to find the person marked, they searched for him again and again. They could

37. See Supplementary Note 32.

38. rgyal-ba'i-lha. See note 6 of ch 24.

39. shi-ba-lha.

40. BA refers to him as the preceptor of Dombi Heruka (i.206) and as receiving initiation from Lakṣmīṅkarā, sister of Indrabhūti (i.390). The great Avadhūti-pā or Painḍapātika received initiation from Virū-pā (i.390) and another disciple of Virū-pā was ḍākinī Sukhasiddhā (ii.731). In Tg Virū-pā is also mentioned as Bi-ru-byed-pa or Birba-pā. For his works, see Supplementary Note 32.

41. lha-mo-mkhar in Tibetan. Tg (rG vi.3) refers to the place as situated in eastern India. cf D. C. Sircar CGEIL 104.

42. 'gron-bu.

43. mkha'-gro-ma.

not find out Virū-pā and so they dispersed at the break of day.

Escaping from that place, he went back to Nalendra and became a paṇḍita. [Fol 82A] He then thought, 'Now is the time to subdue the witches.'

So he went to the Śrī Parvata⁴⁴ in the south. He received (the spell of) Yamāri from ācārya Nāgabodhi⁴⁵ and meditated on it. Thus he received the vision {of the deity}. It is said that after further prolonged meditation, he became as (powerful) as Śrī Mahākrodha.⁴⁶

From there he went to *Devikoṭa again. The same 'outsider' ḍākinī-s said, 'The person marked by us long ago has come.' They came in the night in fearful forms and wanted to gobble him up. He then drew up the Yamāri-maṇḍala and the ḍākinī-s fell unconscious and were about to die. Keeping them bound under the oath (? of doing no more harm), he returned again to *Nalendra. From then on, he took up caryā. His remaining account is to be found elsewhere.

Now about Śāntideva.

He was born as a son of a king in *Saurāṣṭra.⁴⁷ Because of his past merit he had in his dream the vision of Mañjuśrī from his early age. On growing up, when he was about to ascend the throne, he saw in a dream the throne already occupied by Mañjuśrī, who said, 'Oh son! This seat is mine, I am your kalyāṇamitra. It will be highly improper for you to sit on the same throne with me.'⁴⁸

In the dream he (also) saw āryā Tārā, in the guise of his own mother, pouring hot water on his head. When he asked the cause of this, she said, 'Kingdom is nothing but the unbearable boiling water of hell. I am consecrating you with this.'

So he realised that it was not proper for him to accept the 44. dpaḷ-gyi-ri.

45. klu'i-byañ-chub.

46. dpaḷ-khro-bo-chen-po.

47. cf Bu-ston ii.161f.

48. Ib.

kingdom. In the night just before the day of his coronation [Fol 82B] he ran away.

After walking for twentyone days, he reached a spring on the fringe of a forest. As he was about to drink the water, a woman appeared and asked him not to drink that water, and offered sweeter water instead. She led him to a Yogī living in the cave of a forest. He received samyak-upadeśa from him, attained samādhi and incomparable knowledge through meditation.

The Yogī was none but Mañjuśrī and this woman none but Tārā. Since then he had always the vision of Mañjuśrī.

From there he went towards the east⁴⁹ and lived among the attendants of king Pañcamasimpha. As he was skilled in all arts and was extremely intelligent, he was requested to become a minister. He accepted the post for the time being.

As a mark of the *āyudha*⁵⁰ of his tutelary deity, he used to keep a wooden sword constantly hanging by his side. He spread there the fine arts⁵¹ that were not known before. He also helped (the king) to rule the kingdom according to the Doctrine.

This made the other ministers jealous, who reported to the king that this man was a cheat. Even his sword was made of nothing but wood.⁵²

So all the ministers had to show their swords to the king. The ācārya told the king, 'Oh Lord ! If I draw it out, it will do you harm.' Thus told, the king became all the more suspicious and said, 'Let it harm. Nevertheless, show it to me.'

'In that case, please shut up your right eye and have a look at it with the left.'

Thus shown, the left eye of the king was destroyed by the lustre of the sword. From then on he was known as a siddha.

49. śar-phyogs (east). V south. Is it a misprint ?

50. phyag-mtshan. S symbol.

51. bzo'i-gnas.

52. S-ed ral-gri-yañ-ñiñ-las-med-do. P-ed ral...las-mad-do. (med=not ; mad=truly). The latter reading followed. V & S 'and his sword was not made of wood'. cf Bu-ston ii.164.

With great wealth and honour he (the king) tried to persuade him to stay on. He told the king, 'Look after the kingdom according to the Doctrine and establish twenty centres for the insiders.'

[Fol 83A] Instructing him thus, he went to the madhya-deśa, received ordination under upādhyāya Jayadeva and had the name Śāntideva. He lived there in the company of the paṇḍita*-s and used to eat five mahā-droṇa-s⁵³ of rice at each meal, though inwardly he was always meditating and listening to the Doctrine from ārya Mañjuśrī.

He composed⁵⁴ the magnificent works called the Śikṣā-samuccaya and Sūtra-samuccaya, studying the Doctrine in its entirety. Outwardly he appeared to sleep day and night⁵⁵ and to do nothing of the three—i.e. listening (śravaṇa), cogitating (manana) and meditating (dhyāna).

[The other paṇḍita-s] discussed among themselves and decided to drive him away, as he was causing drainage to the materials reverentially donated to the saṃgha: 'If we recite the sūtra-s by turn, he will have to go away of himself.'

When this was arranged and it was Śāntideva's turn to recite the sūtra, he at first did not agree to do so. On being repeatedly pressed, he said, 'So you prepare a seat for me and I shall recite.'

This made some of them doubtful, but most of them assembled with the idea of humiliating him. The ācārya sat on the *siṃhāsana*⁵⁶ and asked, 'Should I recite the existing ones or something new ?'

53. bre-bo-che.

54. For works attributed to Śāntideva, see Supplementary Note 33.

55. cf Bu-ston ii.162. Obermiller's note: 'bhusuku=bhuj (eat), sup (sleep) and ?' But H. P. Sastri (Prācīn Bāṅglār Gaurava 30) suggests the following etymology of bhu-su-ku :

bhūñjāno'pi prabhāsvaraḥ

supto'pi prabhāsvaraḥ

kuṭīm gato'pi prabhāsvaraḥ.

56. cf Watters i.347 'The Lion's Throne of the Buddhists was originally

For sizing him up, everybody said, 'Recite something new.'

Then he started reciting the Bodhisattva-caryā-avatāra. During the recital, he came to the verse : 'When existence and non-existence cease to be present before the intellect ...'⁵⁷ While uttering these he rose up in the sky. His body was no longer visible, but his voice continued [to be heard uninterruptedly]. Thus he completed the recitation of the Caryāvatāra.

The śrutidhara paṇḍita-s [Fol 83B] retained this in their memory.⁵⁸

According to the Kashmirians, this work contained more than a thousand śloka-s* and the benedictory verse was added by them [i.e. the śrutidhara paṇḍita-s]. According to the Easterners, the work did not contain more than seven hundred śloka-s* and the benedictory verse was taken from the Mūla-madhyamaka. Further, it did not originally contain the chapters on Pratividhāna and Prajñā. According to the [scholars of the] madhya-deśa, it did not contain the benedictory verse and the verse stating the resolution ; and the śloka-s* of the Sanskrit original, when actually counted, give the total of one thousand.

All these create confusion.

According to the ancient Tibetan account [after disappearing into the air, Śāntideva] lived in Śrī Dakṣiṇa.⁵⁹ However, on hearing that he was living in the city of *Kaliṅga in Triliṅga, three paṇḍita-s went there and requested him to return to *Nalendra. But he did not agree.

'But then, how are we to learn the Śikṣā-samuccaya and the seat reserved for the Buddha, as leader of the congregation, in the chapels and halls of the monasteries ; and afterwards, it became the throne or seat of the chief bhikṣu of a place'.

57 *yadā na bhāvo nābhāvo mateḥ samtiṣṭhate puraḥ |
tadānyagatyabhāvena nirālamvā praśāmyati ||*
—verse 35 of ch ix. (Bib. Ind. Series, p. 194).

58. cf Bu-ston ii.162ff.

59. dpal-yon-can. cf Bu-ston ii,163 'near the sanctuary of Śrī Dakṣiṇa'. S Dakṣi-nagara.

the Sūtra-samuccaya? Again, where are the three works?'⁶⁰

On being thus prayed he said, 'The Śikṣā and Sūtra written in fine paṇḍita* script on birch bark are to be found in the window-sill of my cell. The Caryāvatāra is to be accepted as retained in the memory of the scholars of the madhya[-deśa].'

There was a monastery in the forest and he lived there with five hundred monks. This forest was full of deer, etc. With his magic power, he used to devour the flesh of the animals that entered his cell. Other monks noticed the animals entering the cell of the ācārya but did not see these coming out of it. It was also noticed that the animals were getting reduced in number. Through the window some of them saw him [Fol 84A] eating the flesh of these. When the members of the saṃgha started accusing him, the animals came back to life; these emerged from the cell stronger than before and went away. Then he left the place in spite of being entreated by them to stay on.

He renounced the marks of pravrajyā and followed the Ucchuṣma caryā*.⁶¹

Now, somewhere in the south there was a conflict between the 'insiders' and 'outsiders'. When the insiders failed in the contest of [miraculous] power, the ācārya reached the place. It was found that the slop thrown at him started boiling as soon as it touched his body.⁶² So they knew that he possessed miraculous power. On being requested to enter the contest of [miraculous] power with the īrthika-s, he agreed to this.

The īrthika-s⁶³ drew an enormous maṇḍala in the sky with coloured stone dust. He immediately caused a strong blast of wind which threw the īrthika-s along with their maṇḍala

60. V tr 'But, then, what sort of works are the Śikṣā-samuccaya and Sūtra-samuccaya, which, it is said, have been seen? Which of the three copies (of Caryāvatāra) is purer (i.e. more faithful)?'

61. cf Bu-ston ii.165. Tg contains a number of works on Ucchuṣma-sādhana (rG xliii.161; lxx.129; 309; lxxii.38; 39 [41]; 47).

62. cf Bu-ston ii.165.

63. Bu-ston ii.165 mentions instead a heretical teacher called Śaṃkara-deva, who drew the magic circle of Maheśvara in the sky.

beyond a place where there was a river. The wind was about to blow off also those that favoured the tīrthika-s, but it did no harm at all to the king and others who were in favour of the 'insiders'.

This defeat of the tīrthika-s helped the Doctrine to spread and the place became famous as that of 'the victory over the tīrthika-s'⁶⁴

This account is highly reliable, because it is mentioned in all the basic sources. By the influence of time, however, the name of the place is changed. So it cannot be identified now.

Further, according to the Tibetan account, when five hundred pāṣaṇḍika-s⁶⁵ were cut off from their livelihood, he gave them food and drink obtained by his miraculous power [Fol 84B] and thus led them to the Doctrine. He also did the same for a thousand beggars. It is said that he once went to a battle-field and stopped the war with his miraculous power.

Thus his seven wonderful acts were : having the vision of the tutelary deity, bringing prosperity to *Nalendra, silencing [others] in debate, converting the pāṣaṇḍika-s, the beggars, the king and the tīrthika-s.

Now about Sarvajñamitra.⁶⁶

He was an extra⁶⁷ (? marital) son of a king of Kashmir. When he was a baby, his mother left him on the terrace and went to pluck flowers. The baby was picked up by a vulture and put on the roof of a gaṇḍola* of Śrī *Nalendra in the madhya-dēśa. He was reared up by the paṇḍita*-s and, on growing up, became a sharply intelligent monk well-versed in the piṭaka-s. He propitiated bhaṭṭārikā āryā Tārā and received her vision along with enormous wealth. He distributed all these and was eventually left with nothing more to donate. He thought : 'If I stay here, many persons asking for alms will

64. S Jīta-tīrtha. Obermiller Bu-ston ii.165 : 'the spot where the heretics were vanquished.'

65. cf Bu-ston ii.164.

66. See note 11 of this chapter.

67. zur-bu.

have to return with empty hands.⁶⁸ So he went far into the south.

On the way he came across an old and blind brāhmaṇa being led by the son and he asked him, 'Where are you going?'

The brāhmaṇa said, 'I have heard about one called Sarvajñamitra of *Nalendra who satisfies all the beggars. So I am going to him and beg.'

'That person is none but myself. But I have come here, because all my wealth is exhausted.'

Hearing this, he (the brāhmaṇa) was afflicted with great sorrow. (Sarvajñamitra) felt boundless compassion for him.

[Fol 85A] There was a king called *Saraṇa. [?] passionately attached to the false views. Being a follower of the vicious ācārya-s he wanted to purchase one hundred and eight men for offering them to sacrificial fire so that he could thereby suck all their longevity and power and thus attain liberation. He procured one hundred and seven persons and was searching for the remaining one.

Hearing this the ācārya decided to sell himself in order to help the brāhmaṇa and told him, 'Do not feel sad. I shall bring wealth for you.'

He went to the city and asked, 'Anybody here to purchase a man?' So the king purchased him and gave him gold equal in weight to that of the ācārya's own body. The ācārya gave the gold to the brāhmaṇa, who felt happy and went away.

When the ācārya entered the royal prison, the others there said, 'We could have perhaps been saved but for your coming. We are now going to be burned soon.' Thus they were afflicted with grief.

In the night a heap of wood—as huge as a hill—was piled up in a wide field and these hundred and eight persons were kept bound within it. The ācārya-s with false views performed the ritual. When fire was set to the pile of woods the hundred and seven persons started wailing. This filled the ācārya with boundless compassion and he earnestly prayed to āryā Tārā. The bhaṭṭārikā appeared before them and a stream of nectar

68. rkañ-stoñ, lit. 'empty feet'.

flowed from her hand. People saw nothing elsewhere excepting rains coming down in the shape of a yoke only on the burning woods. The fire was extinguished and the place became a lake.

[Fol 85B] The king felt amazed and worshipped the ācārya with reverence. He released the persons with rewards. In spite of receiving great reverence from the king, he could not convert him (the king) to the right view and the true Doctrine was not spread.

Thus a long time was spent. The ācārya felt disheartened and prayed to bhaṭṭārikā āryā Tārā : 'Please send me back to my birth-place.'

She said, 'Catch hold of the corner of my clothes and shut your eyes.' Immediately after he closed his eyes, she said, 'Open your eyes.' On opening his eyes, he saw that he had reached a beautiful land decorated⁶⁹ with a magnificent palace, which he had never seen before.

He asked, 'Why did you bring me here instead of taking me to *Nalendra ?'

'This is your birth-place.'

He stayed there and built a big temple for Tārā. He preached the Doctrine extensively and led the people to bliss.

He was a disciple of Sūryagupta.⁷⁰ The mahā-siddha *Dombi-heruka⁷¹ and mahā-siddha Vajraghaṇṭa⁷² roughly belonged to his period. Though they were contemporaries, some of them were a little earlier, some a little later.

*Dombi-heruka attained siddhi about ten years after that of *Virū-pā. About ten years later Ghaṇṭa attained siddhi.

*Sukhadeva,⁷³ son of a leading merchant and a disciple of ācārya *Candragomī, belonged to this period. During his own

69. brgyan-pa. The word does not occur in S-ed and hence S tr does not contain 'decorated with'.

70. V Ravigupta.

71. For works of Dombi Heruka, see Supplementary Note 34.

72. rdo-rje-dril-bu. BA ii.754 mentions him as an early authority on Kālacakra. For works of Vajraghaṇṭa, see Supplementary Note 35.

73. Tg contains a work (author not mentioned) with the title Śreṣṭhi-putra-sukhadeva-siddhi-lābha-ākhyāna (mDo cxxiii.42).

business transaction, he purchased from a tīrthika a damaged image of the Buddha made of gośīrṣa-candana.⁷⁴ Princess *Sañkajati⁷⁵ was once seriously ill and the physicians said that gośīrṣa-candana was the only remedy for it. Since, however, that was not available, they gave up [the hope of curing her].

The merchant asked the king, 'If I can cure her [Fol 86A] will you give her to me [in marriage]?' The king promised to do so. He then prepared a paste of the gośīrṣa-candana, anointed her body with it and also made her swallow it. This cured her and she was given to *Sukhadeva.

He (Sukhadeva) thought, 'It is good that the disease is cured. But it is difficult to atone for the sin [of thus using the Buddha image].' So he asked ācārya *Candragomi about the way of atoning for the sin. He (Candragomi) gave him the upadeśa of Avalokiteśvara and led him to propitiate him. *Sukhadeva, son of the leading merchant, along with his wife attained siddhi after receiving the vision of the ārya.

The twentyfifth chapter containing the account of the period of kings Cala, Pañcamasiṃha and others.

74. tsana-dana-sa-mchog. D 1257 hari-candana, V & S go-śīrṣa-candana. cf Legge 38n 'Gośīrṣa Candana or sandal-wood from Cow's Head mountain, a species of copper-brown sandal-wood, said to be produced most abundantly on a mountain of (the fabulous continent) Ullarakuru, north of mount Meru, which resembles in shape the head of a cow'.

75. S Śāñkhajāti.

CHAPTER 26

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF ŚRĪ DHARMAKĪRTI

After the death of king Cala, his younger brother Caladhruva¹ reigned for twenty years. He conquered most of the western regions. His son *Viṣṇurāja also reigned for many years.

When he (Viṣṇurāja) was residing in *Pālanagara² situated in *Hala in the west, five hundred ascetic brāhmaṇa-s like the great sages of the past lived in a hermitage. The king killed the birds and deer of the hermitage and diverting the course of the river destroyed the abodes of the ṛṣi-s. By their curse, water gushed out from beneath his palace which drowned (? the palace).

The king then ruling over the madhya-deśa and most of the eastern region was Pradyota,³ son of king Prasanna. His son was *Mahāśyāni (Mahāsenā⁴). In the north ruled king Pradyota's brother *Śākya-mahābala⁵, who lived in the city of *Haridvāra but whose command extended up to Kashmir.

*Vimalacandra, son of king *Bālacandra⁶, ruled *Bhaṃgala, *Kāmarūpa [Fol 86B] and *Tirahuti—these three regions.

Among these kings, Caladhruva and *Viṣṇurāja looked after the kingdom peacefully and reigned in accordance with the Doctrine. Beyond this nothing more is known about their activities for the Law. The others extensively worshipped the Law.

Pradyota and *Mahāśyāni (Mahāsenā) had special reverence for Śrī Dharmakīrti.⁷ King *Śākya-mahābala worshipped

1. gyo-ba-brtan-pa.

2. S-ed Bālanagara, P-ed Pālanagara. V & S Bālanagara.

3. gsal-ba. V & S Prāditya,

4. In the Table of Contents the Tibetan form of the name occurs as sde-chen, i.e. Mahāsenā.

5. V & S Mahā-śākyabala.

6. S-ed Bālacandra, P-ed Śālaca Table of Contents—Bālacandra.

7. chos-kyi-grags-pa.

Vasumitra,⁸ the great exponent of the Abhidharma. King Vimalacandra worshipped paṇḍita *Amarasiṃha⁹ and Ratnakīrti¹⁰ as well as the Mādhyamika Śrīgupta,¹¹ a disciple of *Sampradūta.

Generally speaking, though during this period the Law of the Buddha was widely spread, yet compared to the time of 'brothers Asaṅga' [i.e. Asaṅga and his brother] and of Dignāga, in all the eastern and southern regions the tīrthika-s prospered and the Buddhists were going down.

Now, during the time of king Pañcamasiṃha, there lived two brothers¹² who were the ācārya-s of the tīrthika-s. One of them was called *Datta-trai (Dattātreyā). He was specially in favour of samādhi. The second was *Saṅgarācārya¹³ (Śaṅkarācārya), who propitiated *Mahādeva. He chanted spells on a jar placed behind a curtain.¹⁴ From within the jar emerged *Mahādeva up to his neck and taught him the art of debate.

In *Bhaṅgala he entered into debates. The elders among the bhikṣu-s said, 'It is difficult to defeat him. So ācārya Dharmapāla¹⁵ or Candragomī or Candrakīrti should be invited to contest in debate.' The younger paṇḍita-s did not listen to this and said, 'The prestige of the local paṇḍita*-s will go down if a debater is brought from somewhere else. [Fol 87A] We are more skilled than they are.'

Inflated with vanity, they entered into debate with *Śaṅkarācārya. In this the Buddhists were defeated and, as

8. dbyig-gi-bśes-gñen.

9. Apart from the Amarakoṣa (mDo cxvii.1), Tg contains Amarasiṃha-gītikū (rG xlvi.12).

10. rin-chen-grags. For works of Ratnakīrti, see Supplementary Note 36.

11. dpal-sbās. Tg contains Tāttvūvatūra-vṛtti (mDo xxix.3) and Śrī-ratnamāñjarī-nāma-ṭikā (rG xx.17) attributed to Śrīgupta.

12. S-ed does not contain spun (brothers).

13. Tār throughout gives the corrupt form Saṅgarācārya.

14. V tr 'covered with a lid'.

15. V Dharmapālita.

a result, everything belonging to the twentyfive centres of the Doctrine was lost to the tīrthika-s and the centres were deserted. About five hundred upāsaka-s had to enter the path of the tīrthika-s.

Similarly, in *Oḍiṣā also *Śaṃkarācārya's brāhmaṇa disciple *Bhaṭṭa Ācārya did the same. The daughter of Brahmā (Sarasvatī) made him an expert in logic. Many debates between the insiders and outsiders took place there.

There lived then an insider *paṇḍita called *Kuliśaśreṣṭha, highly skilled in grammar and logic. As before, he also arrogantly entered the debate by staking the [respective] creeds. The tīrthika became victorious and destroyed many temples of the insiders. They robbed in particular the centres for the Doctrine and took away the deva-dāsa-s (vihāra-slaves). During this latter incident, Dharmapāla and the Candra bhaṭṭāraka-s (Candrakīrti and Candragomī) were no longer alive.

In the south, there were then two leading tīrthika debaters, the famous brāhmaṇa Kumārālīla¹⁶ and Kaṇadaru.¹⁷ The latter was a follower of Mahādeva and an observer of the govrata.¹⁸ In many debates in the south they defeated the disciples of Buddhapālita, Bhavya, Dharmadāsa, Dignāga¹⁹ and others. Also, none belonging to the Śrāvaka saṃgha could face them in debate. As a result, there were many incidents of the property and followers²⁰ of the insiders being robbed by the tīrthika brāhmaṇa-s.

[Fol 87B] These incidents belonged to a period little later than the one we have been discussing. During this period, *Devaśrama,²¹ a disciple of ācārya Dharmapāla, composed

16. V Kumārīla. Tār throughout gives the name as gshon-nu-rol-pa, lit. 'the sporting kumāra' and argues that the correct Indian form should be Kumārālīla and not Kumārīla.

17. gzegs-ma-sgra-sgrog. Kaṇanāda ?

18. ba-lañ-gi-brtul.

19. V omits Dignāga, but the text has phyogs-kyi-glañ-po.

20. mha'-'buñs. S slaves.

21. Could it be a corruption of Devaśarman or Devaśarmā, one of the eight famous Mādhyamika authors and commentators mentioned in the colophon of mDo xvii.6 ?

the Madhyamaka commentary called the Bright White²² with the idea of refuting Candrakīrti. This ācārya was victorious in debate with some of the tīrthika-s in the south. He converted king *Sālavāhana into a follower of the Law of the Buddha. He also built many caitya-s and temples and established a centre for the Doctrine.

Siddha *Gorakṣa²³ belonged to the period of this king.

I have not come across any detailed account of ācārya *Amarasiṃha. Whatever little exists about it, is to be found elsewhere.

It is said that Ratnakīrti composed a commentary on the Madhyamaka-avatāra.²⁴ Vasumitra also composed a commentary on the Abhidharmakośa.²⁵ He was the author of the work called Samaya-bheda-uparacana-cakra,²⁶ the main treatise on the eighteen sects.

Before the time of mahā-ācārya Vasubandhu,²⁷ all the eighteen sects were in tact. At the time of the early hostility

22. dkar-po-rnam-par-'char-ba. V & S Sitābhyudaya. But no work with this title is traced in Tg.

23. In Tg Vāyutattva-bhāvanopadeśa (rG xlvi 51) is attributed to him. V n 'According to the account of the 84 siddha-s, Gorakṣa or Anaṅgavajra was the son of king sa-skyoñ ('the protector of the land', Gopāla ?) in eastern India. As a punishment, his hands and feet were chopped off. But after attaining siddhi, he got these back. Even now, the sound of his ḍamaru is sometimes heard.'

24. No such work is traced in Tg.

25. V n 'This work, too, is not there in Tg. But whatever is preserved in Chinese translation cannot belong to the present Vasumitra, because it is regarded as one of the seven principal Abhidharmas.'

26. mDo xc.11. cf BA i.30. V n 'Samaya-bhedoparacana-cakra is the same as translated by me in the first volume of my work on Buddhism. But if the period under discussion, as we assume, is close to that of Yuan-chuang, who translated this work into Chinese, how could it be possible that in the Chinese language there are two still earlier translations (of the same commentary on Abhidharmakośa)? It can, therefore, be considered that the author is making a mistake in taking the composer of the commentary on the Abhidharmakośa for the same person as Vasumitra who wrote about the sects—more so because we find one Vasumitra belonging to a much earlier period.'

27. dbyig-gñen.

to the Law, some of the sects were weakened and impoverished. After that, because of controversies among them and because of misfortune and other reasons, the three sects of the Mahāsāṅghikas called the Pūrvaśāila, Aparāśāila and the Haimavat became extinct. The two sects of the Sarvāstivādins, namely the Kāśyapīyas and the Vibhajyavādins became extinct. The three sects of the Sthāviravādins, namely the Mahāvihāravāsins, Sammitīyas and the Āvantakas became extinct. Only the remaining sects thrived.

[Fol 88A] The practice of the Śrāvaka Law was indeed to degenerate (? according to prediction) after five hundred years. But there are still many who uphold the theoretical views of the Śrāvakas.

According to some of the historians of the Doctrine, the downfall of the Śrāvakas took place shortly after the propagation of the Mahāyāna. Though with the establishment of the Mahāyāna the influence of the Śrāvakas gradually decreased, it will be fanciful to think that during this period their number became insignificant. It is strange for one to write something for showing off knowledge to others without oneself possessing even little knowledge of the subject.

Now about Śrī Dharmakīrti.²⁸

According to all the earlier scholars, he was born in the kingdom of Cūḍāmaṇi²⁹ in the south. But no place with such a name is to be found these days. All the insiders and outsiders know well that the birth-place of Śrī Dharmakīrti was *Trimalaya. Therefore, this place must have been known as the kingdom of Cūḍāmaṇi in the older days.

It is clear that he was born shortly after king Pañcamasimha and king Prasanna³⁰ and others ascended the throne. His father was a brāhmaṇa tīrthika parivṛājaka called

28. For works of Dharmakīrti, see Supplementary Note 37.

29. rgyal-dbañ-gtsug-gi-nor-bu. Lit. Jinendra-cūḍāmaṇi. Bu-ston ii.152: "the southern kingdom of Cūḍāmaṇi."

30. gsal-ba. V & S Prāḍitya. But S takes gsal-ba in the Table of Contents as Prasanna.

*Ro-ru-nanda.³¹ Thus was he born as his son.

Having a very sharp intellect, he thoroughly studied from his early childhood the fine arts, the Vedas with all their aṅga-s, medicine, grammar and all the tīrthika philosophies. Already at the age of sixteen or eighteen, he became a mature scholar of all the tīrthika philosophies. When he was being highly praised by the brāhmaṇa-s, [Fol 88B] he studied some Buddhist scriptures and realised that his own preceptor was full of faults and his own śāstra-s were repulsive. Finding the Buddha and the True Doctrine as opposed to these, he was full of reverence. He changed his dress into that of an upāsaka of the insiders.

On being asked by brāhmaṇa-s the reason for this, he praised the Buddha. So he was driven out of his place. From there he went to the madhya-deśa, received ordination under ācārya Dharmapāla³² and became a scholar of all the three piṭaka-s. He learnt by heart the sūtra-s and dhāraṇī-s, five hundred in all.

He remained dissatisfied even after studying many works on logic. He listened to the Pramāṇa-samuccaya from Īśvarasena,³³ a disciple of Dignāga, and after listening to it only once, became equal to Īśvarasena. On listening to it for the second time, he became equal to Dignāga. On listening to it for the third time, he realised that even Īśvarasena was wrong and could not fully understand the real implications of Dignāga. Realising this, he enumerated all these [i.e. the short-comings in Īśvarasena's understanding] to the ācārya himself (Īśvarasena). He (Īśvarasena) was delighted and said, 'You have become equal to Dignāga. Compose a commentary on the Pramāṇa-samuccaya, pointing out all the erroneous views.'

Thus he received the ācārya's permission. After this, he received proper abhiṣeka also from the mantra-vajrācārya-s. Propitiating the tutelary deity, he had the vision of Heruka.

31. S-ed Ro-ru-nanda. P-ed Ro-ñan-ndra. The former followed.

32. chos-skyoñ. Bu-ston ii.152 does not mention the name of the ācārya under whom he was ordained.

33. dbañ-phyug-sde. For a more elaborate account, see Bu-ston ii.152.

[Heruka] asked, 'What do you desire ?'

'I desire to have an all-round victory.'

[Fol 89A] Heruka said, '*Hā, *hā, *hum' and vanished.

He then composed the eulogy called the Stava-danḍaka.³⁴

According to some, the vajrācārya of this ācārya was *Dārika. According to others, he was Vajraghaṇṭa. But the proper view seems to be of those who say that he was *Diṅgi,³⁵ that there exists a composition called the *Śrī-cakra-saṃvara-sādhana*³⁶ by this ācārya and that the Vajrasattva-sādhana, which is generally believed to have been composed by *Lū-yi-pā was also a composition of this ācārya.³⁷

He then wanted to learn the secret teachings of the tīrthika systems. In the disguise of a servant, he went to the south, enquired about the scholar of the tīrthika systems. [He was told about] the brāhmaṇa Kumāralīla,³⁸ who, as a scholar of all the systems, was without any rival.

gShon-nu-ma-len (i.e. Kumāralīla) is either a wrong rendering into Tibetan of the name *Kumāralīla or the translation of a wrong spelling of his name.

He is also said³⁹ to have been a maternal uncle of Dharmakīrti. But nothing like this is known in India. Further, the story of tying a chord on the second toe of the wife of the brāhmaṇa while stealing the secret teachings of the systems is not known in India. Though it may appear as true, it is actually far from it.

Kumāralīla received from the king great power and he possessed excellent fields of *śālu (śāli) rice, a large number of

34. Tg contains Śrī-vajradhānuka-stava-danḍaka-nāma (rG xii.23) attributed to Dharmakīrti.

35. V & S Tiṅgi.

36. See note 14 of ch. 23.

37. Tg contains a number of works on Vajrasattva-sādhana by Lūi-pā (rG xiii.1), Kukkurī-pā (rG xxiii.22), ācārya Candrakīrti (rG xxxiii 18), guru Abhijñā Vajrāsana (rG xlvi.147), ācārya Padma (rG lxxi.342) and ācārya Harisimha (rG lxxxvi.29).

38. gshon-nu-rol-pa.

39. Tār seems to reject here the account given by Bu-ston ii.153.

cows and buffaloes, five hundred each of male and female servants and a large number of hired persons. This ācārya (Dharmakīrti) did everything there, both indoor and outdoor, and by himself performed the work of fifty male and fifty female servants.

[Fol 89B] Kumāralīla, along with his wife, was highly pleased with him.

‘What do you desire?’

‘I desire to listen to philosophy.’

Thus he began to listen to everything that Kumāralīla preached to his disciples. But some of the secret teachings were not taught to anybody other than the son and the wife. He learnt these by pleasing the son and the wife with his efficient services to them. Thus he learnt all the secrets of philosophy. When there was nothing more for him to learn about the technique of refuting others, he even found out from the other disciples the appropriate fees for the lessons. He also calculated the amount needed as the fee for learning a new argument.

He thought that since the brāhmaṇa-s were greedy, it was improper for him not to offer any fee. He had with him five hundred silver paṇa*-s, which he had received as the salary for his services. He took seven thousand golden coins from a local yakṣa. He offered the gold to Kumāralīla and with the silver gave a grand feast to the brāhmaṇa-s. The same night he ran away.

There was a palace in a big commercial centre called Kākaguhā*. A king called Drumaripu* lived there. He (Dharmakīrti) put up a notice on its gate: ‘Does anybody want a debate?’

The brāhmaṇa Kaṇagupta*,⁴⁰ a follower of Kaṇāda’s view, and five hundred experts in the six systems of philosophy assembled there and argued with him for three months. He defeated all the five hundred of them one by one and converted them into the followers of the Buddha’s Law. He led the king to order fifty wealthy brāhmaṇa-s among them to establish each a centre for the Doctrine of the insiders.

40. Both S-ed & P-ed Kaṇagupta. V & S Kaṇādagupta.

[Fol 90A] As he came to know this, Kumāralīla felt furious and himself came to argue accompanied by five hundred brāhmaṇa-s. He demanded of the king, 'Should I be victorious, Dharmakīrti is to be killed. If Dharmakīrti be victorious, I should be killed.'

But the ācārya said, 'In case of Kumāralīla's victory, the king should himself decide whether to convert me into a tīrthika or to kill me or to beat me or to bind me. But in case I win, he should not kill Kumāralīla. Instead of that he [i.e. Kumāralīla] should be converted into a follower of the Law of the Buddha.'

Thus he staked the Law and the debate started.

Kumāralīla had five hundred theses [lit. vows] of his own. He refuted each of these with a hundred arguments. Then even Kumāralīla started worshipping the insiders. The five hundred brāhmaṇa-s also realised that only the Law of the Buddha was correct. Thus they received ordination in the Law of the Buddha.

He also defeated the nirgrantha *Rāhuvratī, the mīmāṃsaka *Bhṛṅgāraguhya, the brāhmaṇa *Kumārānanda, the tīrthika leader of debate *Kaṇḍaroru and all other rivals who lived in the Vindhyaśāla.

He next went to *Dravali and, by ringing a bell, proclaimed : 'Is there anybody in this place capable of entering into a debate ?' Most of the tīrthika-s ran away while some admitted that they were not capable of it. He rebuilt there all the older centres of the Doctrine which had been damaged. He sat on meditation in a solitary forest.

[Fol 90B] At that time, *Śaṅkarācārya sent a message to Śrī *Nalendra announcing that he wanted to have a debate. They [the monks of Nālandā] postponed the debate to the next year and thus took time to invite Dharmakīrti from the south.

When it was time for the debate, king Pradyota⁴¹ got 41. rab-gsal. S Prasanna. V Prāditya.

the Buddhists, the brāhmaṇa-s and other tīrthika-s to assemble in *Vārāṇasī. On the eve of the debate between *Śaṃkarācārya and Śrī Dharmakīrti, *Śaṃkara declared to the people in the presence of the king : 'In case of our victory, we shall decide whether to drown him into the *Gaṅgā or to convert him into a tīrthika. In case of his victory, I shall kill myself by jumping into the *Gaṅgā.'

Saying this, he started the debate. Dharmakīrti defeated *Śaṃkarācārya repeatedly. At last he was reduced to a position from where there was nothing more to say. When *Śaṃkarācārya was about to jump into the *Gaṅgā, the ācārya tried to stop him. But he did not listen to this. He told his own disciple *Bhaṭṭa *Ācārya, 'Go on arguing and defeat this man with shaven head. Even if you do not win, I shall be reborn as your son and shall go on fighting him.'

Saying this he jumped into the *Gaṅgā and died.

He (Dharmakīrti) converted many of his (Śaṃkara's) disciples into the followers of the Law of the Buddha, who by vow were parivrājaka brahmacārī-s. Others ran away.

The next year he was born as a son of *Bhaṭṭa *Ācārya. For three years *Bhaṭṭa *Ācārya propitiated the god and for three more years pondered on the views of the insiders and on the arguments with which to refute these. On the seventh year, he entered into debate by staking his own creed as before. And *Bhaṭṭa *Ācārya was completely defeated.

[Fol 91A] In spite of the ācārya (Dharmakīrti) trying to stop it, he paid no heed to it, jumped into the *Gaṅgā and killed himself. Along with the other brāhmaṇa-s who were devoted to their own philosophies, his elder son⁴² *Bhaṭṭa *Ācārya the second, and [the son in the form of] *Śaṃkarācārya reborn, fled far to the east. Five hundred honest brāhmaṇa-s were ordained into the Law and another five hundred took refuge to the Three Jewels.

42, thu-bo (elder). V & S younger.

Now, there lived then a brāhmaṇa called Pūrṇa⁴³ in *Magadha and another brāhmaṇa called Pūrṇabhadra⁴⁴ in Mathurā. They were extremely powerful, enormously rich and highly proficient in logic. They received the blessings of their own deities like Sarasvatī and Viṣṇu. These persons also entered into debate sooner or later, were defeated by the arguments of the ācārya and were converted into Buddhists. Each of these two brāhmaṇa-s established fifty centres for the Doctrine of the insiders in *Magadha and Mathurā. In this way, this (the ācārya's) fame was spread all over the earth.

Then he spent a long time in the forest called Rṣi *Mātaṅga near *Magadha and attained siddhi in many magic spells.

There lived in the Vindhyaśāla the son of king Puṣpa⁴⁵ called Utpullapuṣpa.⁴⁶ He ruled over thirty lakhs of villages and his wealth was comparable to that of the gods. While wandering about, the ācārya at last reached the king's palace. The king asked, 'Who are you ?'

He replied,

'Who else can I be, who am victorious in all countries,—like Dignāga in wisdom, like Candragomī in the purity of speech [Fol 91B] and skilled in prosody coming down from the poet Śūra ?'⁴⁷

'So, are you Dharmakīrti ?'

'Thus I am known in this world.'

This king also built many monasteries and Dharmakīrti lived there. He composed his Seven Treatises on pramāṇa. On the gate of the palace of the king he wrote :

'If Dharmakīrti's words ever set like the sun,
The Doctrine will either fall asleep or die
And the false doctrine will replace it.'

After he propagated the Law of the Buddha for a long time, there was a congregation in that region of about ten thousand

43. gan-ba. cf Bu-ston ii.117.

44. gan-ba-bzan-po. cf Bu-ston ii.117.

45. n.e-tog.

46. me-tog-kun-tu-rgyas-pa. cf Bu-ston ii.153f.

47. cf Bu-ston ii.154. Obermiller translates the passage rather freely.

monks. He established about fifty⁴⁸ centres for the Doctrine. From there he went to the border-land⁴⁹ *Gujiratha. He converted many brāhmaṇa-s and tīrthika-s into the Law of the Buddha. He built a temple called *Gotapurī.⁵⁰

There were many tīrthika-s in that country. They set fire to the cloister of the ācārya and he was surrounded by flames. He then took resort to the tutelary deity, chanted the secret spell and flew through the sky to the royal palace of that country at a distance of about a yojana. Everybody felt amazed.

What is now current as the stotra of the eighty siddha-s⁵¹ cannot be considered reliable. Still it is clear that the account of his flying through the sky after defeating his opponents etc is based on this.

At that time *Śaṃkarācārya reborn acquired a sharper intellect and a greater skill in debate than before. [Fol 92A] He had now the full vision of the god (Mahādeva) on the jar. At the age of fifteen or sixteen he came to *Vārāṇasī with the desire of entering into a debate with Śrī Dharmakīrti. He made king *Mahāśyāni (? Mahāsenā) to proclaim this in all directions by ringing the bell. So the ācārya was invited from the south. Five thousand brāhmaṇa-s, along with the king, gathered there in a big assembly. As before, staking their respective creeds, they entered into the debate and, being miserably defeated, he (Śaṃkara) killed himself as before by jumping into the *Gaṅgā in spite of attempts being made to prevent this.

Their own doctrine being thus properly refuted, many brāhmaṇa-s took up ordination and many others became upāsaka-s.

From Kashmir came three great brāhmaṇa ācārya-s called *Vidyāsiṃha,⁵² *Devavidyākara and *Devasiṃha. They approa-

48. līa-beu (fifty). V 'five hundred'. S fifty.

49. miha'-khob. V & S border-land.

50. S n 'Can it be Gauḍapurī or Gauḍapura?'

51. grub-thob-brgyad-beu'i-bstod-pa. But 'Tg contains Caturaśīti-siddha-pravṛtti (rG lxxxvi.1) by Abhayaśrī of Campāran.

52. Is the name reminiscent of Deva-vidyā-siṃha, the teacher of Thon-mi-sambhoṭa?—see A. Chattopadhyaya AT 202ff, ched Śrī Dharmakīrti and raised many honest doubts about the philosophy⁵³ (of the Buddhists). Dharmakīrti also pointed to them the correct solutions. They were full of reverence for the insiders and took resort to śaraṇa-gamaṇa and pañca-śikṣā. They listened to the philosophy and specially studied the Seven Treatises on pramāṇa until they became great scholars.

They went back to Kashmir in the north and extensively propagated Dharmakīrti's system of logic. It is said that the second one of them lived for a long time in *Vārāṇasī.

He (Dharmakīrti) went again to the south and removed by his arguments the obstacles because of which in certain areas the Law of the Buddha could not be spread or had become degenerated. [Fol 92B] He converted the kings, ministers and others into the followers of the Doctrine and led them to establish innumerable saṃgha-s and centres for the Doctrine.

The number of temples built by the ācārya himself was about a hundred, while the number of those built by others under his inspiration could not be counted. It is said that the total number of the bhikṣu-s and upāsaka-s who, inspired by this ācārya, became the followers of the Law of the Buddha reached one lakh. But this number is mostly of those for whom he directly acted as the upādhyāya or ācārya. As a matter of fact, the whole world was full of his disciples related to him through his teachings. Yet it is said that the number of his personal attendants never exceeded five.

Towards the end of his life the same *Śaṃkarācārya was born again as the son of *Bhaṭṭa *Ācārya the second⁵⁴ and in intelligence became stronger than before. His god (Mahādeva) appeared before him in person and gave him lessons. Sometimes he (Mahādeva) even merged into his body and taught him some hitherto unknown arguments. At the age of twelve, 53. V tr 'frankly raised many objections to Dharmakīrti'. S tr 'laid before him with sharp intellect many controversial points of their systems'.

54. S tr 'as the younger son of the same Bhaṭṭa Ācārya'. V tr 'as the son of the last (junior ?) Bhadrā Ācārya'. V n 'Here he is called Bhadrā and not Bhaṭṭa'.

he wanted to enter into a debate with Śrī Dharmakīrti. The brāhmaṇa-s told him, 'It is better for the time being to debate with others, whom you are sure to defeat. But it is hard to defeat Dharmakīrti.'

He said, 'Without defeating him there can be no real fame in debate.'

Saying this, he went to the south and started debate with this agreement that the defeated one had to accept the other's creed. Śrī Dharmakīrti became victorious and converted him into a follower of the Law of the Buddha.

It is said that in the south, he (Śaṅkara) used to worship the Law of the Buddha as a brāhmaṇa [Fol 93A] following the practices of an upāsaka. The temple built⁵⁵ by him still exists.

At last he (Dharmakīrti) built a temple in *Kaliṅga, converted many persons to the Doctrine and passed away. His body was carried to the crematorium by holy persons⁵⁶ and, when it was burnt, there came a profuse shower of flowers. Fragrance and sweet sound of music persisted all around for seven days. His relics assumed the form of a crystal ball and there was no sign of any bone left. Even now, periodic festivals are observed in honour of it.

It is said that this ācārya was a contemporary of the Tibetan king Sroṅ-btsan-sgam-po.⁵⁷ This is clearly true.

According to the Tibetan account, at the time of his composition of the Seven Treatises, he was so deeply engrossed in the subject-matter of these that even when tikta* (bitter) was put into the curry, he could not detect it. After he finished composing the treatises, on being enquired about it by the king, he said, 'Oh king, if there is anybody condemned to death by you, get him dressed up in white clothes and give him a pot full 55. S n quoted by V 'cf Lassen iv. 618ff and Breal in Journal Asiatique 1862, pp 497ff'.

56. tshāns-pa-mtshuṅs-par-spyod-pa. V & S 'who in their conduct were comparable to Brahmā himself'. But see D 1021 & J 545.

57. cf A. Chattopadhyaya AT 180ff: born in A.D. 569 (according to another tradition in A.D. 629).

of oil and a half-burnt stick. Tell him that even if a drop of oil is spilled from it or if (the stick) touches (his cloth and thus it gets smeared by the charcoal), he would be immediately killed. Keep somebody with a brandished sword just behind him. Now, if you ask him to go round the palace once and in various places of the palace you arrange for musical and other performances, and (after he completes his round) if you question him, he will not be able to tell you that there was any song, dance, musical instrument, etc. The reason for this is that he was fully engrossed in one thought (i.e. about his own life).⁵⁷

This (Tibetan account) has the appearance of being convincing from the point of view of the following verse of the [Bodhi-caryāvatāra]⁵⁸: 'If a pot full of mustard oil be given...'
[Fol 93B] Still this account cannot be really true. The composition of the Seven Treatises was the result of his free choice, and, in the presence of his disciples, these were composed in the monastery. Why should he write these in one corner of the palace, like the clerk writing the royal decree? It is well-known that his intellect was so clear that he could answer ten opponents at a time. How could he be differentiated from the fools if, while concentrating on the subject-matter of his works, he failed to observe anything else?

Further, the following story⁵⁹ also is palpably wrong. After composing the Seven Treatises (according to the story) he distributed these to the paṇḍita*-s. Most of them failed to understand these. Only a few who understood felt jealous, said that these were not good enough and tied these to the tail of a dog. (Dharmakīrti) said, 'As the dogs move about in all sorts of roads, so will my work spread everywhere.' And he added one śloka at the beginning of the work: 'Most of the people are fond of the banal...'

After this, he carefully explained the Seven Treatises to

58. Bodhicaryāvatāra vii.70 (Bib. Ind. ed. p. 133) tailapātradhara yadvadasihastairadhiṣṭhitah |

skha'ite maraṇatrāsūttatparaḥ syātathā vrat' ||

59. This story strongly doubted by Tār is found in Bu-ston ii.154.

ācārya Devendrabuddhi⁶⁰ and *Śākyabuddhi⁶¹ and asked Devendrabuddhi to complete the remaining portion of his auto-commentary. He (Devendrabuddhi) composed it for the first time and showed it to him. He (Dharmakīrti) washed it with water. When he composed it over again, he burnt it in fire. Again, he composed it and added, 'It is mainly my misfortune. Time is running out. I have briefly composed this pañjikā for the sake of (my) practice.' When he offered it (to Dharmakīrti, the latter said), 'From the point of view of the style, the use of words and of the deeper significance, it is still incomplete. But, as explaining the literal meaning, it is on the whole satisfactory,'—and allowed it to remain.

[Fol 94A] (Dharmakīrti) thought: 'Nobody in the future will understand my logic.' So at the end of the commentary he added the verse: 'Like the rivers merging into the ocean, it will disappear in my own self.'⁶²

According to some others, Devendrabuddhi's disciple was *Śākyabuddhi and that the latter composed a gloss on it. And this is correct. It is said that his (Śākyabuddhi's) disciple was Prabhābuddhi.⁶³ According to others, *Yamāri⁶⁴

60. Jha-dhañ-blo. In Tg 2-4 parivarta of Pramāṇavārtika-vṛtti (mDo xcvi.18) is attributed to Devendrabuddhi; this portion also occurs as a separate work as mDo xcvi.

61. Apart from this work on the Pramāṇavārtika (mDo xcvi & xcvi), in Tg are attributed to Śākyabuddhi Ārya-gayāśīr-gasūtra-mīśraka-vyākhyā (mDo xxxiv.13) and Ārya-daśabhūmi-sūtra-nidāna-bhāṣya (mDo xxxvii.2).

62. cf Bu-ston ii.155; Stecherbatsky BL i.36.

63. 'od-kyi-blo cf Bu-ston ii.155: 'The pupil of Devendrabuddhi was Śākyabuddhi, who composed a sub-commentary. It is said that the pupil of this latter teacher was Prabhābuddhi. Some say that Yamāri was a pupil of Dharmakīrti himself, that (the author of) the Pramāṇavārtika-alamkāra obtained instructions from the dead-body (of Dharmakīrti), that the pupil (of this author) was Vinītadeva and the pupil of the latter Dharmottara. But in the commentary it is said that Dharmottara was the pupil of Dharmākaradatta and Kalyāṇarakṣita. Yamāri has composed a sub-commentary on the Pramāṇavārtika-alamkāra. Vinītadeva and Śaṅkarānanda have written commentaries on the Seven Treatises. So runs the tradition'.

64. Tg contains Pramāṇavārtika-alamkāra-ṅkā-suparīśuddha-nāma (mDo was the direct disciple of Dharmakīrti. *Alaṅkāra-upādhyāya*⁶⁵ is also mentioned as his direct disciple. To agree to this, one has to admit that he received the precepts from the dead-body (of the ācārya), and so on. All these are chronologically baseless.

Further, (it is improper) to say that Dharmakīrti beat the victory-drum seventeen times, because it was not the custom of the vow-holding insiders to beat the victory-drum. It is said that a nirgrantha with a spear in his hand came for a debate and declared: 'He who will be defeated in the debate will be killed with this spear.' Dharmakīrti did not himself argue with him and he was defeated by Devendrabuddhi. However, it is improper for a nirgrantha to have the desire of subduing the opponent in a way which goes against his principles. Such an incident is absolutely unknown to the scholars and it shows only poverty of the knowledge of history. Therefore, it is fictitious.

Similarly, it is said that, among the Six Jewels the three—namely Nāgārjuna, Asaṅga and Dignāga—were the composers of original treatises, while the other three—namely Āryadeva, Vasubandhu and Dharmakīrti—were the composers of commentaries. They are called the Six Jewels, because all of them added equal glory to the Law in ways appropriate for their own times.

The brāhmaṇa Śaṅkarānanda⁶⁶ belonged to a much later period [Fol 94B] and as such it is a gross error to write that he was a direct disciple of Dharmakīrti. The siddha yogi-s of the civ.2-cvii) attributed to śrī pañḍita Yamāri. Apart from this enormous treatise on logic, Tg also contains his Devi-vasudhārā-stotra (rG lxxii.48).

65. i.e. Prajñākaragupta—see Fol 113B. Tg contains Pramāṇavārtika-alaṅkāra (mDo xcix-c) by mahācārya Prajñākaragupta, alias Alaṅkāra-upādhyāya, a disciple of both brāhmaṇa Śaṅkarānanda and Yamāri.
66. bde-byeḍ-dga'-ba, alias Śaṅkaramudita. Tg contains his Pramāṇavārtika-ṅi,ā (mDo ciii), Samvandha-parikṣāṅusāra (mDo cxii.2), Aphasiddhi (mDo cxii.22) and Pratibandha-siddhi (mDo cxii.21).

period were mahā-ācārya *Lva-va-pā,⁶⁷ the middle *Indrabhūti,⁶⁸ *Kuku-rāja,⁶⁹ ācārya Saroruha-vajra,⁷⁰ *Lalita-vajra⁷¹

67. S-ed Va-va-pā. Vn : 'Va-va-pā is also called Kambala, Kambhālī and Śrī-prabhada. S thinks that the word va-va-pā has been wrongly formed from Lva-va-pā or La-va-pa. According to the account of the 84 siddha-s, he first reigned in Kañ-karova, then after leaving the throne and propitiating Mahā-mudrā, he set off for Urgyana in the kingdom of Malapurī. There in the province of Karavīra, he settled himself in Sanava desert in Tala (Puk-tse ?) cave, carrying with him black va-va, which was gobbled up by some witches. He captured all the witches and shaved their heads. When the spirits wanted to throw a rock at him, he raised his finger and the rock remained suspended in the air.' For works of Kambala-pā or Lva-va-pā, see Supplementary Note 38.
68. alias Indranāla or brgya-byin-sdoñ-po. The adjective 'middle' (bar-ba) is apparently peculiar. Indrabhūti, the famous king of Oḍḍīyāna, is usually mentioned as a contemporary of Lva-va-pā— see BA i.362 & Tār Fol 95Bf. However, BA i.359: 'The adepts of the (Guhya-) samāja-tantra agree that the Guhya-samāja-tantra had been preached by the Munīndra himself, following a request of Indrabhūti, the great king of Oḍḍīyāna, at the time when the Buddha had manifested himself in Oḍḍīyāna and initiated (the king).' The lineage mentioned is : Indrabhūti—Nāga-yoginī—Viśukalpa—mahā-brāhmaṇa Saraha—ācārya Nāgārjuna—Śākyamitra—Āryadeva, Nāgabodhi, Candrakīrti, etc. Do we have a reference here to some tradition according to which there was an early Indrabhūti, a contemporary of the Buddha ? Assuming this, Indrabhūti, the contemporary of Lva-va-pā was a later one. For works attributed to Indrabhūti, see Supplementary Note 39.
69. P-ed Ku-ku-rāja. S-ed Kukura-rāja. Vn : 'In the account of the 84 siddha-s there is one Kukuri-pā, who was a brāhmaṇa in Kapilabhargu (?). [R. Sankrityayana reads Kapila(-vastu) : Purātattva-nivandhāvahī p. 150] kingdom.' For works attributed to Kukuri-pā, see Supplementary Note 40.
70. mtsho-skyes-rdo-rje. S 'Louts-vajra'. Vn : 'According to the account of the 84 siddha-s, mtsho-skyes-rdo-rje is called Saga and was the elder son of king Indrabhūti in Gañja kingdom. Renouncing the throne, he left for Śrī-dhana, where he was attended by Yogi (?) Rāma, who later settled in Devagiri.' For works attributed to Saroruha-vajra or Padma-vajra, see Supplementary Note 41.
71. For works attributed to Lalitavajra, see Supplementary Note 42.

and others. Roughly speaking, they were contemporaries. There were many bearing the name *Padma-vajra. Padma⁷² of this period was the middle one. The word mtsho-skyes (literally, the lake-born) has many (Indian) equivalents. Here this should be taken as *Saroruha.⁷³

Among them, ācārya *Kuku-rāja,⁷⁴ 'the king of dogs', was very famous. In some histories, his name occurs as *Kutā-rāja.⁷⁵ He was most famous among the older yogī-s. During the day he used to preach the Doctrine in the guise of a dog to a thousand vira-s and yoginī-s. In the night, he used to go to the crematorium and with them observe the esoteric rites like gaṇa-cakra. After practising this for twelve years, he ultimately attained the mahā-mudrā-siddhi. He expounded five esoteric Tantras⁷⁶ and many yoga Tantras. It is said that he attained siddhi by the Guhya-candra-tilaka-tantra.⁷⁷

Now about ācārya Lalita-vajra. He was a paṇḍita of *Nalendra. He followed the *Vairocana-māyājāla-tantra*⁷⁸ and took resort to ārya Mañjuśrī as his tutelary deity. He asked his own preceptor, 'What is bhairava-sādhana etc as belonging to the Vajra-bhairava?'⁷⁹ Thus asked, he (the preceptor) said, 'All these do not exist in the human realm. So I do not know these. You should propitiate your tutelary deity for knowing these.'

[Fol 95A] He earnestly propitiated ārya Mañjuśrī and, after about twenty years, received the vision and the blessings of

72. mtsho-skyes.

73. V tr 'Though there were many mtsho-skyes-rdo-rje, the one referred to here is the middle one and of the many words corresponding to (the Tibetan word) mtsho-skyes (born of the lake i.e. lotus), here this should be taken as Saroruha.'

74. V & S Kukurā-rāja, which occurs in S-ed.

75. i.e. kuttā-rāja.

76. nan-rgyud-sde, which may be translated as 'tantra-s of the insiders'. S tr 'five chapters of the Buddhist Tantras'. V tr 'he extensively preached Buddhist Tantras and Yoga Tantras.'

77. Śrī-candra-guhya-tilaka-nāma-mahā-tantra-rāja—Kg Sendai 477.

78. rnam-par-snañ-mdsad-sgyu-'phrul-dra-ba'i-rgyud.

79. V tr 'What are the tantra-s of Vajrabhairava, Bhairava and others ?'

the Tantra. He also attained a number of sādhāraṇa-siddhi-s. (Mañjuśrī) instructed him : 'Bring the Yamāri Tantra from the Dharma-gaṇja⁸⁰ of *Urgyana.'⁸¹ So he went to *Urgyana and had a contest of (magic) power with a number of *tīrthika yoginī-s*⁸² there. He fell unconscious by their magic stare. Receiving back his consciousness, he prayed to the Vajra-yoginī-s. He received the vision of Vajra-vetālā, who conferred on him the abhiṣeka of the Yamāri-maṇḍala. He then meditated on the sampanna-krama of four yoga-s for two and a half months⁸³ and attained the mahā-siddhi. As a mark of this, he subdued a wild and violent buffalo, attracted it towards himself and rode on it. He also practised the Vidyā-vrata. He then wanted to take from the *Dharma-gaṇja of *Urgyana the Yamāri and other Tantras for the welfare of all future living beings. The ḍākinī-s said, 'You can take as much as you can commit to memory in seven days.' He prayed to his tutelary deity and committed to memory the Kṛṣṇa-yamāri-tantra, which was the body-speech-mind of all the Tathāgatas,⁸⁴ the Tri-kalpa,⁸⁵ the Sapta-kalpa⁸⁶ and many other fragmentary dhāraṇī-s and longer Kalpa-kramas. And he extensively propagated these in the Jambudvīpa.

[Fol 95B] In the land of the petty tīrthika feudatory chief *Naravarmā in the west, he had a contest of magic-power with the tīrthika-s. Some of the leading tīrthika-s swallowed a drona (measure) of poison each. The ācārya swallowed a quantity of poison which could be carried by ten men. He next swallowed two wine-jars of quicksilver. Still he remained unaffected. This king was full of reverence. He entered the path of the insiders and built a temple for Mañjuḥoṣa.

In the city of *Hastināpura he destroyed one day a group

80. chos-kyi-mtsod. V '(from the library of) Dharmagaṇja'.

81. S Udyāna.

82. P-ed rnal-'byor-pa. S-ed rnal-'byor-ma. Hence S tr 'yoginī-s'.

83. phyed-daṅ-gsum. S tr 'after the third half month'.

84. Sarva-tathāgata-kāya-vāk-citta-kṛṣṇa-yamāri-nāma-tantra.

85. rG lxxx.11-13—collectively called Kalpatraya.

86. Tg Sapta-kalpa-vṛtti (rG lxxx.14) attributed to Lalitavajra.

of tīrthika tānika-s by turning the Yamāri-cakra. In *Bagala⁸⁷—in a part of *Varendra in the east—a nāga called *Vikriḍa was causing much damage to the insiders. He subdued him too with a homa. Immediately, the lake in which the nāga dwelled dried up. Thus he subdued thousands of tīrthika-s and Pārasikas⁸⁸ etc who were hostile to the Law. He also subdued about five hundred wicked sub-human beings with abhicāra and thus caused welfare to the living beings. At last he attained the rainbow-body.

His disciple *Lilāvajra committed to writing the works of the ācārya. But the Yamāntakodaya and the Śānti-krodha vikriḍita etc were composed by Lilāvajra the great.

There are many anecdotes about contests in magic of *Lva-va-pā, *Lalitavajra, *Indrabhūti and others. After attaining siddhi both *Lva-va-pā and *Lalitavajra went towards *Urgyana in the west. There was an impassable hill called *Murūḍaka. These two ācārya-s discussed among themselves: 'With whose ṛddhi can we cross over it?'

[Fol 96A] *Lalitavajra said, 'This time let us cross it with my ṛddhi. On our way back, it will be done with your ṛddhi.'

Then *Lalitavajra himself assumed the form of Yamāri and, with the sword—the āyudha of Yamāri—pierced the hill from the peak to the foot. Thus was opened a very narrow path. After they moved through it, the hill became as it was before.

*Indrabhūti was then attaining the sādhāraṇa-siddhi in *Urgyana. As he came to know that a siddhācārya called *Lalitavajra had just arrived, the king moved forward with the people to welcome him. Since it was necessary to massage each foot of the ācārya with two hands, he (Indrabhūti) started massaging with four hands. Then the ācārya created four legs of his own. The king had eight hands. The ācārya produced eight (legs). The king (produced) sixteen (hands), the ācārya (produced) sixteen (legs). The king had no power

87. V & S Bagla, which occurs in S-ed. P-ed Bagala.

88. stag-gzig. D 548 a corruption of the name Tajik, by which Persia and Persians are known to Tibetans.

beyond creating sixteen hands like the gods.⁸⁹ So he started massaging (one leg) with one hand each. The ācārya eventually created one hundred legs. Thus was smashed the pride of the king.⁹⁰

On their way back towards the east, the two ācārya-s *Lva-va-pā and *Lalita stopped for one night again in front of the *Murunḍaka hill. *La-va-pā said, 'The hill is very high. We shall have to cross it tomorrow early morning.' A little after midnight, *Lva-va-pā made the hill vanish with his power of samādhi and the two moved easily as over a flat ground. In the early morning, *Lalitavajra looked back and found that they had already crossed the hill. It is said that this astonished him much [Fol 96B] and he bowed down to the feet of *Lva-va-pā.

According to the account widely current in the ārya-deśa, the foremost yogī *Virū-pā meditated on the path of Yamāri and attained siddhi under the blessings of Vajra-vārāhī. He became as great a yogī as Yamāri himself. And hence he could indeed preach all the Tantras. But it was the practice of the siddha-s to preach according to the capacity of the disciples. So he brought the *Rakta-yamāri-tantra*⁹¹ according to the prediction of bhagavan himself. He wrote down the sādhana and the *upadeśa*⁹² (on it). His disciple *Dombi *Heruka brought the *Kurukullā-kalpa and the *Arallī-tantra.⁹³ By

89. V & S tr 'As he had a vision of a sixteen-handed god only, the king could not bring forth any more'.

90. V n : 'According to the account of the 84 siddha-s, Uryyana had about 500,000 towns and was divided into two portions: in one, called Sambhala, reigned Indrabhūti, and in the other called Laṅkāpurī, reigned Jalendra, whose son was married to Indrabhūti's sister Lakṣmīnkarā, who had become a sorceress. After this, Indrabhūti himself passed on the throne to his son and in 12 years attained mahā-siddhi. After having preached the Doctrine, he went to heaven.'

91. bcom-ldan-'das. J 147 & D 329 an usual epithet of the Buddha.

92. Tg contains Rakta-yamāri-sādhana (rG xlii.96) and Rakta-yamāntaka-sādhana (rG xliii.97) attributed to Virū-pā.

93. V n : 'In Kg vol ha there are two Arali Tantras (Vajra-arali and Rigi-arali Tantras).'

his abhijñāna, he learnt the real significance of the Tantras, discussed with the jñāna-dākinī-s, understood the essence of the *Hevajra-tantra*⁹⁴ and composed many śāstra-s like the *Nairātmā-devī-sādhana*⁹⁵ and the Sahaja-siddhi.⁹⁶ He also conferred abhiṣeka on his own disciples.

After this, the two ācārya-s *Lva-va-pā and Saroruha brought the Hevajra-tantra. *Lva-va-pā composed a śāstra called the Svasaṃveda-prakṛta*, having sampanna-krama as its main subject-matter. Saroruha composed among others the śāstra on the utpanna-krama-sādhana. Siddha Saroruha was the first to bring the Hevajra-pitṛ-sādhana.

I have not read or heard any clear account of Śrī-gupta, the Mādhyamika mahācārya of the east.

At the time there lived in the south *Kamalagomī, a siddha of Avalokiteśvara. In a monastery in the south, there was then a monk, who was an expert in the three piṭaka-s [Fol 97A] and who meditated on the Mahāyāna. Upāsaka *Kamalagomī was his attendant. This *Kamalagomī was previously not a follower of the Law and he was not even aware of karma. In front of the gate of a monastery he found a silver-plate with something written on it. He gladly picked it up and misused it by way of offering it to some local harlots.

Now, the ācārya bhikṣu whom he served used to have his meal early and to keep himself shut within the cell till the evening. Once this upāsaka asked him, 'Why do you keep yourself thus shut from the morning to the evening?'

'Oh son, what is the use of your asking this?'

'I want to follow the ācārya's practice and meditate on the same.'

'Oh son, I practise nothing special. I simply go to the 94. Hevajra-tantra-rāja-nāma.

95. In Tg Nairātmā-yoginī-sādhana (rG xxii.17) is attributed to Dombi Heruka. There are four more works on Nairātmā-sādhana (lxx.156; 157; lxxi.88; 336) whose author is not mentioned. rG xxii.23 is attributed to Kṛṣṇa-panḍita.

96. Tg contains Śrī-sahaja-siddhi-nāma (rG xlvi.8) attributed to Dombi Heruka. See also Supplementary Note 34.

*Potalā hill to listen to the Doctrine from ārya Avalokiteśvara and I open the door after coming back.'

'Please take me along with you.'

Being thus prayed, (the ācārya) said, 'I should better ask the ārya about this.'

The next day, the ācārya came back and was asked (by the attendant about what had happened). The ācārya was mildly annoyed and said, 'Oh son, you have made me a messenger for a sinner!' The attendant asked, 'Why?' The ācārya said, 'When I spoke to the ārya about you, the ārya asked me not to carry any message from a sinner. You have ruined the copy of the Ārya-prajñā-pāramitā inscribed on a silver-plate. So you will not have the good fortune to go to *Potala.'

Thus told, he realised that this was the silver-plate he had found earlier. Afraid of his own sin, [Fol 97B] he said, 'Oh ācārya, please find out from the ārya how to atone for this sin.'

The next day, he (ācārya) asked the ārya about it. Avalokiteśvara gave him a sādhana of very deep significance. The ācārya gave it to the upāsaka, who sat in a solitary forest and entered the sādhana with intense concentration. About twelve years passed by. Then a crow brought a lump of rice for eating it on the branch of a tree. It fell in front of *Kamalagomī. During the last twelve years, he had no cooked food to eat. So he felt like eating it and hence had a strong desire of eating rice.⁹⁷ Accordingly he went out for begging in the city. Unfortunately, however, he received nothing for a few days. At last he received a little quantity (of rice) and proceeded to the forest, carrying it in an earthen pot. On examination, he realised that the mind of one desirous of eating rice was actually nature-less (svabhāva-hīna). Then he clearly understood śūnyatā and saw before him ārya Avalokiteśvara along with his retinue sitting with a halo round him. He immediately threw the pot of rice on the ground and this made the earth shake. A piece of this broken pot fell on the head of the nāga king Vāsuki⁹⁸, who examined it and found out how this happened. The daughter of the nāga king Vāsuki, along with her five hundred attendants, came there to worship with nine items of delicious food. But as he had given up the desire of eating rice, he turned his back at these.

97. S-ed zos-pa (ate). P-ed mos-pa (desired to eat). S tr 'So he had a strong desire to eat and he ate it up. Upon this a strong desire for rice grew in him.'

To convert the nāga-s, he went later to the realm of the nāga-s. He also worked extensively in the human realm for causing welfare to all the living beings. At last, he went to *Potala.

The twentysixth chapter containing the account of the period of Śrī Dharmakīrti.

98. klu'i-rgyal-po-nor-rgyas.

CHAPTER 27

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF
KING GOBICANDRA AND OTHERS

[FoI 98A] Now, even after the death of *Viṣṇurāja, the old dynastic line of the *Mālavas continued without interruption.

*Bharthari¹ was then the king. A sister of this king was married to *Vimalacandra and king *Govicandra² was born of the union. He (Gobicandra) either ascended the throne or was about to ascend it at about the time of Dharmakīrti's passing away. These two kings were converted by siddha *Jalandhari-pā³ and ācārya Kṛṣṇācārya.⁴ But the account of this is to be found elsewhere.

There lived also at that time siddha *Tanti-pā⁵. In the city of *Arvanti⁶ [? Avantī] in *Mālava, there was a weaver family which for a long time maintained itself by this profession. He (Tanti-pā of this family) had many sons and grandsons so that the weaver family became a large one. As he grew old and became incapable of working, he was maintained by turn in the houses of his sons. He ultimately became an object of ridicule for all. The sons told him, 'Do not worry for your livelihood and stay in a solitary place.' A hut was built for him in a corner of the garden of his eldest son and he lived there.

1. S n quoted by V : 'Is it not a corruption of Bhartṛhari ?'
2. S n quoted by V : 'cf Lassen iii.860, Gobicandra'.
3. For works attributed to Jalandhari-pā, see Supplementary Note 43.
4. nag-po-spyod-pa-pa. V & S Kṛṣṇācārin. cf Bu-ston ii.120 ; BA ii.754. For works attributed to nag-po-spyod-pa-pa, Kāhnapāda, Kṛṣṇapāda, Kṛṣṇācārya, Kṛṣṇapaṇḍita, Kāhna-pā, nag-po('i)-shabs, etc, see Supplementary Note 44.
5. Tg contains Catvryoga-bhāvana-nāma (rG xlvi.54) attributed to ācārya Tanti-pāda.
6. S n 'surely Avantī'. V quotes this note.

His sons used to send him the daily food by turn from their own houses.

Siddha *Jalandhari-pā once arrived there in the guise of a simple yogī and asked for the night's shelter from the eldest son of the weaver, who honoured him with a little gift and sent him to the garden. After the lamp was lighted in the evening, the old man noticed a guest there. In the early morning, he asked, 'Who is there?'

'I am a travelling yogī. [Fol 98B] But who are you?'

'I am the father of these weavers. I am kept concealed here, for I have grown too old to be presented before others. You yogī-s are distinguished for mental purity. Kindly bless me.'

The ācārya found him worthy of blessings and immediately he drew the miraculous maṇḍala, conferred on him the abhiṣeka, gave him some instruction of profound significance and went away. The old man meditated intensely following the preceptor's instruction and, after a few years, bhaṭṭārikā Vajrayoginī appeared before him in person. When she put her hand on his head, he immediately attained the Mahāmudrā-siddhi.

For sometime, however, he kept this as a secret.

His eldest son had once a number of guests, who kept him so busy that he forgot to send food to the father. Late in the evening, he remembered this and sent a maid with the food. She heard the sound of songs and music and she came to know that it was coming from the hut. She peeped through the door, saw the body of the old man radiating lustre and twelve gods and goddesses worshipping him with offerings. It is said that they vanished immediately after the door was opened.

Thus it was known that he had attained siddhi. But on being questioned about it, he did not admit of anything and only said that by the blessings of a yogī he had regained some strength of the body.

So he started again the work of the weaver, singing all the time. He met Kṛṣṇācārya during this time. But the account of this is to be found elsewhere.

Once upon a time, the people of that country were about to slaughter thousands of goats for worshipping Durgā⁷ and other mother-goddesses. [Fol 99A] By the magic spell of the ācārya, these goats were turned into jackals. The people felt doubt and went away. He then feigned to have tumbled on the altar of Durgā, who appeared before him and asked, 'Oh siddha, what do you desire?' He ordered her not to accept worship in the form of slaughtered animals. So till now, she is being worshipped there only with 'the three white things' (i.e. curd, milk and butter).

After this, he sang many vajra songs and went away, nobody knew where.

After *Gobīcandra, his paternal cousin⁸ *Lalitacandra⁹ became the ruler. He ruled peacefully for many years. Kṛṣṇācārya, during the latter half of his life, converted the king and his minister and led them to attain siddhi. *Lalitacandra was thus the last king of the *Candra dynasty. After him, though many kṣatriya-s were born in the *Candra line, none of them actually ruled the country.

In *Bhaṃgala, *Oḍiviśa, etc.—the five regions in the east—those who were born in the royal family lived as ministers, brāhmaṇa-s, rich merchants, etc and were lords in their respective spheres. But there was no king as such ruling the state.

During this period lived siddha-rāja Sahajalalita¹⁰ and Vinītadeva¹¹, the ācārya of Śrī *Nalendra.

He (Vinītadeva) composed commentaries on the Seven Treatises on pramāṇa.

Also lived during this period *Śubhamitra, the expert in the sūtra-s.¹²

7. dka'-zlog-ma. V & S Umā.

8. pha-tshan-gyi-spun-zla. S cousin. V uncle.

9. rol-pa'i-zla-ba.

10. lhan-skyes-rol-pa. V & S Sahajavilāsa. For works attributed to Sahajalalita, see Supplementary Note 45.

11. dul-ba-lha. Vidyabhusana HIL 320 places him in c A.D. 700. For works attributed to him, see Supplementary Note 46.

12. mdo-sde-'dsin-pa, which means both 'expert in the sūtra-s' and Sautrāntika—D 676. It may be tempting to conjecture that Tār refers [Moreover] ācārya Śīlapālita,¹³ Śāntisoma and others, who propagated the sūtra-s and the vinaya from the Vijñāna[-vāda] standpoint¹⁴ lived then. Ācārya Kambala-pā, the author of the *Prajñāpāramitā-ava*¹⁵ and mahācārya [Fol 99B] Jñānagarbha,¹⁶ a disciple of Śrīgupta, and others accepted the Mādhyamika doctrine of nature-lessness (svabhāva-hīna).

In *Hacipura¹⁷ in *Bhaṃgala in the east, there lived upāsaka bhaṅṅāraka A-svabhāva.¹⁸ He elaborately expounded the Vijñāna-mādhyamika¹⁹ view.

here to the Sautrāntika author Kalyāṇamitra, from the Tibetan equivalent of whose name (dge-legs-bśes-gñen) Tār can as well reconstruct Śubhamitra. But such a conjecture would not be justified primarily because of two reasons. First, Tār seems to give here a list of ācārya-s who adhered to the stand-point of vijñāna (Vijñānavādi-s). Secondly, the Sautrāntika author on the Vinaya is mentioned by him later in Fol 105A by the Tibetan equivalent of the name. Therefore, it is better not to identify the present Śubhamitra (mentioned in transliteration) with the Sautrāntika Kalyāṇamitra, though no work of this Śubhamitra is traced in Tg.

13. tshul-khrims-bskyañs. In Tg Āgama-k.śudraka-vyākhyāna (mDo lxxx.1 ; commentary on Kg 'Dui-ba, vol tha & da) is attributed to ācārya Śīlapālita, a disciple of pañḍita guru Dharmottara.
14. rnam-rig, which means both 'nyāya' and 'vijñāna'—J 314, D 761. In the present context, the latter meaning seems to make better sense. S tr "...the Sautrāntika Śubhamitra and the ācārya Śīlapālita, Śāntisoma and others, who composed the nyāya-siddhānta from its very basis and propagated the sūtra-s and vinaya." V tr "The Sautrāntika Śubhamitra, ācārya Śīlapālita, Śāntisoma and other followers of the system (of Yogācāra) of the idealists (nyāya-siddhānta); they propagated the sūtra-s and vinaya".
15. In Tg Bhagavati-prajñāpāramitā-ava-śloka-piṇḍārtha (mDo xvi.3) along with a commentary on it (mDo xvi.4) are attributed to mahācārya Kambala.
16. ye-śes-sñiñ-po. cf BA i.34, where he is mentioned as a disciple of Śrīgupta. For works attributed to him, see Supplementary Note 47.
17. S n also quoted by V: 'Is it Hājipura, which appears in Tibetan Geography also as being on the bank of the river Gaṅḍakī?'
18. ño-bo-ñiḍ-med-pa. In Tg are attributed to him Mahāyāna-sūtrālamkāra-ṅikā (mDo xlv.3), Mahāyāna-saṃgraha-upanibandhana (mDo lvi.4) and a commentary (mDo cxxviii.3) on Kambala-pā's Āloka-mālā-prakarāṇa (mDo cxxvii.3).
19. rnam-ri, gi-dbu-ma. S nyāya-madhyamaka. V 'the idealist Madhyamaka (nyāya-madhyamaka)!' But see Supplementary Note 12.

In Thogar lived the mahā-vinayadhara Vaibhāṣika²⁰ ācārya Dharmamitra.²¹ In *Maru in the west, lived the mahā-vinayadhara Puṇyakīrti.²² In *Citavara lived Śāntiprabha,²³ an expert in the Vinaya and in Kashmir lived Mātṛceṭa,²⁴ also an expert in the Vinaya.

Apart from them, I have not come across any detailed account of others.

Now about ācārya Jñānagarbha. He was born in Oḍiviśa and became a great paṇḍita. He listened to the Doctrine from ācārya Śrīgūpta in *Bhaṃgala. He became famous as a great Mādhyamika follower of the views of Bhavya. He propitiated for a long time ārya Avalokiteśvara, at last had the vision of him as moving the Cintāmaṇi-cakra²⁵ and attained abhijñāna. He recited many sūtra-s from his memory and defeated the tīrthika-s.

Now about upāsaka bhaṭṭāraka A-svabhāva.

Born in a family of merchants, he became a follower of the Mahāyāna quite early in life. He received the vision of ārya Mañjuśrī and could recite from his memory about fifty sūtra-s. He never deviated from the ten-fold virtue: He preached the Doctrine to a thousand upāsaka-s and a thousand upāsikā-s. He once went towards *Kāmarūpa. His disciples reached a place on the den of a poisonous Aḷagara snake. It was then asleep. They set up their camp by the road, which woke up the poisonous snake. [Fol 100A] It sniffed the human smell, swallowed some of the upāsaka-s and bit many others. Those

20. bye-brag-tu-smra-ba, the usual Tibetan for Vaibhāṣika. V 'of Vibhaj-yavāda school.' But Tg clearly mentions Dharmamitra as a Vaibhā-ṣika from Tukhāristān—see next note.

21. In Tg the colophon of the Vinaya-sūtra-ṭīkā (mDo lxxxv-lxxxvi) attributed to him mentions him as ārya-mūla-sarvāstivādi-mahā-vinayadhara-tukhāra-vaibhāṣika-ācārya Dharmamitra, the student of Guṇaprabha. cf Bu-ston ii.161: 'he is considered by some to have been the pupil of Guṇaprabha.'

22. bsod-nams-grags.

23. shi-ba-'od.

24. ma-khol.

25. yii-bshin-nor-bu'i-'khor-los-bsgyur-ba.

who tried to escape fell down reeling by its poisonous breath.

He (A-svabhāva) earnestly prayed to bhaṭṭārikā āryā Tārā and composed a long eulogy to her. This caused intense pain to the poisonous snake. It vomitted out two upāsaka-s. and fled off. When he sprinkled water charmed with Tārā-mantra on those who were swallowed or bitten or turned unconscious by the poisonous snake, the poison came out from the wound of their bodies. And thus they recovered.

On another occasion, the ācārya himself was attacked by a poisonous snake. As he threw a flower charmed with the Tārā-mantra, it vomitted out before the ācārya many pearls called sarva-mukti* and went away. He had also the miraculous power to extinguish the forest fire with Tārā-mantra, etc.

A brief account of Dharmamitra is to be found elsewhere. It is worse than a grave mistake to say that this Dharmamitra, the direct disciple of Guṇaprabha, was the same as the Dharmamitra who composed the commentary called the Prasphuṭa-padā.²⁶ Such a view, if assumed to be true, will lead us to consider ārya Vimuktasena and Haribhadra²⁷ as contemporaries.

During this time, there arose various important disputes in the east. Though unlike the previous period there was no debate in big scale inspired by the spirit of contest leading to big victories and defeats, many minor controversies took place during this period. For the insiders it should have been easier to debate, because by this time they could depend on Dharmakīrti's śāstra. Due to the influence of time, however, the number of scholars diminished [Fol 100B] and, because of the increase of the number of the firthika rivals, the insider debaters in the smaller monasteries were passing through anxious time.

There was a monastery called the Piṇḍa-vihāra*²⁸ in the city of *Caṭighāho²⁹ in *Bhaṃgala. A number of tīrthika debaters announced that they were going to have a debate there on the following morning. (The monks) felt uncertain about their own capacity. An old woman turned up at that time and said, 'While having the debate, put on caps with pointed tops like thorns. And that will bring you victory.' They acted accordingly and won victory. In other places also, they became victorious in a similar way. From then on, the paṇḍita*-s adopted the practice of wearing pointed caps. During the period of the seven Pāla*-s and of the four Sena*-s, all the Mahāyāna paṇḍita*-s used to wear pointed caps. Before this time, however, there was no such practice³⁰.

26. Abhisamayālamkāra-kārikā-prajñāpāramitopadeśa-śāstra-ṭīkā Prasphuṭa-padā-nāma (mDo viii 1).

27. sen-ge-bzan-po.

28. The Piṇḍaka-vihāra mentioned by Yuan-chuang is, however, in the north—Watters i.130.

Before the great ācārya Dharmakīrti, the Law of the Buddha was as bright as the sun. After him, generally speaking, there were many great upādhyāya-s who worked excellently for the Law. But there was practically none equal to the older ācārya-s. By the influence of time, the Law also was not as bright as before.

The greatest Tāntrika ācārya-s belonged to the period between that of ārya Asaṅga and this one. But since the anuttara-dharma was spread only among the fortunate, the ordinary people were unaware of it. From this period on, the spread of the yoga and anuttara tantra gradually increased. During an intermediate period, the yoga tantra remained widely prevalent, but the exposition of and meditation on the caryā and kriyā tantra-s gradually went down. As a result, during the time of the seven [Fol 101A] Pāla* kings, among the Tāntrika Vajrācārya-s the number of those who attained some siddhi gradually increased.

About this period, there was a feudatory chief called Prakāśacandra*, who was born in the line of the Candras* and who attained siddhi. He propagated the yoga tantra extensively.

29. Is it modern Chittagong? S n also quoted by V: 'In the Tibetan Geography p. 81 it is called Catigom.'

30. V n 'These are the caps which are now called the paṇḍita caps.' cf Vidyabhusana HIL 271.

Further, more than half of those who were famous among the insiders as the eighty-four siddhācārya-s came after the period of Dharmakīrti and before king *Canaka. Their account will be presently given.

During the period of the Six Jewels, the Mahāyāna ācārya-s were great scholars of the Doctrine and the saṃgha-s remained disciplined. In spite of this, however, the Śrāvaka saṃgha-s were larger in number.

From this period on, the Law became gradually weaker in the south and there eventually became extinct. In other areas also it went on decaying. However, during the period of the seven *Pālas, in the Aparāntaka countries like *Magadha, *Bhaṃgala and *Oḍiviśa and in the country of Kashmir (the Law) was extensively spread. In other places, it survived in a scattered and feeble form.³¹ In the small country of Nepal, it became very widespread. In these lands where the Law was spread, it was spread mainly in the form of Mantra and Mahāyāna.

The Śrāvakas also maintained their popularity. But the nobler sections of the people consisting of the kings and others were above all devoted to the Mahāyāna. In the older times, the Mahāyānis studied mainly the sūtra-s and the commentaries only secondarily. Later on, this mode was reversed and, excepting the Prajñā-pāramitā, they mainly studied the śāstra-s composed by the ācārya-s.

The twentyseventh chapter containing the account of the period of king Gobicandra and others.

31, V & S tr 'excepting in a few pockets, it did not survive.'

CHAPTER 28

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF KING GOPĀLA

Near a forest of Puṇḍravardhana on the border of the madhya-deśa and the east, [Fol 101B] there lived a very beautiful girl born in a Kṣatriya family. As a result of her union with a deity of the tree, a son with auspicious marks was born of her.¹ When he grew up into a boy, he found a large self-radiating gem by digging the ground at the foot of the tree which was the abode of the deity. With it [? as the ācārya's fee] he received abhiṣeka from an ācārya with instructions to propitiate the goddess *Cundā.² He propitiated her. He always kept concealed with himself a small wooden club, the āyudha of his tutelary deity. The goddess once appeared in dream and blessed him.

From there he went to the temple of ārya *Khasarpaṇa and prayed, 'May I obtain a kingdom.' He (Khasarpaṇa) predicted, 'Move towards the east and you will obtain a kingdom.'

So he moved towards the east.

At that time there was no king in *Bhaṃgala for many years. As a result, the people there were passing through a disturbed and unhappy period. The chiefs of the country met in an assembly, discussed among themselves and elected a king to rule the country properly.

1. cf Bu-ston ii.156.

2. S n 'In vol ru of the Tantras, Tg contains Cundā-sādhana, which also appears in the manuscript in Paris under the title Sādhana-mālā-tantra Fol 81'. V quotes this note and adds, 'It also exists in China and portions of it will be translated by us, when we analyse the Tantras.' In Tg Cundā-sādhana occurs four times without mentioning the author: rG lxx.109; lxxi.41; 215; 217. There is also a work with the title Ārya-cundā-sādhana (rG lxxxvi.36) attributed to Buddhakīrti. The reference to Vol ru by S & V seems to be a misprint; it should be read as lu.

There was an evil and powerful nāginī. A king with magic power made her the queen. According to some, she was the queen of *Gobicandra, according to others of *Laliticandra. In any case she used to kill every night anybody who was appointed the king during the day. Thus she killed all those that were appointed as kings.³ However, since there could be no welfare to the kingdom without a king, every morning somebody was appointed king, who was killed during the night. His dead body was taken out early in the morning. This was going on for several years and everybody in the country had to wait for his turn. Thus passed some years.

Then the person who had attained siddhi of goddess *Cundā entered a house and found everybody there plunged in grief. On enquiring the reason for this, he came to know that it was the turn for their son to be the king on the next day. He said, 'I shall go as his substitute, if I am paid for it.' This made them very happy and, receiving the payment from them, he became the king on the next day.

At midnight, the nāginī in the form of a rākṣasī [Fol 102A] came as usual to kill [lit. devour] him. He struck her with the āyudha of the tutelary deity and she died immediately.

On the next morning, the corpse-bearers came and, finding that he was not dead, were highly astonished. As the substitute for others, he was elected king everyday for seven successive days. Then everybody realised that he was highly pious and appointed him as the permanent king and gave him the name *Gopāla.

During the first part of his life, he ruled *Bhaṃgala. In the latter part, he also conquered *Magadha.⁴ He built the *Nalendra vihāra near *Odantapurī.⁵ In these two big provinces, he established many monasteries and thus extensively served the Law.

3. S n 'One may compare here Lassen ii.809 note, where a vetāla kills the kings.'

4. V n 'Lassen iii.721 places the beginning of the reign at about A.D.810'.

5. V tr 'He built a temple named Nalendra in the vicinity of Odantapurī'. cf Bu-ston ii,156.

According to Indradatta,⁶ this king was appointed to his kingdom on the year following the death of ācārya Cārin? [? Kṛṣṇācārī]. According to Kṣemendrabhadra, this took place seven years after that.

He ruled for fortyfive years. During the time of this king, ācārya Śākyaprabha,⁸ a disciple of Śāntiprabha and Puṇyakīrti,⁹ was born in the west and worked for the welfare of the living beings in Kashmir. Specially prominent in Kashmir were also the great *Dānaśīla,¹⁰ Viśeṣamitra,¹¹ Prajñāvarman¹² and ācārya Śūra,¹³ an expert in Vinaya. In the east lived ācārya Jñānagarbha.

6. dbah-po-byin. See Fol 139A, where his work is mentioned as Buddhapurāṇa.
7. spyod-pa-pa, lit. 'one who practises mysticism' D 809. V & S 'ācārya Mīmāṃsaka.' But could it be nag-po-spyod-pa-pa, i.e. Kṛṣṇācārya or Kṛṣṇācārī? See Fol 105A.
8. śākya-'od. Tg contains Ārya-mūla-sarvāstivāda-śramaṇera-kārikā (mDo lxxxix.2) along with its auto-commentary called Prabhāvatī (mDo lxxxix.3) by Śākyaprabha. Bu-ston ii.161 quotes from Prabhāvatī in which the author 'himself says that he is the pupil of Puṇyakīrti and Śāntiprabha'.
9. bsod-nams-grags. cf Bu-ston ii.161, where Prabhāvatī is quoted as mentioning Puṇyakīrti as one 'who resided in Magadha, was the ornament of that country and greatly famed'.
10. One of the early Indian ācārya-s to have visited Tibet and to have taken part in the first large-scale Tibetan translation of Indian texts under the patronage of king Khri-Idesroñ-btsan—see A. Chattopadhyaya AT 262f. Dānaśīla is mentioned as one of the compilers of the Mahāvīryūtpatti (mDo cxxiii.44) and in Tg about a hundred works are preserved as translated by him.
11. khyad-par-bśes-gñen. Tg contains Vinaya-saṃgaha (mDo lxxiv.2) attributed to him.
12. śes-rab-go-cha. Tg contains Viśeṣastava-ṭikā (bsTod 2) and Devātiśaya-stotra-ṭikā (bsTod 5) attributed to ācārya Prajñāvarman of Bengal. Besides, it contains a commentary (mDo lxxi.2-lxxii.1) on the Udānavarga (Kg Sendai 326) of arhat Dharmatrāta, where the commentator is mentioned as sarvāstivādi ācārya Prajñāvarman, born in Kabargya (Kāpaṭya ?) of Bhaṅgala and a disciple of ācārya Bodhivarman of Kapadhya (Kāpaṭya ?).
13. dpa'-bo. Tg contains Pratimokṣa-sūtra-paddhati (mDo lxxiii-lxxiv.1), commentary on Kg Pratimokṣa-sūtra (Sendai No 2) attributed to ācārya Śūra.

It is nothing but showing ignorance to say that Buddhajñāna's¹⁴ disciple was Jñānagarbha, and this in spite of admitting that Bhavya, Avalokitavrata¹⁵ (? Avalokiteśvaravrata), Buddhajñānapāda, Jñānagarbha, Śāntarākṣita (Śāntarakṣita)¹⁶ and others belonged to the tradition of the Svātantrika-Mādhyamikas,¹⁷ but without knowing of Haribhadra's¹⁸ commentary, the Aṣṭa-sāhasrikā-vṛhat-ṭīkā,¹⁹ and of Śāntarakṣita's [commentary on] *Madhyamaka-alamkāra*²⁰ and without knowing moreover that Buddhajñāna was a disciple of Haribhadra.²¹ [Fol 102B]

To this period belonged Śākyamati,²² Śīlabhadra,²³ prince

14. sais-rgyas-ye-śes. cf Bu-ston ii.159f : a disciple of Haribhadra and a preceptor of Guṇamitra. cf also BA i.367ff for the Tāntrika career of Buddhajñāna. See Supplementary Note 48.
15. spyan-ras-gzigs-brtul-shugs. Tg contains Prajñā-pradīpa-ṭīkā (mDo xx-xxii), commentary on Bhāvaviveka's Prajñā-pradīpa-mūla-madhyamaka-vṛtti (mDo xviii.8), attributed to Avalokitavrata, born in Sāketa in a brāhmaṇa family.
16. shī-ha-'tsho. cf A. Chattopadhyaya AT 228ff. For works of Śāntarakṣita, see Supplementary Note 49.
17. dbu-ma-rañ-rgyud-pa'i-brgyud-pa.
18. señ-bzañ (señ-ge-bzañ-po). V & S Siṃhabhadra. For his works, see Supplementary Note 50.
19. Tg mDo vi.
20. Tg mDo xxviii.5. See Supplementary Note 50.
21. See colophon of Tg mDo viii.3, where Buddha-śrī-jñāna is mentioned as the principal disciple of Haribhadra.
V tr the passage : 'Those who assume that Bhavya, Avalokitavrata, Buddhajñānapāda, Jñānagarbha and Śāntarakṣita were mādhyamika-svātantrikas and who—without seeing any commentary on 8000 Pāramitās by Haribhadra or any commentary on Madhyamaka-alamkāra by Śāntarakṣita and forgetting that Buddhajñāna was the pupil of Haribhadra—consider Prajñāgarbha (? Jñānagarbha) as the pupil of Buddhajñāna, only give a proof of their greatest folly.'
22. śākya-blo-gros. Tg contains Ārya-gayāśiṣa-sūtra-miśraka-vyākhyā (mDo xxxiv.13), Ārya-daśabhūmi-sūtra-nidāna-bhāṣya (mDo xxxvii.2) and Pramāṇa-vārtika-ṭīkā (mDo xcvi-xcvi) attributed to Śākyamati.
23. ñāñ-tshul-bzañ-po, the preceptor of Yuan-chuang and a disciple of Dharmapāla. See Watters ii.109 ; I-Tsing (Takakusu) xiv, lviii, 181. Tg contains Ārya-buddha-bhūmi-vyākhyāna (mDo xxxvi.3) attributed to Śīlabhadra. It is a commentary on Kg Sendai 275.

Yaśomitra,²⁴ paṇḍita* Pṛthivībandhu²⁵ and others.

Kashmir was then ruled by *Hri *Harṣadeva²⁶ (Śrī Harṣadeva). The siddhācārya-s belonging to this period are to be known from the previous account.

It is particularly clear that *Virū-pā the junior, lived between this king (Gopāla)²⁷ and *Devapāla. In the *Kaccha country in the west, there ruled the king called *Vibharatta. His daughter became the queen of *Devapāla. And so was born their son *Rāsapāla.²⁸ During the period of this *Vibharatta, lived *Virū-pā the junior. The king had a shrine for both the insiders and outsiders. The king himself was devoted to the insiders, but his ministers were devoted to the outsiders. While building the temple, he placed in it the statues of standard human size of the gods of both the insiders and outsiders. The Buddhists asked him to build separate temples, but the tīrthika-s wanted him to build a united one and the ministers endorsed this.

Virū-pā the junior was invited to consecrate this temple. He performed no special rite, but simply said, Āisa, āisa*.²⁹ In Tibetan, this means sog-sog, (i.e. 'come, come'). As he said this, all the images of the temple assembled in the corridor. He next said, 'Sit down'. And all the gods sat down on the floor. He then took a jar full of water and sprinkled the water on the head of the gods. As a result of this, the gods of the insiders suddenly stood up and entered the temple, laughing

24. rgyal-sras-grags-pa'i-bśes-gñen. For works of Yaśomitra, see Supplementary Note 51.

25. sa'i-rtsa-lags. Tg contains Saddharma-puṇḍarīka-vṛtti (mDo xli.2), a commentary on Kg Sendai 113, attributed to him.

26. Tg contains Suprabhāta-stotra (bsTod 56) and Aṣṭa-mahūsthāna-cāitya-vandanā-stava (bsTod 57) attributed to Śrī Harṣadeva, king of Kashmir, the corrupt form of whose name also occurs as Śrī Hirisadeva.

27. V tr 'the king (Gopāla or Śrī Harṣadeva?)'

28. S n also quoted by V: 'Is it not a corruption of Rājyapāla? See Lassen iii.730ff.'

29. Distinctly the words in Bengali dialect āisa, āisa (আইস, আইস).

loudly. The gods of the outsiders remained in the corridor, with their heads hung low. This temple called *Amṛta-kumbha still exists.

During this period also lived the great ācārya Kaudālika,³⁰ the author of the wonderful treatises.

During the period of this *Gopāla or *Devapāla, [Fol 103A] was also built the Śrī *Odantapurī vihāra. There was somewhere in *Magadha a tīrthika yogī of a very simple nature called Narada (? Nārada)³¹, an adept in magic spells. For attaining the vetāla-siddhi, he needed an assistant who had to be truthful, physically strong, free from all diseases, having the nine marks of the vīra, highly intelligent, courageous, free from deceptions and an expert in all the fine arts. He found none with these qualities excepting an insider upāsaka whom he met. He requested the upāsaka, 'Assist me in my sādhana.' (The upāsaka) replied, 'I am not going to assist a tīrthika in his sādhana.'

'You need not be a follower of the tīrthika. Inexhaustible wealth will be obtained (from this sādhana), with which you can spread the Doctrine.'

'So, I shall go and ask of my ācārya.'

Receiving the permission from the ācārya, he became the assistant for the sādhana. When the time of the siddhi was

30. tog-rtse-ba-che-ba. V & S Mahā-koṭali. Tg contains Acintya-kramo-padeśa-nāma (rG xlvi.13), Ātma-yoga-nāma (rG lxxxvi.7), Sarva-devatā-niṣpannakrama-mārga-nāma (rG xlvi.70) and Citta-tattvopadeśa-nāma (rG xlvi.82) attributed to Kaudālika (Kuddālīpāda, Koṭali, Kotali, Kuddali, alias Guḍhari, Guḍarī or Ghadhari). V n 'The Indian name Koṭali has been derived by S on the basis of the account of the 84 siddha-s in which he, in addition to his Tibetan name is also called Kotali. According to this account, when Kotali was digging on a hill, he met Śāntī, who instructed him to meditate on the six pāramitā-s. In the terminology of his occupation, soul is the hill, concentration the hands, the shovel which destroys the barrier is negation, etc.'

31. P-ed Narada ? V & S Narada. Tg (mDo cxliii.34) contains a work called Sāmudrika-nāma-tanu-lakṣaṇa-parikṣā—said to be the original work on tanu-vicāraṇa-śāstra—attributed to Narada.

near, he (Narada) said, 'When the vetāla sticks out its tongue, you must immediately catch it. If you are able to catch it on the first chance, the mahā-siddhi will be attained. (If you are able to catch it) on the second chance, there will be the middle siddhi and on the third chance the lowest siddhi. If you fail to catch it even on the third chance, it (the vetāla) will first devour the two of us and will then make the whole country almost empty.'

The upāsaka could catch it neither on the first nor on the second chance. Then he waited with his own mouth placed on that of the vetāla. On the third chance, he caught it with his teeth. The tongue turned into a sword and the corpse itself into gold.

When the upāsaka took the sword and waved it, he began to fly in the sky. The tīrthikā said, 'I have performed the ritual for the sake of the sword. So give this to me.'

'I shall be back after having some entertaining sights.' Saying this, he went above the top of the Sumerū, circled it and its four dvīpa-s as well as the upa-dvīpa-s and within a moment came back and gave the sword to him.

[Fol 103B] He (Narada) said, 'Take this corpse turned into gold. Take off those portions (of the corpse) that were its flesh, without touching those that were its bones. If you do not spend it for evil purposes like wine and women and if you go on spending it for your own maintenance and for virtuous acts, the part of the body that you slice off during the day will be replaced during the night. It will thus be inexhaustible.'

Saying this, with the sword in his hand he flew to the realm of the gods.

The upāsaka built the great *Odantapurī monastery with the gold from the corpse. *Otaṇḍa (Oḍanta)³² means 'flying'

32. Tār has possibly the Indian word uḍanta, or uḍḍana or uḍḍayana in mind. But the actual name of the monastery could have been Udaṇḍapurī (see Lalou 221, Kern Geschichte ii.545). In colophon of Tg mDo cxxiii.35, the name occurs as Otaṇtras-purī (alias Otanta-purī) or Odantapurī, Udaṇḍapurī.

('phur-byed), for the upāsaka flew in the sky over the Sumeru³³ along with its four dvīpa-s, saw these with his own eyes and built the monastery on that model. This upāsaka is famous as *Uḍya-upāsaka.³⁴

This monastery does not owe itself to the grace of any king or minister. The architects, sculptors and artists that worked for the construction of the temple and its images were paid and maintained from the money obtained in exchange of the gold received from the vetāla. Maintaining five hundred bhikṣu-s and five hundred upāsaka-s from this gold alone, the upāsaka himself looked after this centre for the Doctrine as long as he lived. At the time of his death, he buried this gold under the earth with the prayer : 'Though this gold will not be useful for anybody right now, let this be of use for the benefit of the living beings of the future.' Saying this, he entrusted *Devapāla with this centre for the Doctrine.

The twentyeighth chapter containing the account of the period of king Gopāla.

33. ri-rab.

34. S n also quoted by V 'See Wilson, Works, ii.18'.

CHAPTER 29

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF KING
DEVAPĀLA AND HIS SON

Now about king *Devapāla.

According to some, he was the son of a Nāga. But as he was blessed by the kula-mantra of *Gopāla's line of descent, he is considered to have been his (Gopāla's) son. However, the current account is as follows :

The youngest queen of king *Gopāla asked from a brāhmaṇa adept in magic charms the means of bringing the king under her power (vaśīkaraṇa). (The brāhmaṇa) secured a medical herb from the Himālaya,¹ charmed it with magic spell, mixed it with food, sealed it and said, 'Serve it to the king.' She sent it through her maid.

[Fol 104A] (The maid) slipped on the bank of a river and it (herb) fell into the water. Carried by the water, it reached the nāga-loka. The Nāga king Samudrapāla² swallowed it and, under its influence, came in the guise of the king, united with the queen and she conceived. As the king was then about to punish her, she said, 'On such and such occasion, the king himself came.'

(The king said,) 'So let this be examined.'³

A son was born and at the time of offering worship on that occasion there emerged the hood of a Nāga. Also a ring was seen on the finger of the son which was found to have the Nāga

1. ri-bo-gaṅs-can.

2. rgya-mtsho-skyoñ. V & S Śāgarapāla.

3. S tr : 'As she was about to be punished on the orders of the king, he (nāga) said, let the king himself come and probe into the matter once again.'

V tr : 'As she was about to be punished by the king, he said that he would himself come at the time of delivery and investigate.'

script on it. So it was realised that he was the son of a Nāga king and he was reared up.⁴

After Gopāla's death, he ascended the throne and became more powerful than the previous king. He brought *Varendra in the east under his rule. He wanted to build a wonderful monastery and he built the *Somapurī⁵.

According to most of the histories current in Tibet, the astrologers told the king, 'Prepare a wick with the clothes of śramaṇa-s and brāhmaṇa-s, obtain oil from the houses of kings and merchants, get a lamp from the hermitage, light it, put it before the tutelary deity and pray. After this, you should build the monastery where the incarnation of the Protector of the Doctrine (dharma-pāla) will drop the lamp. That will gradually bring prosperity to the king and blessedness all around.'

These being done, there appeared a crow which picked up the lamp and dropped it into a lake. This made him depressed. In the night, however, the five-headed Nāga king appeared before him and said, 'I am your father. I shall drain the lake dry so that you can build there. Arrange for grand weekly⁶ offerings there.'

This was done and in twentyone days the lake got dried up and the monastery was built. Thus it was built (according to the current account).

4. Bu-ston ii.156 gives practically the same account, though, according to him, the king thus born of the union of Gopāla's wife and the Nāga king was Śrīmat Dharmapāla and not Devapāla. In Bu-ston's account, Devapāla was the grandson of Dharmapāla and the father of Mahipāla and Haribhadra a contemporary of the latter. At the same time, Bu-ston ii.158 knows, 'In the Great Commentary on the Aṣṭasāhasrikā (by Haribhadra), it is said that this work was composed at the monastery of Trikaṭuka, under the patronship of Śrīmad Dharmapāla.' According to the account of Tār, Devapāla's son was Rāsapāla, whose son was Dharmapāla, the patron of Haribhadra and Jñānapāda.
5. Bu-ston ii.156f gives practically the same legend, though the monastery thus built was Odantapurī, not Somapurī.
6. shag-bdun-bdun-na. S 'for seven days', V 'seven weeks'.

[Fol 104B] In the account of the building of the Samudragupta⁷ temple in Kashmir, a black man said in a dream, 'Worship Mahākāla⁸ and the Yakṣa-s will dry up the lake.' Except this, the other details (of the above legend) are same. So it is better not to connect this legend with *Somapurī.

Similarly, the (above) account of the birth of *Devapāla is largely the same as that of Sahajalalita.⁹ So it needs to be examined whether one is modelled on the other.

This famous *Somapurī is also said to be the new *Somapurī.

Inspired by a yogī called *Śīromaṇi, the king raised a big army to wage war on *Oḍiviśa and other places, which were previously the centres of the insiders, but by this period which came under the influence of the tīrthika-s only. When he crossed the country *Rā-rā,¹⁰ he saw a black man coming slowly from a distance. On being questioned who he was, he said, 'I am Mahākāla. Remove the sand dune from this place and you will find a temple. To destroy the temples of the tīrthika-s you will have to do nothing else than surround this temple with the army and play the musical instruments very loudly.'

Then he (Devapāla) removed the sand dune and found a wonderful temple made of stone. The name of this was Śrī Trikaṭuka¹¹ vihāra. According to some account, from this monastery came out a bhikṣu who was absorbed in deep meditation and who enquired about Buddha Kāśyapa and king *Kṛkin.

'It is now the period of the Law of Śākyamuni.' Being told this, he showed many miracles and attained nirvāṇa.¹² Thus it is said.

Everything being done according to the prediction (of Mahākāla), all the temples of the tīrthika-s automatically fell

7. rgya-mtsho-sbas-pa. V & S 'a temple concealed inside a lake'.

8. nag-po-chen-po.

9. lhan-skyes-rol-pa.

10. S Chagala. V 'Rā-ra (Chagala)'. Does Tār refer here to Rāḍha ?

11. dpal-tsha-ba-gsum.

12. V n 'Detailed account of such bhikṣu-s who had given themselves to meditation even in the period of the previous creations of the universe is not rare in Buddhist works.'

into ruins. Thus in all about forty great centres of the īrthika-s were ruined. Some of these were in *Bhaṃgala and *Varendra.

[Fol 105A] He then conquered the whole of *Oḍiviśa.

To the period of this king belonged Kṛṣṇācārya the junior,¹³ who was a follower of ācārya Kṛṣṇācārya and a great paṇḍita* of the three, namely the [Cakra-]sambara, Hevajra and Yamāri. He meditated on the Cakra-sambara in a place near *Nalendra and received the instruction from a ḍakinī to attain vasu-siddhi at the place of a goddess of Kāmaru. He went there, found a chest, opened it and saw an ornamented ḍamaru. The moment he took it up, his feet were no longer touching the earth. Whenever he played it loudly, five hundred siddhayogī-s and yoginī-s appeared from nobody knew where and became his attendants.

He worked for the welfare of the living beings for a long time. At last he went to *Gaṅgāsāgara and passed away, though nobody knew when and how.

He composed many treatises like the exposition of the Sambara. As he had a very long life, he lived for some time even after king *Dharmapāla.

To this period also belonged Śākyamitra,¹⁴ a disciple of ācārya Śākyaprabha.¹⁵ And moreover lived during this period Kalyāṇamitra,¹⁶ the expert in Vinaya, Sumatiśīla¹⁷, Daṃs-ṭrāsena,¹⁸ Jñānacandra,¹⁹ Vajrāyudha,²⁰ Mañjuśrīkīrti,²¹

13. nag-po-spyod-pa-chuñ-ba, A Tāntrika work (rG xvii.3) is attributed to him in Tg.

14. śākya-bśes-gñen. For works attributed to him, see Supplementary Note 52.

15. cf Bu-ston ii.161.

16. dge-legs-bśes-gñen. For works attributed to him, see Supplementary Note 53.

17. blo-bzāñ-hañ-tshul. In Tg Karma-siddha-ṭikā (mDo lxi.2—a commentary on Vasubandhu's Karma-siddha-prakaraṇa) is attributed to him.

18. mche-ba'i-sde. For his works, see Supplementary Note 54.

19. ye-śes-zla-ba. In Tg two commentaries on Nāgamitra's works are attributed to him. These are Kāya-traya-vṛtti (mDo xxix.2) and Yogacaryā-bhāvanā-tātparyārtha-nirdeśa (mDo xxxiii.83—lxi.8).

20. rdo-rje-mtshon-cha. In Tg Śrī-jñāna-guṇa-phala-nāma-stuti (rG lxxviii.19) is attributed to him.

21. 'jam-dpal-grags-pa. For his works, see Supplementary Note 55.

Jñānadatta,²² *Vajradeva,²³ bhaṭṭāraka Avalokitavrata²⁴ of the south and ācārya *Dhanamitra and others of Kashmir.

Ācārya Haribhadra²⁵ became a paṇḍita* during the period of this king and he worked for the welfare of the living beings appropriately. But since during the period of King *Dharmapāla his activities greatly increased, these will be discussed later.

It is clear that ācārya Bodhisattva²⁶ who went to Tibet must have lived sometime between king *Gopāla and king *Dharmapāla. [Fol 105B] Relying on most of the Tibetan accounts some claim that during his life the nine successive Tibetan kings²⁷ had passed away. Assuming this, one has to claim that he even touched the feet of Asaṅga and his brother. That is quite incredible. It is a well-known fact that he was identical with mahā-upādhyāya Śāntarakṣita, the author of the Madhyamaka-alaṃkāra. Let us accept this for the time being, because all the great Tibetan scholars are agreed on this point.

According to their version, he became a great paṇḍita* already during the period of *Gopāla and worked for the welfare of the living beings specially during the period of this king [i.e. Devapāla]. In the work called *bka'-yan-dag-pa'i-tshad-ma*²⁸ by Lha-btsan-po Khri-sroñ-lde-btsan,²⁹ it is said, 'The name of upādhyāya Bodhisattva is mentioned as Dharmasānti-ghoṣa.'

There is no contradiction in the same person being referred

22. ye-śes-byin. In Tg Ārya-caturdharmaka-vyākhyāna-ṭīkā (mDo xxxiv. 11) is attributed to him.

23. In Tg Lokeśvara-śataka-stotra (rG lxxviii.32) is attributed to kavi śrī Vajradeva.

24. See note 15 of Ch. 28.

25. S Siṃhabhadra. V Haribhadra.

26. e.i. Śāntarakṣita, cf A. Chattopadhyaya AT 228ff.

27. bod-kyi-rgyal-rabs-dgu. V & S 'the ninth Tibetan king'.

28. i.e. Samyak-vāk-pramāṇodhṛta-sūtra (mDo cxxiv.8) attributed to Khri-sroñ-lde-btsan.

29. cf A. Chattopadhyaya AT 212ff.

to by several names. One of his names must have been Śāntirakṣita, because the word rakṣita, forming part of the name Śāntirakṣita, was added to the names of his disciples, called 'The Seven Selected Ones.'³⁰ But there is also the view that Śāntirakṣita, the commentator of Jñānagarbha's Mādhyamika-satya-dvaya,³¹ was identical³² with Śāntirakṣita, the author of the Madhyamaka-alamkāra. Therefore, it is necessary to examine which of the two views is correct.

Since the commentary on the *Yoga-tantra-tattva-saṃgraha*³³ was prepared by Śākyamitra in Kośala, it was called Kośala-alamkāra.³⁴ In this commentary is said that he was instructed by eleven guru-s. In the latter part of his life, he went to Kashmir and extensively worked for the welfare of the living beings.

Now about Vajrāyudha.

He composed the stotra for Mañjuśrī called the gaṇ-blo-mar-grags-pa.³⁵ Five hundred different paṇḍita*-s composed this stotra separately and the circumstance of the words and meaning of all these being identical is to be viewed as due to the miracle of the deity (Mañjuśrī).

Now about Mañjuśrīkīrti.

He composed the great commentary on the Nāma-saṃgīti.³⁶ He directly perceived the maṇḍala of Dharma-dhātu and

30. sad-mi-mi-bdun. The first group of Tibetan monk-scholars trained by Śāntarakṣita—see A. Chattopadhyaya AT 244f.

31. Tg contains his Satya-dvaya-vibhaṅga (mDo xxviii.1) along with its auto-commentary (mDo xxviii.2).

32. mi-gvīg-pa, meaning both 'the same man' and 'not one'. V & S 'was not identical.' See mDo xxviii.3 Śāntarakṣita's commentary on mDo xxviii.2.

33. V n 'Kg Vol 7a Tantras 1-109: Sarva-tathāgata-tattva-saṃgraha-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, a Mahāyāna-sūtra which contains the essence of all tathāgata-s.'

34. Tg contains Kośalālamkāra-tattva-saṃgraha-ṭīkā (rG l-li.1) by Śākyamitra.

35. rG lxviii.19 (see note 20 of this chapter). S n 'The book opens with the words gaṇ-blo-mar-grags-pa (lit. 'one who is without intellect') and hence referred to by this name'.

36. See Supplementary Note 56.

Vāgīśvara³⁷ [Fol 106A] and became a great Vajrācārya. A careful study of this commentary shows that he was one of those who crossed the Ocean of the Knowledge of the śāstra-s. I find that a fairly extensive account of him was previously current in Tibet, though I have not liked it much. But those who are interested in it may look up the Ship of Yoga (Yoga-gru-gziñs : Yoga-pota) by the great scholar Bu-ston.

Now about *Vajradeva.

He was a householder and by profession a highly successful bard. He went to Nepal and came across a degraded tīrthika yoginī with many perverse practices. He wrote a poem deriding her. By her curse, he was afflicted with leprosy. He prayed to ārya Avalokiteśvara and composed each day a verse of praise in śraṅgharā metre. Thus in about three months he received the vision of ārya Avalokiteśvara, got cured of the disease and his poem³⁸ which consisted of about a hundred verses remained everywhere in ārya-deśa as a model of excellent poetry.

King *Devapāla ruled for fortyeight years.

After him, his son *Rāsapāla ruled for twelve years. Since he did practically nothing new for the Law, he is not counted among the Seven *Pālas.

During this period Lilāvajra,³⁹ the ācārya of *Urgyana, spent ten years in Śrī *Nalendra, delivered many sermons on the Tantra-yāna and composed the commentary on the Nāma-saṅgīti.⁴⁰

There lived then one bearing the same name as that of ācārya Vasubandhu. He delivered many sermons on the Abhidharma-piṭaka.

Among them, now about ācārya Lilāvajra:

37. V tr 'He was a great vajra-ācārya, who perceived dharma-dhātu in Vāgīśvara-maṇḍala (one having the power on the words, i.e. Mañjuśrī).' S tr 'He was a vajrācārya who had personally perceived the Dharma-dhātu-vāgīśvara-maṇḍala.'

38. i.e. Lokeśvaraśataka—see note 23 of this chapter. cf Winternitz ii.377.

39. sgag-pa'i-rdo-rje. For his works, see Supplementary Note 56.

40. Tg rG lviii.2.

He was born in a place called *Śiṣa⁴¹. [Fol 106B] was ordained in *Urgyana and was a follower of the Vijñāna-mādhyamika⁴² philosophy. After becoming a scholar in all the branches of knowledge, he meditated on Ārya-mañjuśrī-nāma-saṃgīti in a small island called *Madhima in *Urgyana. When he was about to attain the siddhi of ārya Mañjuśrī, the face of the picture of Mañjuśrī radiated bright lustre and kept the island illuminated for many days. Hence he was called Sūryavat⁴³ (the sun-like). A certain heretic felt the need for the five sense-organs of an insider *paṇḍita as materials for his rituals. He came to kill this ācārya. He [Lilāvajra] went on changing his own form into that of an elephant,⁴⁴ horse, girl and boy. So he could not spot him and went away. Hence he was called Viśva-rūpa⁴⁵ (one with all sorts of forms).

During the latter part of his life, he extensively worked for the welfare of the living beings in *Urgyana. After this, he attained the rainbow-body or vajra-kāya.

His ordained name was Śrī-varabodhi-bhāgyavān.⁴⁶ His esoteric (Tāntrika) name was Lilāvajra. Thus the name of the author of the works composed by him is differently mentioned as Lilāvajra, Sūryavat, Viśvarūpa, Śrī-varabodhi-bhāgyavān, etc.⁴⁷

During this time, a son of a Caṇḍāla had the vision of (lit, met) Āryadeva⁴⁸ and under his blessings received the knowledge of the Doctrine without much effort. He meditated and attained siddhi. He received all the Tantra-śāstras of Nāgārjuna

41. S-ed Si-ṣa. P-ed Siṣa. V & S Śaṃśa. cf BA i.367—he was born in nor-bu-gliu, Mañidvīpa.

42. rnam-rig-dbu-ma-pa. S 'nyūya-madhyamaka'.

43. ñi-ma-dan'-dra-ba. V 'Sūrya-saḍṣa' ?

44. glai-po, meaning both elephant and ox. S ox. V cow.

45. sna-tshogs-kyi-gzugs.

46. dpa-l-dan-byah-chub-mchog-gi-skal-ba-dan'-ldan-pa.

47. See Supplementary Note 57.

48. V n 'According to Tāntrika teaching, it is possible to call a certain person from among the dead and receive from him a lost Tantra or initiation up to any extent. This is how the Tāntrikas explain the later appearance of their books, which nevertheless, according to 'the father and son.'⁴⁹ He also expounded some of these. This one was *Mātaṅgī-pā.⁵⁰

Ācārya Rakṣita-pāda⁵¹ of *Koṅkana⁵² composed the *Pradīpodyotana*⁵³ under the direct instruction of Candrakīrti.⁵⁴

Similarly, *paṇḍita Rāhula⁵⁵ also met Nāgabodhi. This was only the beginning of the Dharma-viśiṣṭa-maṇḍala.⁵⁶

[Fol 107A] Afterwards during the four later *Pālas, this was widely spread. Hence it is said, 'The two—namely the sun and the moon in the sky—while on the earth shone the two⁵⁷ [? the two works entitled the Pradīpodyotana].'

The twenty-ninth chapter containing the account of the period of Devapāla and his son.

their belief, were preached during (the lifetime of) Buddha. By the way, it is highly probable that there was some real person bearing the name Āryadeva and that later on—for giving him importance—he was described as identical with the famous pupil of Nāgārjuna.

49. V n 'This explains why there occur in Tibetan translation such works of Nāgārjuna and Āryadeva, which are not at all mentioned by the Chinese.'

50. Tg rG lxxiv.46 Kurukullā-sādhana by Mātaṅgī-pāda.

51. sruñ-ba'i-shabs. In Tg Caturmukha-samaya-siddhi-sādhana (rG lxxxii. 73) and Karma-vidhi (rG lxxiv. 10) are attributed to mahācārya Rakṣita.

52. cf BA i.368, 'at a distance of about 300 yojana-s south of Magadha, there was a thick forest in the region known as Kaṃ-ko-na. In a part of this forest resided the ācārya Rakṣita-pāda, a disciple of the ācārya Nāgārjuna.'

53. In Tg Pradīpodyotana-nāma-ṭikā (rG xxviii. 1) is attributed to Candrakīrti. This apart, Tg contains Pradīpodyotana by Āryadeva (rG xxx & xxxi—the latter an abridged version), Lakṣmīṃkarā (rG xxix. 5) and Karuṇaśrī-pāda (rG xxix. 3).

54. V adds '(called from the other world)'.
55. sgva-gcan-'dsin. For his works, see Supplementary Note 57.

56. chos-'phags-skor-mgo. S 'the circle of the elites of the Doctrine'.

57. V adds '(i.e. the two works entitled the Pradīpodyotana)'. S n 'It appears that this was written on the title of both the works referred to as the Pradīpodyotana, one of which was by Candrakīrti and the other by Āryadeva'.

CHAPTER 30

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF
KING ŚRĪ DHARMAPĀLA

After this, *Dharmapāla, the son of that king (Rāsapāla), ascended the throne. He ruled for sixtyfour years. He conquered also *Kīmarūpa, *Tirahuti, *Gauḍa and other places. Thus his empire was very large and his command was extended in the east up to the sea, in the west up to *Di-li¹ (Delhi), in the north up to *Jalandhara and in the south up to the heart of the Vindhyaçala.

He accepted as his preceptors Haribhadra and Jñānapāda and filled all directions with the Prajñā-pāramitā and the Śrī Guhya-samāja. The *paṇḍita-s versed in the Guhya-samāja and the Prajñā-pāramitā were offered the highest seats of honour etc.

Round about the period when this king ascended the throne, siddhācārya *Kukuri-pā² appeared in *Bhaṃgala and worked for the welfare of the living beings. His account is given elsewhere.

Immediately after ascending the throne, the king invited the teachers of the Prajñā-pāramitā. He had great reverence for Haribhadra³ in particular. This king built in all about fifty centres for the Doctrine, of which thirtyfive were centres for the study of the Prajñā-pāramitā. He also built the Śrī *Vikramaśīla⁴ vihāra.

1. V Tili, as occurring in S-ed. P-ed Dīli.

2. V & S Kukura. V n 'Kukura or Kukkura (Ku-khu-ri-pā) was a Brahmin in the kingdom of Kapila-bhargu. He attained sādhāraṇa-siddhi and was among the 33 gods. The bitch reared up by him, after becoming a śākini, advised him to attain paramā-siddhi and he combined art with spiritual power.'

3. S Siṃhabhadra.

4. S n 'With noteworthy tenacity, the Tibetans retain the form Vikrama-lāśīla and I have allowed this form to remain in my text.'

It was built in the north of *Magadha on the bank of the *Gaṅgā on the top of a hillock.⁵ The central temple in it had a human-size statue of the Mahābodhi. Around it, there were fiftythree smaller temples of Guhya Tantra and fiftyfour common temples. [Fol 107B] Thus he built [the monastery with a] total of one hundred and eight temples and the boundary walls. He lavishly provided with food and clothes one hundred and fourteen persons, namely one hundred and eight *paṇḍita-s and the Bali-ācārya, Pratiṣṭhāna-ācārya, Homa-ācārya, Mūṣika-pāla,⁶ Kapota-pāla and the supervisor of the deva-dāsa-s. For each of them he made provisions that was sufficient for four. Every month he organised a festival for those that listened to the Doctrine and also made excellent gifts to them.

The chief of this centre was also to look after *Nalendra. Each *paṇḍita regularly explained there a special aspect of the Doctrine. Though there was no separate material provision for the different centres, these in fact amounted to one hundred and eight centres.

According to some, this king was an incarnation of ācārya *Kambala-pā. But it is difficult to accept this. It is said that a certain master of the Piṭaka, after attaining power through prayer, was reborn as the king for the purpose of propagating the Prajñā-pāramitā. Since the time of this king, the Prajñā-pāramitā was extensively propagated. Regarding the propagation of the Prajñā-pāramitā-sūtra in the different regions, it was predicted⁷ in it that this was to be propagated first in the madhya-deśa, then in the south, then again in the madhya-deśa,

5. magadha'i-byah-ṅos ('north of Magadha'). V tr 'on the top of a hill on the northern bank of the river Gaṅgā'.

6. P-ed byi-ba-sruñ-ba, (hyi-ba=mouse). S-ed bya-ba-bsruñ-ba (bya-ba=instructions). S tr 'the protector of duties (or instructions)'. V tr 'Protector (? from) (of) mice', V n 'I have read byi-ba-sruñ-ba'. S reads bya-ba-bsruñ-ba'.

7. S tr 'In the chapter on the bhūmi-parikṣaṇa of the Prajñā-pāramitā-sūtra it was predicted—' V tr 'In the Prajñā-pāramitā-sūtra it was predicted—' then in the north and from the north to the distant north. Of this prediction, the period of the spread from the south to the madhya-deśa again is to be identified as the period of this king. According to some, in the sūtra itself it was said that (the Prajñā-pāramitā) was to be spread again in the madhya-deśa after its spread in the north. Such a view is the result of not studying the sūtra-s properly.

During the period of this king, western India was ruled by king *Cakrāyudha, which can be clearly seen in the brief inscription on the stone-pillar of Jayasena.

[Fol 108A] On a rough calculation, he (Dharmapāla) was a contemporary of the Tibetan king Khri-sroñ-lde-btsan.⁸

During the period of this king (Dharmapāla) lived the great logician Kalyāṇagupta,⁹ Haribhadra, Sundaravyūha¹⁰ Sāgaramegha,¹¹ Prabhākara,¹² Pūrṇavardhana,¹³ the great vajrācārya Buddhajñānapāda and his famous disciples, namely Buddhaguhya¹⁴ and Buddhaśānti,¹⁵ and, in Kashmir, ācārya Padmākaraghoṣa,¹⁶ the logician Dharmākaradatta¹⁷ and

8. Petech in IHQ supplement xiii, xv, 77-82 gives the date of this Tibetan king as A.D. 755-797. cf A Chattopadhyaya AT 212ff & 250ff.
9. dge-sruñ. See Supplementary Note 58.
10. māses-bkod. Tg contains Gāthādvaya-vyākhyāna (mDo xxxvii.5) by him, a commentary on Kg mDo Vol. pa xiii.2.
11. rgya-mtsho-sprin. Tg contains Yogacaryā-bhūmi-bodhisattva-bhūmi-vyākhyā (mDo lv) attributed to Sāgaramegha (Samudramegha).
12. 'od-zer. See Supplementary Note 59.
13. gañ-ba-spel-(ba). Tg contains a commentary on Abhidharmakośa (mDo lxvii-lxviii) and an abridged version of the same (mDo lxx.3) attributed to him.
14. sañs-rgyas-gsañ-ba. See Supplementary Note 60.
15. sañs-rgyas-shi-ba. Tg contains Deśanāstava-vṛtti (bsTod 49) attributed to him.
16. padma-'byuñ-gnas-dbyaṅs. In Tg Bhikṣu-varṣāgrapṛcchā (mDo xc.21) is attributed to Padmākaraghoṣa, though it is usually considered to be a work of Padmasambhava—see Roerich BA i.30n & Obermiller Bu-ston ii.intro.4.
17. chos-'byuñ-byin. Vidyabhusana HIL 329—he was a disciple of Dharmākaradatta of Kashmir and of Kalyāṇarakṣita.

Siṃhamukha¹⁸, the expert in Vinaya.

Among them now about ācārya Haribhadra.

He took up ordination though coming from a royal family and was a profound scholar in many śāstra-s. He listened to the exposition of the Madhyamaka works from ācārya Śāntirakṣita. From upādhyāya Vairocana¹⁹ he listened to the Prajñā-pāramitā along with the Abhisamaya-alaṃkāra-śāstra-upadeśa. After this, he propitiated Jina Ajita in the *Khasarpaṇi forest in the east. He received his vision in dream and asked, 'There exist now many commentaries on the Prajñā-pāramitā composed from different philosophical view-points. Which of these should be followed?' He then received the permission: 'Compile those parts of these that are acceptable.'

Shortly after this, king *Dharmapāla invited him. He lived in the Trikaṭuka monastery and preached the Prajñā-pāramitā to thousands of listeners. He composed many śāstra-s like the Aṣṭa-sāhasrikā-mahā-ṭikā.

[Fol 108B] He passed away more than twenty years after king *Dharmapāla ascended the throne.

Now about ācārya Sāgaramegha.

He had a vision of Jina Ajita. It is said that being instructed by him to compose the commentary on the Yogacaryā-bhūmi in five sections, he composed a commentary on the whole of it. However, his commentary on the Bodhisattva-bhūmi²⁰ is most famous.

18. señ-ge gdoñ-can. Bu-ston ji.161 doubts the tradition according to which he was a disciple of Śākyaprabha.
19. rnam-snañ-indsad-bzañ-po. See Supplementary Note 61.
20. V n: 'This work of Sāgaramegha is available in Tg. Bodhisattva-bhūmi is the second part (the first part being Śrāvaka-bhūmi) of the first of the five divisions of the Yogacaryā-bhūmi and contains 6,750 śloka-s. It is partly identical with Sūtrālaṅkāra. It expounds: 1) about the traditions of peoples, 2) about the origin of thought, 3) causing welfare to self and others, 4) about the value of the absolute, 5) about Buddha and his Doctrine, 6) about perfection, 7) about bodhi, 8) about powers, 9)—14) about the six pāramitā-s, each examined in nine ways.'

Regarding Padmākaraghoṣa, I think that he was the same as upādhyāya Lo-dri.²¹

Now about mahācārya Buddhajñānapāda.

He may be considered as the foremost disciple of Hari-bhadra. He attained siddhi and started preaching the Doctrine round about the period when Haribhadra passed away. After some years, he became the king's preceptor. Shortly after this, he consecrated the *Vikramaśīla (monastery) and was appointed the Vajrācārya there. Beginning with the time when this ācārya started working for the welfare of the living beings and up to the time of his passing away, he used to receive every night seven hundred golden paṇa*-s from ārya *Jambhala and three hundred pearl necklaces from the goddess Vasudhārā. By the grace of these deities, every morning the buyer for these turned up. He used to spend before each evening all the money obtained therefrom in pious acts. He spent the time thus. He used to offer lamps as big as the chariot-wheel—seven each for the nineteen deities of the Guhya-samāja and three each for the eight Bodhisattvas and the six Krodhas. He used to offer fifteen naivedya-s to the fifteen guardians of the horizons, each naivedya being raised by two men. He used similarly to offer many other articles of worship and to satisfy the disciples who listened to the Doctrine [Fol 109A] and the ordained monks and all sorts of supplicants. Thus he worked for the perpetual spread of the Law.

He told king *Dharmapāla, 'There are indications of the ruin of the dynasty during the rule of your grandson (tsha-bo). Perform the great homa so that the dynasty may last long and the Doctrine also may be extensively spread.'

Accordingly, he (Dharmapāla) got the homa performed for many years by the vajradhara-s with this ācārya as their chief and offered during this articles worth nine lakh and two thousand tolā*-s of silver.

He (the ācārya) predicted [to the king]: 'Twelve of your successors will be kings, and up to your fifth descendant in particular, many countries will be under their rule and the Law also will be extensively spread.' This prediction came true. The details of his life are to be found elsewhere.

21. lo-dri=varṣa-pṛcchā. As author of Bhikṣu-varṣāgrapṛcchā (see note 16 above), Padmākaraghoṣa is also referred to as upādhyāya Lo-dri.

In a temple of Vajrāsana there was then a large silver-image of *Heruka²² and many treatises on Tantra.²³ Some of the Śrāvaka *Sendhava-s²⁴ of *Siṅga island (Ceylon) and other places said that these were composed by Māra.²⁵ So they burnt these and smashed the image into pieces and used the pieces as ordinary money.

From *Bhaṅgala people used to come to *Vikramaśīla for offering worship. (The Śrāvaka Sendhavas told them), 'That which is called Mahāyāna is only a source of livelihood for those who follow the wrong view. Therefore, keep clear of these so-called preachers of the True Doctrine.' In this way, they used to draw people towards themselves. Later on, the king came to know all these and was about to punish the *Siṅgala islanders. But the ācārya saved them at last.

This ācārya also explained in a limited form the three *Kri-yogas (kriyā-yoga-s). [Fol 109B] But he preached most extensively the five Tantras of the insiders, namely the Samāja, Māyājāla, Buddha-samayoga, Candra-guhya-tilaka- and Mañjuśrī-krodha. Special emphasis was put on the teachings of the Guhya-samāja and so it was very widely spread.

The ācārya had a disciple called Praśāntamitra.²⁶ He was an excellent *paṇḍita of the Abhidharma, Prajñā-pāramitā and the three *Kri-yogas. He lived *ad libitum*²⁷. But recognising him as fortunate, ācārya Jñānapāda conferred abhiṣeka on him,

22. shig (one). V tr 'large silver images of Heruka.'

23. shags (mantra or tantra). V tr 'many secret treatises.'

24. D 1276—sendhava, probably Tibetanised form of the word siddha.

25. Chag lo-tsa-ba (Roerich SW 531f) also found the predominance of the Śrāvakas in Vajrāsana.

26. rab-shi-bśes-gñen. Tg contains three Tāntrika works by him—rG xxv. 3; lvi.3; lvi.4.

27. ci-bder-gnas-pa. D 381—placed as they liked; name of a section of Tāntrika Buddhists in the monastery of Vikramaśīla during Atīśa's time. V 'he lived calmly.'

who, by meditating, received the vision of Yamāri and brought the powerful and malignant²⁸ yakṣa under control, obtained from him whatever wealth he wanted and distributed it to the needy. Employing the yakṣa to work for him, he built to the south of *Nalendra a monastery called the Amṛtākara²⁹. At last he attained the vidyādhara state in mortal body.

Now about Kṣatriya Rāhulabhādra.

He studied in a centre of learning and received the degree of paṇḍita*. But he was not very sharp in intellect. The ācārya [Buddhajñānapāda] conferred abhiṣeka on him and blessed him. For a long time he practised the Guhya-samāja on the bank of a river near the *Sindhu in the west, attained the vision of Pañcagotra Tathāgata³⁰ and became a direct siddha of Guhyapati. He went to the Draviḍa country, instead of³¹ working for the welfare of the living beings only in Jambudvīpa. There he delivered many sermons on the Guhyatantra. He obtained wealth from the Nāgas and from this he used to pay everyday a golden dināra* as the daily wage to each of the five hundred workers employed in the construction of a temple.

[Fol 110A] [Thus] he built a big temple of Guhya-samāja. He attained the vidyādhara state in the mortal body and entered the sea to subdue the Nāgas. He still lives there.

Ācārya Buddhaguhyā and Buddhaśānti were disciples of ācārya Buddhajñānapāda during the first part of his life. They listened to many guhya-mantra-s in general from the ācārya himself and from many other Vajradharas. They became special adepts in the three Tantra-s of kriyā, caryā and yoga and attained siddhi in the yoga-tantra.

Now about Buddhaguhyā.

He propitiated ārya Mañjuśrī somewhere in Vārāṇasī. As

28. S-ed snod-nas (pitcher). P-ed gnod-gnas (malignant). S tr 'attained control over all the treasures of the yakṣa-s with excellent wealth'.

29. bdud-rtsi'i-'byun-gnas, lit. 'the source of nectar'.

30. de-bshin-gśegs-pa-rigs-līa. V n : 'Vairocana, Akṣobhya, Amitābha, Ratnākara, Amoghasiddhi'.

31. cher-ma-mdsad, lit. 'not working extensively'. S tr 'He extensively worked for the welfare of the living beings in Jambudvīpa...'

a result, the picture of the deity smiled. The article for the siddhi—namely ghee from red and yellow cows—started boiling. The withered flowers blossomed again. So he knew these as marks of approaching siddhi. But he remained hesitant for a while, thinking whether first to swallow the ghee or offer the flowers. At that moment, a yakṣiṇī causing obstruction slapped on the face of the ācārya, which made him unconscious for a little while. On regaining consciousness, (he saw) the picture of the deity covered with dust, the flowers withered and the ghee spilt on the ground. He wiped off the dust, put the flowers on the head [of the image] and swallowed the ghee that remained. This made his body free from all diseases, light and strong. Also his intellect became sharp and he was endowed with abhiññāna.

Without the aid of these articles and the picture of the deity, by meditation alone Buddhaśānti [Fol 110B] attained the same qualities as Buddhaguhyā.

Then the two together went to the *Potala hill. At the foot of the hill, āryā Tārā sat preaching the Doctrine to the Nāgas. But they saw only an old woman tending a big herd of cows. When they reached the middle of the hill, the goddess Bhṛkuṭī was preaching the Doctrine to the group of Asuras and Yakṣas. But they saw a girl tending a big herd of goats and sheep. When they reached the top of the hill, there was nothing but a stone image of ārya Avalokiteśvara. Thus it is said.

But Buddhaśānti thought, 'Why should this place be full of such trivial objects? So all these are due to the defects of my vision. They must be Tārā and others.' With this deep conviction, he earnestly prayed to them. Thus he acquired as the general quality the miraculous power of transforming anything at will and also the extraordinary quality of boundless abhiññāna and with this he learnt all the śāstra-s that he never studied before. He realised the nature of everything as but void (literally, like the ākāśa).

But Buddhaguhya prayed with no such conviction and he attained only the miraculous power of moving without his feet touching the earth. Then the old woman instructed him, 'Go to the Ti-se [Kailāsa] of the Himālayas and meditate there.'

On their way back³² (from Potala), he asked Buddhaśānti, 'What sort of siddhi did you attain?' He (Buddhaśānti) told him all that had happened. He felt somewhat jealous to know that his companion had attained greater siddhi. Immediately he lost even the siddhi of moving without touching the earth. It is said that after expiating for it for a long time, he regained the siddhi. Then he preached the Doctrine for a few years at *Vārāṇasī [Fol 111A] and, being instructed by ārya Mañjuśrī as before, he went to the mount Ti-se,³³ meditated there and had the repeated vision of Vajradhātu-mahā-maṇḍala.³⁴ He could even speak with ārya Mañjuśrī personally as it were.

He employed all the sub-human beings to his service and acquired the power of *karma-sambhāra*³⁵ and the sādhāraṇa-siddhi-s.

At that time, the Tibetan king Khri-sroñ-lde-btsan sent *Mañjuśrī of dBus³⁶ and others to invite him (Buddhaguhya). But he did not go there, because the permission for this was refused by (the god) Mañjuśrī.³⁷ So he preached to them (i.e. Tibetans) the three *Kri-yoga-s (kriyā-yoga-s).

He composed the Vajra-dhātu-yogāvatāra,³⁸ *Vairocana-bhisambodhi-tantra-ṭīkā*³⁹ and the *Dhyānottara-pāṭala-ṭīkā*⁴⁰.

32. tshur-'oñs-pa-na, lit. 'on the way back'. S tr 'reaching there'.

33. one of Buddhaguhya's work (rG lxviii.238) is said to have been composed in the Himālaya.

34. rdo-rje-dbyiñs (vajradhātu—see Tg rG lvii.1 & li.2). S Dharmadhātu.

35. las-tshogs. V & S kriyā-gaṇa.

36. dBus, i.e. central Tibet.

37. Tg contains Bhoṭa-svāmi-dāsa-ṭekha (mDo xciv.39), a letter sent by Buddhaguhya to Khri-sroñ-lde-btsan, the king of Tibet and his subjects, the Tibetan devotees.

38. No work exactly with this title is traced in Tg—see Supplementary Note 60.

39. Tg rC lxiv.1 and its auto-commentary rG lxiv.2.

40. rG lxi.1.

There are many brief commentaries on his writings. Though he did not attain the parama-siddhi, his body became invisible.

Though it is said that Buddhaśānti also lived in Ti-se, it is clear that he went to *Urgyana.

Evidently, ācārya *Kamalaśīla⁴¹ also lived during the period of this king. Therefore, I do not consider him as prior or posterior to this king.

The thirtieth chapter containing the account of the period of king Śrī Dharmapāla.

41. See Supplementary Note 62.

CHAPTER 31

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF KING MASURAKṢITA, KING VANAPĀLA AND THE GREAT KING
MAHĪPĀLA

*Masurakṣita [? Vasurakṣī],¹ a son-in-law of king *Dharmapāla, then ruled for about eight years. After him *Vanapāla, a son of king *Dharmapāla, ruled for about ten years. To their period belonged ācārya Dharmottara² the logician, *Dharmamitra, *Vimalamitra,³ *Dharmākara⁴ and others.

These two kings extensively worshipped the Doctrine. [Fol 111B] But since they 'left no mark of their hands' (i.e. did not construct any new monastery etc), they are not counted among the Seven *Pālas.

After them, *Mahīpāla, the son of king *Vanapāla, ruled the kingdom for fiftytwo years. Roughly speaking, the time of the death of this king was the same as that of the Tibetan king Khri-ral (Ral-pa-can).⁵

During the reign of this king lived ācārya Ānandagarbha,⁶ the Mādhyamika-prāsaṅgika⁷ Aśvagoṣa,⁸ who wrote Samvṛti and Paramārtha Bodhicittabhāvanā-krama,⁹ ācārya Parahita,¹⁰

1. Here the text has Masurakṣita, though in the Table of Contents the name occurs as Vasurakṣī. V Masurakṣita.

2. chos-mchog. See Supplementary Note 63.

3. See Supplementary Note 64.

4. See Supplementary Note 65.

5. A.D. 806-841. See A. Chattopadhyaya AT 250ff.

6. kun-dga'-sñi'u-po. See Supplementary Note 66.

7. dbu-ma-thal-'gyur-ba. S 'follower of the Mādhyamika'.

8. rta-dbyaṅs.

9. In Tg are attributed to Aśvagoṣa (who belonged to the period of king Mahīpāla of Bengal: Lalou 187) Paramārtha-bodhicittabhāvanākrama-varṇa-saṃgraha (mDo xxx.5 & xxxiii.54) and Samvṛti-bodhicittabhāvanopadeśu-varṇa-saṃgraha (mDo xxx.4 & xxxiii.55).

10. gshan-la-phau-pa. See supplementary Note 67.

ācārya Candrapadma¹¹ and others. It is further clear that ācārya Jñānadatta¹² and Jñānakīrti¹³ and others also belonged to this period. Also lived in Kashmir during this period *Jinamitra,¹⁴ the expert in the Vinaya, *Sarvajñadeva,¹⁵ *Dānaśīla¹⁶ and others. It is clear that these three went also to Tibet.¹⁷ Siddha *Tillipa¹⁸ also belonged to this period. His account is to be found elsewhere.

Now about ācārya Ānandagarbha.

Born in a Vaiśya family in *Magadha, he belonged to the Mahāsāṃghika sect. In philosophy, he was a Vijñāna-madhyamaka.¹⁹ He studied the five branches of knowledge²⁰ in *Vikramaśīla.

He came to know that in *Bhaṅgala the disciples of siddharāja Prakāśacandra were preaching all the Yoga-tantras and so he went there. He met many ācārya-s like Subhūtipālita²¹ and others and became a scholar in all the Yoga-tantras. Then he remained firm in the dvādaśa-dhūta-guṇa,²² meditated in a forest and had the vision of Vajradhātu-mahā-maṇḍala.²³ He also received instructions to compose śāstra-s and could speak to 11. zla-ba-padma.

12. ye-śes-byin. In Tg is attributed to him Ārya-caturdharmaka-vyākhyāna-ṭīkā (mDo xxxiv.11).

13. ye-śes-grags-pa. In Tg are attributed to him Tattvāvatārākhyā-sakala-sugata-vacasā-tūtpārya-vyākhyā-prakarāṇa (rG lxxii.5) and Pāramitā-yāna-bhāvanākrama-upadeśa (mDo xxx.15 & xxxiii.79).

14. See Supplementary Note 68.

15. See Supplementary Note 69.

16. See Note 10 of Ch 28.

17. Jinamitra and Dānaśīla were among the compilers of Mahāvvyutpatti (mDo cxxiii.44). For Sarvajñadeva, see Supplementary Note 69.

18. Mentioned variously as Tailika-pāda, Tilo-pā, Telo-pā, Taili-pāda, snum-pā, dhe-li-pā. See Supplementary Note 70.

19. rnam-rig-dbu-ma-pa. See Supplementary Note 12.

20. pañcu-vidyā-sthānāni, viz. śabda-vidyā, hetu-vidyā, adhyātma-vidyā, cikitsā-vidyā and śīlpaśhāna-vidyā. See Roerich SW 506n.

21. rah-'hyor-bskyahs. In Tg is attributed Homa-vidhi (rG lvii.10) to him.

22. sbyahs-pa'i-yon-tan-bcu-gñis—see D 939 on the dhūta-guṇa-s. S tr 'he practised the two highly renowned virtues'.

23. S Mahādharma-dhātu-maṇḍala.

the tutelary deity personally as it were.

[Fol 112A] After he became an adept in magic spells, he easily acquired the power of all karma-sambhāra-s. When he was about to attain siddhi, his fame reached ācārya *Prajñāpālita,²⁴ who came from the madhya-deśa to listen to the Doctrine from him. He then conferred abhiṣeka on him (Prajñāpālita) and explained to him the Tattva-saṃgraha. For this ācārya, he (Ānandagarbha) composed the Vajrodaya.²⁵

When he (Prajñāpālita) expounded this in the madhya-deśa, the king *Mahīpāla asked him, 'From whom did you receive this text?'

'Do you have no knowledge even of one who lives in your own kingdom? I have received this from ācārya Ānandagarbha, who resides in *Bhaṃgala.'

Full of reverence, the king invited him to the monastery of *Otsayana-cūḍāmaṇi near Jvālā-guhā²⁶ in the south of *Magadha. The number of the listeners to the Guhya-samāja became vast. He composed many śāstra-s, like the *Tattva-āloka-karī*²⁷ the great commentary on the Tattva-saṃgraha.²⁸

King *Virācārya of *Oḍiviśa, who was like a real brother to²⁹ king *Mahīpāla, invited him to a vihāra which was situated at the place where previously lived King *Muñja. He first composed the great commentary on the Śrī-paramādi(-vivarāṇa).³⁰ He [Ānandagarbha] also composed³¹ a commentary on the Guhya-samāja and on many other Tantras. According to some of the

24. See Supplementary Note 71.

25. See Supplementary Note 66.

26. *bar-ba'i-phug.

27. In Tg is attributed to ācārya Ānandagarbha Sarva-tathāgata-tattva-saṃgraha-mahāyāna-abhisamaya-nāma-tantra-vyākhyā-Tattvāloka-karī-nāma (rG lii-liii).

28. Sarva-tathāgata-tattvasaṃgraha-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra—Sendai Cat No 479. Not to be confused with Śāntarakṣita's Tattva-saṃgraha (mDo cxiii.1), nor with another work having the title Tattva-saṃgraha and attributed to Ghaṅṭā-vajra (rG lxxxiv.7).

29. pha-spin-du-'gro-ba, pha-spin, lit. 'brothers and sisters of the same father' and du-'gro-ba, lit. 'one who moves', S tr 'who moved about with Mahīpāla as a father moves with the son'.

30. See Supplementary Note 66.

31. ib.

Tibetans, he composed commentaries on one hundred and eight Yoga-tantras. But it is doubtful if there existed at that time even twenty Yoga-tantras in India.³² Further, as correctly said by the scholars, there is no basis to say that he composed two commentaries on each of the Yoga-tantras, one big and the other small. Hence it is clear that it is wrong to consider the number to be even a hundred.

[Fol 112B] During this period lived an ācārya called *Bhago,³³ who attained siddhi by the Vajrāmṛta-tantra.

Previously in Kashmir a paṇḍita* called Gambhīravajra³⁴ propitiated Vajrasūrya by the Śrī-sarva-buddha-samayoga-tantra³⁵ in the crematorium of Śītavana. He had at last the vision of Vajra-amṛta-mahā-maṇḍala and attained the sādhāraṇa-siddhi under its blessings.

He prayed, 'Please grant me the parama[-siddhi]'.

'Go to the *Urgyana country and there in a place called Dhūmasthira ask for it from a woman who has the complexion of an utpala and who bears an emerald-like mark on the forehead.'

This being done, he received it [the siddhi]. This ḍākinī conferred on him the abhiṣeka of Catuḥ(-vajra)-amṛta-maṇḍala. She herself explained to him the Tantras and gave him the treatises on these. Among these, he meditated on *Heruka and attained mahā-mudrā-siddhi. After this, he resided in *Mālava. He came across eight beggars and, finding them fit, conferred abhiṣeka on them and led them to meditation. The ācārya himself attained siddhi of eight vetāla-s in the crematorium and gave a vetāla to each of them. All of them also attained mahā-siddhi. He also made a gift of his sādhāraṇa

32. S tr 'But this is improbable, inasmuch as up to that period only twenty Yoga-tantras had originated in the ārya-deśa.'

33. In Tg is attributed to siddha-mahācārya Bhago Śrī-vajrāṇṛta mahātantarājasya-tīkū (rG xxiv.3).

34. zab-pa'i-rdo-rje. In Tg is attributed to mahāmudrā-siddhācārya Gambhīravajra of Urgyana a commentary on the Mahāmudrā-tīlaka called Śrī-guhyārtha-prakāśa-mahādbhūta-nāma (rG xx.2).

35. dpal-saṅs-rgyas-thams-cad-mūṅam-par-sbyor-ba'i-rgyud.

siddhi to others. Though there were many who attained siddhi for themselves, it is said that only the greatest among the great siddha-s could make a gift of their siddhi to others.

Further, this ācārya had once four disciples. He led each of them to meditation on the Catuḥ-amṛta-maṇḍala. [Fol 113A] He also preached sampannakrama to each of them and thus they attained Vajrakāya and became invisible. Later on ācārya Amṛtaguhya³⁶ became his disciple. He conferred abhiṣeka on him and preached to him the Tantras. After this he went to the realm of the gods to work for the welfare of the living beings.

Ācārya Amṛtaguhya also attained siddhi and he was a mahā-yogī. He attained the siddhi of the aṣṭa-kośa-kalasa and satisfied all the poor people. He received wealth from the god of the sky and maintained without interruption eight big centres for the Doctrine.

There is no definite account of the king to whose period they belonged. But by collating the different reports, it becomes clear that they lived after king *Devapāla.

Ācārya *Bhago was his (Amṛtaguhya's) disciple. He also attained vetāla-siddhi. With its aid he succeeded in many auspicious kośa-kalasa-sādhana. He satisfied everybody all around and built a big temple of Pañcagotratahāgata near the city of *Prayāga and also a big temple of Vajrāmṛta in *Karnāṭa in the south. He preached the Tantras to *paṇḍita Vimalabhadra³⁷ and many others.

It is said that under the auspices of these ācārya-s, this Tantra was widely spread also in *Magadha.

The thirtyfirst chapter containing the account of the period of king Masurakṣita [? Vasurakṣi] king Vanapāla and the great king Mahipāla.

36. bdud-rtsi-gsañ-ba.

37. dri-med-bzañ-po. In Tg are attributed to him Śrī-vajrāmṛta-pāñjikā (rG xxiv.1) and Vajrāmṛta-tantra-ṭikā (rG xxiv.2).

CHAPTER 32

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF THE
KINGS MAHĀPĀLA AND ŚĀMUPĀLA

His (Mahāpāla's) son king *Mahāpāla ruled for fortyone years. He mainly worshipped the Śrāvaka saṃgha in the *Odantapurī vihāra.

[Fol 113B] He maintained there five hundred bhikṣu-s and fifty preachers of the Doctrine. As an annexe to this (vihāra), he built a vihāra called *Uruvāsa. Here also he provided five hundred Śrāvaka-senḍhavas with livelihood. Though allowing *Vikramaśīla to retain its previous position, he made this the centre of great veneration. He established some centres for the Doctrine also in Śrī *Nalendra and many centres for the Doctrine also in *Somapurī, *Nalendra¹ and *Trikaṭuka monasteries.

*Piṭo *ācārya*² brought the Kālacakra Tantra during the latter half of the life of *Mahāpāla, but he spread it during the period of this king (Mahāpāla).

The logician Alamkāra-upādhyāya alias Prajñākaragupta³ also lived during this period.

1. Though S-ed also contains this repetition of Nālandā, S omits it in his tr.
2. In the account of the spread of Kālacakra given in BA ii.753ff, instead of Piṭo-ācārya, we have the name of the Great Piṇḍo-pā, who first obtained the Kālacakra from Sambhala (BA ii.761). D 782, on the authority of Tāranātha's bka'-babs-bdun-ldan-gyi-rnam-thar, mentions Pi-rto-pā as an Indian Buddhist who is said to have visited Sambhala. BA i.371 mentions Bito-pāda, a disciple of Buddhaśrī-jñāna and BA i.262 mentions Piṭo-pā as one of the five special (Indian) disciples of Atīśa.
3. See note 65 of Ch 26.

Also lived (during this period) *Yoga-pā,⁴ Padmāñkuśa,⁵ *Jetāri⁶ the senior, Kṛṣṇasamaya-vajra,⁷ ācārya *Thagana⁸ and others.

The account of *Piṭṭha ācārya is to be clearly found elsewhere. It is clear that his disciple Kālacakrapāda⁹ lived sometime during the period of this king.

After the death of this king, his son-in-law *Śāmupāla ruled for twelve years.

Now about ācārya *Jetāri among them.

In *Varendra in the east there previously lived a feudatory chief called *Sanātana during the reign of king *Vanapāla. His chief queen was very beautiful and intelligent. He also loved her dearly. Even at the time of her bath, he used to place her on a golden tortoise and allowed none to see her.

This king received the abhiṣeka of Guhyasamāja from the brāhmaṇa ācārya Garbhapāda¹⁰ and offered him as fee this queen, horses, gold, elephants, etc.

4. S takes it as an adjective of Padmāñkuśa and tr: 'Padmāñkuśa, well-versed in the Yoga'. But in the account of the 84 siddha-s, Yogi-pā (Ayogi-pā) is mentioned as the 53rd one: he was a ḍoma by caste, belonged to Udantapurī (? Odantapurī) and a disciple of Śabara-pā. —see R. Sankrityayana Purātattva-nibandhāvalī 152. In Tg is possibly attributed to him Vāyusthāna-roga-parikṣā-nāma (rG xlvi. 81).
5. In Tg the Tibetan form of his name is given as padma-lcags-kyu and three Tāntrika works are attributed to him (rG lxix.169-71).
6. See Supplementary Note 72.
7. nag-po-dam-tshig-rdo-rje. S Kālasamayavajra. In Tg one Tāntrika work is attributed to Samaya-vajra or Kṛṣṇa-samaya (rG xxxiv.3) and four to Kṛṣṇavajra (rG xxii.34; xxiii.18; xlvii.44 & lxxxvi.71).
8. In the account of the 84 siddha-s, Thagana-pā is mentioned as the 19th: he was a śūdra by caste, belonged to eastern India and was a preceptor of Śānti-pā. BA ii.847 mentions a brāhmaṇa Thagana. Tg contains one work (rG xxi.30) by mahā-brāhmaṇa Thakkana or Thagana of Urgyana and three works (rG xxxv.3; xxxiv.16 & xlvi.16) are attributed to Thagana, the last of these being Dohakoṣa-tattva-gītikā.
9. See Supplementary Note 73.
10. sññ-po'i-shabs. In Tg are attributed to him Vajrayāna-mūlāpatti-ṭīkā (xlvi.144) and Kalpoka-mūrici-sādhana (rG lxxi.228).

[Fol 114A] Gambhīrapāda had a son with auspicious marks born of her. At the age of seven he was sent to an elementary school of the brāhmaṇa-s. The other brāhmaṇa boys beat him saying, 'You are born in a low family.' When he asked the reason for this, they said, 'Being a Buddhist Tāntrika your father gave the Śūdra queen a higher status and, while worshipping, he does not distinguish between the low and high castes and allows these to mix.'

Thus they persecuted him so much that he returned home weeping. On being enquired by the father, he said all that had happened.

'So they are to be subdued.' Saying this he conferred the abhiṣeka of Mañjughoṣa on him and led him to meditation with proper instructions.

After the completion of about a year, he sank deep into the *śuddha-pratibhāsa-samādhi*¹¹ and had the signs of the approaching siddhi. Both inside and outside the cottage, the beam of golden yellow light was spread everywhere. When his mother brought food for him, she saw this and thinking that the cottage had caught fire started crying. This interrupted his meditation and the rays vanished.

His father said : 'He would have himself become equal to Mañjughoṣa only if he could continue to remain in this śuddha-pratibhāsa [-samādhi] for seven days. But some obstruction is caused to this. Anyhow, he will have great intelligence and will have free access to all the spheres of learning.'

And it happened like that. He learnt without studying the scripts, all the fine arts, prosody, śabda-vidyā etc. He became the lord of the great scholars by learning many branches of knowledge only with a single reading and by studying only once or twice even the subjects that were most difficult.

11. V n 'tīn-ñe-'dsin-gyi-gsal-snañ. S mentions that here this should be taken to mean snañ-ba-gsal-ba-nas-bya-ba'i-tīn-ñe-'dsin, i.e. śuddha-pratibhāsa-samādhi mentioned in the Mahāvvyutpatti. In Tantras, this radiation is one of the highest states of samādhi, which indicates that the objective is approaching.'

[Fol 114B] He remained an upāsaka throughout his life. With his father he studied whatever he (the father) knew—the Guhyasamāja, Cakrasamvara, Hevajra, etc. He also took resort to many other teachers. But he had the special privilege of listening to all the doctrines from Mañjuḥoṣa himself.

From the time of the death of his father brāhmaṇa Garbhapāda to the period of king Mahāpāla, he did not receive the patra.¹² So he went round many places to worship at various temples and to compete with the paṇḍita*-s in learning. Once he went to *Khasarpaṇi. In front of the gate he saw the image of the fierce Acala and taking it for that of a rākṣasa, he had disrespect for it. In a dream he saw many Acalas coming out of the heart of the Great Sage and suppressing all the wicked people. So he wanted to atone for the sin of showing disrespect to the contrivance of the Buddha himself and, as a result, had a vision of Tārā.

She said, 'Compose many treatises on Mahāyāna. That will remove your sin.'

Later on, during the period of king *Mahāpāla a good residence called Vṛkṣapurī and also the patra conferring on him the status of a paṇḍita* of *Vikramaśīla were offered to him. He delivered many sermons on the Doctrine and his fame spread more and more. He composed¹³ short commentaries on the Śikṣā-samuccaya, Caryāvatāra, Ākāśagarbha-sūtra etc. In general, he composed about one hundred śāstra-s on many sūtra-s and tantra-s.

Now about Kṛṣṇasamaya-vajra.

He belonged to the lineage of ācārya Buddhajñānapāda. [Fol 115A] In a solitary place of *Rā-ra,¹⁴ he hung up a picture of Hevajra and sat in deep meditation. After many years, when he himself intensely concentrated on the Prati-

12. S-ed satra, P-ed patra—the letter conferring the title of paṇḍita. V n 'S tr diploma and assumes that this is a corruption of the word patra.'

13. See Supplementary Note 72.

14. S Chagala, V 'Rāda (? Chagala).' The word ra in Tibetan means goat.

bhāsa-samādhi of the Maṇḍala, his consort¹⁵ saw a certain object lying reclined¹⁶ in front of the picture. When she told this to the ācārya, his meditation was interrupted. He touched the object lying reclined and found it to be a corpse. He realised that it was an article needed for the siddhi and gobbled it up without hesitation. After spending seven days in the sukha-śūnyatā-samādhi,¹⁷ when he woke up he had the direct vision of the Hevajra-maṇḍala and attained unlimited power.

The thirtysecond chapter containing the account of the period of kings Mahāpāla and Śāmupāla.

15. S 'mother of knowledge'. This is because he reads the word as rig-ma ('mother of Veda, Gāyatrī', etc), which should better be read here as rīgs-ma (consort). V consort.

16. S unclear. But the text has yor-yor-ba (reclined).

17. bde-stoñ, an abbreviation of bde-ba-dai-stoñ-pa-ñid—see D 669.

CHAPTER 33

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF KING CANAKA

After this, *Śreṣṭhapāla, the eldest son of king *Mahāpāla, ascended the throne and died after three years. As he left 'no mark of his hands' [i.e. built no monastery etc] he is not counted among the Seven (Pālas).

On a rough calculation, the second half of the life of king *Mahāpāla synchronised with the 'Subsequent Propagation of the Doctrine in Tibet'.¹ To this period also belonged brāhmaṇa Jñānapāda.² It is said to have been the period also of the latter half of the life of Kṛṣṇācārya the junior.³

As the younger son (of Mahāpāla) had not yet attained seventeen⁴ years, his maternal uncle *Canaka ruled during the intervening period.

During his (Canaka's) period, ācārya *Śānti-pā⁵ and others were invited. From this period on, the designation Six Door-keeper Scholars⁶ was introduced.

He (Canaka) ruled for twenty-nine⁷ years and, in a war, won victory over the *Turuṣka king.

[Fol 115B] The *Bhaṃgalas once revolted and came to wage war in *Magadha. The Bali-ācārya of *Vikramaśīla prepared *mahā-bali*⁸ for Acala. When he put it into the *Gaṅgā, many boats carrying the *Turuṣkas from *Bhaṃgala were drowned.

1. i.e. the revival of Buddhism in Tibet after the persecution by gLan-dar-ma ; the persecution took place in A.D. 901 (or A.D. 841). See A. Chattopadhyaya AT 282.
2. ye-śes-shabs.
3. nag-po-spyod-pa-chuñ-ba. BA i. 372 mentions Balin-ācārya, a contemporary of Nāro-pā and also known as Kṛṣṇapāda, the Junior.
4. S-ed bdun (seven), P-ed bcu-bdun (seventeen). V & S seven.
5. See Supplementary Note 74.
6. i.e. of the Vikramaśīla-vihāra.
7. ñi-śu-rtso-dgu (29). S twentyeight. V twenty-nine,
8. gtor-chen—D 527.

The king had the honour of winning the war. He subdued them (i.e. the Turuṣkas from Bhaṃgala) and restored peace in the kingdom.

After this, his nephew *Bheyapāla, the younger son of king *Mahāpāla,⁹ ascended the throne. He (Canaka) lived in *Bhāṭi¹⁰ a small island near the confluence of the *Gaṅgā and the sea in the east of *Bhaṃgala and died there after five years.

During this period, among the Six Door-keeper Scholars the eastern door-keeper was ācārya Ratnākaraśānti-pā.¹¹ His account is to be found elsewhere.¹²

Now about the southern¹³ door-keeper Prajñākaramati.¹⁴ He was a scholar in all the branches of learning and had the direct vision of Mañjuśrī. At the time of having debates with the tīrthika-s, the moment he worshipped Mañjuśrī and prayed to his picture, the appropriate answers to all the arguments offered by the tīrthika-s used to occur to him. It is said

9. S-ed Mahāpāla, P-ed Mahīpāla, The former reading followed.

10. V Bhāṭi.

11. See Supplementary Note 74.

12. V n 'According to the account of the 84 siddha-s Śānti was a brāhmaṇa by caste. During the time of Dharmapāla, he was a teacher in Vikramaśīla (? Vikramaśīla) and from there was invited to Ceylon by king Ghavin. After three years, on his way back to Vikramaśīla he met Koṭali and gave him upadeśa. After twelve years, when Koṭali attained siddhi, he (Koṭali) came to pay his respects to Śānti. He found that his teaching could lead to nowhere and hence he took to sādhana. In twelve years he attained mahā-mudrā, lived for 700 years (? ! !) and went to heaven.'

13. lho-sgo (southern gate). But BA i.206—'the six Gate-keeper Paṇḍitas of Vikramaśīla: at the eastern (gate) Śānti-pā, at the southern gate Vāgīśvarakīrti, at the western gate Prajñākaramati, at the northern gate mahā-panḍita Nāro-pā, in the centre Ratnavajra and Jñānaśrī', cf also the colophon of Prajñākaramati's Abhisamayālaṃkāravṛtti-piṇḍārtha (mDo vii.4), where he is mentioned as the western door-keeper (nub-kyi-sgo i.e. apara-dvāra-kapūṭaka) of Vikramaśīla. But see Tar Fol 117B.

14. śes-rab-'byuh-gnas-blo-gros. In Tg are attributed to him Abhisamayālaṃkāra-vṛtti-piṇḍārtha (mDo vii.4), Bodhicaryāvatāra-pañjikā (mDo xxvi.2) and Śiṣyalekha-vṛtti (mDo xciv.37).

that after this, when the debate resumed, his victory was a certainty.

Misled by the name Prajñākara, I have found many to commit the mistake of confusing Prajñākaramati with Prajñākaragupta.¹⁵ But it is well-known among the scholars that he (Prajñākaramati) was in rank a bhikṣu while Prajñākaragupta was only an upāsaka.

Now about the western¹⁶ door-keeper scholar ācārya Vāgīśvarakīrti.¹⁷ Born in *Vārāṇasī, he was by caste a Kṣatriya and was ordained in the sect of the Mahāsāṃghika. [Fol 116A] He received the name *Śīlakīrti from the upādhyāya. When he became a profound paṇḍita* in grammar, logic and in many other śāstra-s, he received the Cakrasamvara from one *Hāsavajra,¹⁸ a follower of Jayabhadra¹⁹ of *Koṅkana. While meditating somewhere in *Magadha, he received in dream his (Cakrasamvara's) vision. He examined the prospect of attaining siddhi in Vāgīśvara-sādhana and found the answer in the affirmative.

He meditated on the bank of the *Gaṅgā and dropped a red *Karavīra flower into the *Gaṅgā, which emanated sound and illumination. In a moment it was carried away many yojana-s afar and floated back again. He swallowed it up with the water and became a great siddha of Vāgīśvara. He came to be called Vāgīśvarakīrti as a result of acquiring the intelligence by which he could completely master everyday the words and imports of a śāstra containing a thousand śloka-s. He became a vast scholar of the sūtra-s, tantra-s and all the other branches of knowledge and he found no difficulty in the three, namely exposition, disputation and composition. He 15. śes-rab-'byuñ-gnas-sbas-pa. See Note 65 of Ch 26.

16. nub-sgo (western door). But see note 13 of this chapter

17. ñag-gi-dbañ-phyug-grags-pa. See Supplementary Note 75.

18. BA i.103 refers to the commentary on the Guhya-samāja by Vajrahāsa and to 'the chapter on the system of Vajra-hāsa'. Tg contains a work (rG lxxv.12) attributed to Hāsavajra.

19. rgyal-ba-bzañ-po. S & V Jinabhadra. Tg contains a number of works on Cakra-samvara by Jayabhadra of Ceylon—see note 139 of Introduction. & Fol 126B.

frequently received the vision of āryā Tārā in particular, who solved all his problems. Thus he acquired the proficiency of defeating many tīrthika rivals while going about many places and his fame grew more and more.

The king invited him to *Nalendra and appointed him as the western gate-keeper of *Vikramaśīla.²⁰ He obtained wealth from Gaṇapati and always worshipped at many temples and saṃgha-s. He built many centres for the Doctrine. These included the eight centres for Prajñāpāramitā, four for the teaching of the Guhyasamāja [Fol 116B] and one seat [?] each for the teaching of Hevajra, Cakrasamvara and *Māyā [?]²¹ and also one particularly for the Madhyamaka-pramāṇa.

He made various preparations of elixir²² and gave these to others. By these one could reach the age of one hundred and fifty and the old man became young. In this way he caused welfare to about five hundred ordained monks and pious householders. He used to preach constantly the Vidyā-sambhāra, Prajñāpāramitā, Sūtrālaṃkāra, Guhyasamāja, Hevajra, Yamāri, Laṅkāvatāra, etc, and many other sūtra-s. He also delivered many sermons on the Doctrine.

As he had a sharp intellect for silencing the tīrthika-s, he defeated about three hundred rivals who came from the west. He could make the water in a vessel boil by concentrating for a moment on it. When he consecrated (literally infused life : prāṇapratīṣṭhā) an image, it used to move.

20. S tr 'The king invited him to become the western gate-keeper of Nalendra and Vikramaśīla.' See note 13 of this chapter.

21. S proposes to read the text somewhat differently: instead of bde-dgyes-gdan-gshi as bde-dgyes-gdan-bshi, S tr 'Receiving treasure from Gaṇapati, he regularly brought offerings to many temples and saṃgha-s, established eight teaching centres of the Prajñāpāramitā, four centres for the teaching of the Guhyasamāja, one centre each for the teaching of the Tantras, namely Sambara, Hevajra and Catuḥ-pīṭhī'. V tr is similar and he adds in note that there are works in Kg & Tg on Catuḥ-pīṭhī Tantra. In P-ed, however, the word māyā occurs in transliteration, instead of which S-ed has gsum (three).

22. V n 'bcuḍ-len'; S mentions that in Tg there is a work on Mṛtyu-vañcana-upadeśa ascribed to Vāgīśvara'. cf Tg rG xxvi.68; lxxxii.21 & lxxxii.35.

Once he drew up a maṇḍala for the sake of the king. A devastating flood came near the maṇḍala. As he protected it with his concentration, the flood receded from its fringe. He showed many miraculous feats like these on different occasions.

He was once having a discussion on the Doctrine with a bhikṣu called *Avadhūti-pā. When he (Avadhūti) quoted Vasubandhu, he (Vāgīśvara) made sarcastic remarks on the use of corrupt (apabhraṃśa) words by Vasubandhu. In the same night his tongue swelled and he became incapable of preaching the Doctrine. He suffered from this for several months and on praying to Tārā was told : 'This is the result of your disparaging remarks on ācārya Vasubandhu. Therefore, compose stuti-s for this ācārya.' Accordingly, as soon as he composed the stuti, he was cured of the disease.

[Fol 117A] He then worked in *Vikramaśīla for the welfare of all living beings for many years. In the latter part of his life, he went to Nepal. He remained mostly in meditation there, though he preached a little of the Tantra-yāna. But he preached hardly any other aspect of the Doctrine. As he had many consorts most of the people thought that he was incapable of maintaining the conduct of a monk.

The king once built a temple of Cakrasamvara in *Śāntapurī. After its consecration, he got many Tāntrikas to assemble outside the temple for holding a big gaṇa-cakra. He sent a messenger to the ācārya, inviting him to act as the chief (of the gaṇa-cakra). There was a voluptuous dancing girl at the entrance of the cottage of the ācārya. There was also a black and violent woman. When (the messenger) asked, 'Where is the ācārya?', they said 'He is inside the cottage.' Then he entered the cottage and said, 'The king requests you to come and act as the chief of the gaṇa-cakra.'

'Go back quickly. I shall soon be there.' As he (the messenger) was returning quickly, the ācārya along with his two consorts had already reached the cross-road near *Śāntapurī and said, 'We are waiting for you for a long time.'

When the main consecration followed by the big gaṇa-cakra came to its end, there remained within the temple only three, i.e. the ācārya and his two consorts.²³ He entered the temple with more than the share for sixty participants of the gaṇa-cakra. The king thought: 'There are only three within the temple. What then could be the use for so much provisions of the gaṇa-cakra!' So he peeped through the door [Fol 117B] and saw sixtytwo deities of Cakrasamvara-maṇḍala sitting there and enjoying the provisions of the gaṇa-cakra.

In the same place also sat the ācārya who had attained the rainbow body.

In the Tibetan account, Vāgīśvarakīrti is said to have been the southern door-keeper and Prajñākara the western door-keeper. What I have written here is based on a consensus of three Indian sources.²⁴

The northern door-keeper was *Nāro-pā²⁵. His account is to be found elsewhere.²⁶

*Śānti-pā, the omniscient of the Kali era (kali-kāla-sarvajña) listened to the Doctrine from this ācārya.

Along with his disciples, ācārya *Śānti-pā was once engaged

23. S tr 'He remained inside the temple along with the father and mother'. The text has yab-yum which, though literally means 'father & mother', is also used in the Tāntrika context as honorific for the Tāntrika and his consort—see D 1129.

24. See note 13 of this chapter.

25. See Supplementary Note 76.

26. V n 'Nāro-pā was a wood-seller in Pāṭaliputra in eastern India. Having met the siddha Tailo-pā in a crematorium, he served him for 12 years in spite of various quarrels with him and collected alms for him. Finally he brought for him the delicious food of sdo batapa (?) and received from him the initiation in Vajravārāhī. In Kg there are two works of this Tantra, viz. Kriyā-vajravārāhī (vol ga 215-222) and Jñāna-vajravārāhī (vol na 82-95). In six months, Nāro-pā attained siddhi and from his heart came out light, which remained visible for a month. He lived for about 700 years and went to heaven with this body'.

in an act of worship. He sent one of his disciples with offerings, who saw a terrible-looking yogī on the bali altar. He was panic-stricken and just threw the offerings, came back and reported it to the ācārya. The ācārya realised that this must have been *Nāro-pā and so he invited him. He sat at his feet and received many abhiṣekas, sermons and explanations of the sermons etc. He bowed down before him again and again.

Later on, when *Śānti-pā was about to attain siddhi, *Nāro-pā was begging with a skull as his begging bowl. A robber dropped a small knife into the skull. *Nāro-pā cast his magic stare at it and it melted like ghee. He swallowed it and went away.

There was a body of a dead elephant on the cross-road. He performed the rite of entering into it²⁷ and it walked to the crematorium. When *Śānti-pā came across it, *Nāro-pā's voice said, 'Such is the mark of my being a yogī. [Fol 118A] Will not the great scholar also show some such mark ?'

Ācārya *Śānti-pā said, 'What can a person like me perform after all ? However, if permitted by a person like you, I may perform something.'

Some people were approaching the place with pitchers full of water. By his magic spell, the water was transformed into liquid gold. He then distributed it among the monks and brāhmaṇa-s.

For some years *Nāro-pā also acted as the northern door-keeper. After that he went over to caryā.²⁸ He was succeeded by sthavira Bodhibhadra.²⁹

(Now about Bodhibhadra).

Born in a Vaiśya family of *Oḍiviśa, he was a perfect bodhisattva in his conduct (caryā). He was a scholar of the Vidyā-sambhāra, Caryā-sambhāra and specially of the Bodhisattva-bhūmi. He had a vision of ārya Avalokiteśvara and 27. S tr 'He let it enter into a village'. The text has groñ-jug, 'bringing life to a dead body'—see D 250.

28. S 'yoga', because S-ed has rnal-'byor-pa (yoga). P-ed has spyod-pa (caryā).

29. byañ-bzañ. See Supplementary Note 77.

directly listened to the Doctrine from him.

Now about brāhmaṇa Ratnavajra,³⁰ the first great Central Pillar (of Vikramaśīla). A brāhmaṇa of Kashmir once propitiated Maheśvara and it was predicted that all his descendants were going to be famous scholars. This came true. The first twentyfour of his descendants were tīrthika-s. The twentyfifth of them was brāhmaṇa Haribhadra, who, being defeated in a debate by the Buddhists, was converted into an insider. In this debate he staked his own creed. He became a paṇḍita with profound knowledge of the Doctrine. His son was brāhmaṇa Ratnavajra.

[Fol 118B] He (Ratnavajra) was an upāsaka in rank. He studied in Kashmir up to the age of thirty and learnt by heart the sūtra-s, tantra-s and all the branches of knowledge. He next came to Magadha to continue his studies further. He meditated in Vajrāsana and had the vision of Cakrasamvara, Vajravārāhī and many other deities. The king conferred on him the patra of *Vikramaśīla. He expounded there mainly the Tantra-yāna, the Seven Treatises on Prāmāṇa, the Five Works of Maitreya, etc. After working for the welfare of the living beings for many years, he went back to Kashmir. He defeated many tīrthika-s in debate and converted them into the followers of the Law of the Buddha. He established a number of centres for the study of Vidyā-sambhāra, Sūtrālamkāra, Guhyasamāja, etc. During the latter part of his life, he went to *Urgyana in the west.³¹

There lived a brāhmaṇa in Kashmir, who was a scholar of the tīrthika philosophies. He had the vision of īśvara (God). His own deity³² (i.e. īśvara) instructed him : 'Go to *Urgyana and you will have great success.' So he went to *Urgyana and met brāhmaṇa Ratnavajra. They entered into a debate by staking their creeds. Ratnavajra was victorious and converted him into the follower of the Law of the Buddha and 30. rin-chen-rdo-rje. See Supplementary Note 78.

31. V & S omit 'in the west', though the text has nub-phyogs (in the west).

32. S-ed khōn-ra'i-lhas. P-ed khōn-ri'i-lhas. The former followed.

gave him the name *Guhyaprajña. He learnt the Tantra-yāna and eventually attained siddhi. He was the person who went to Tibet and came to be known as the Red *Ācārya.³³

According to the Kashmiris, brāhmaṇa Ratnavajra received the rainbow body in *Urgyana itself. Ratnavajra's son was *Mahājana³⁴ [Fol 119A] and his son was *Sajjana.³⁵ Tibetan religious tradition owes much to them.

Now about *Jñānaśrīmitra,³⁶ the second great Central Pillar [of Vikramaśīla]. He was the author of śāstra Free From The Two Extremities. He was also a very kind teacher of Śrī *Atīśa.³⁷

He (Jñānaśrīmitra) was born in *Gauḍa. He was earlier a *paṇḍita of the Śrāvaka *Sendhavas and a scholar of their Tripiṭaka. Later on, he had reverence for the Mahāyāna and thoroughly studied all the śāstra-s of Nāgārjuna and Asaṅga.³⁸ He also knew many Guhya-tantras and, while listening extensively to the sūtra-s and tantra-s, he always meditated on the Bodhicitta. He had repeated visions of the three, namely bhagavān Śākyarāja, Maitreya-nātha and Avalokiteśvara. He attained the unlimited abhijñāna.

Once, while he was residing in *Vikrama(-śīla), he told a novice monk, 'Start immediately so that you can reach the city of *Gayā by to-morrow noon. A brāhmaṇa has invited there all the monks with the priests in charge of the temple of Vajrāsana to a seasonal feast. The *Gaṇḍola containing the Mahābodhi will be damaged by fire. Take them along to put the fire out.'

He went to *Gayā and, as predicted, met the residents of Vajrāsana. He said, 'My guru has predicted thus. So please 33. ācārya dmar-po. See A. Chattopadhyaya AT 292.

34. See Supplementary Note 79.

35. In Tg is attributed to him Putra-īkha (mDo xciv.32). The colophon of this as well as of mDo xxiv.2 ; xlv.5 & 6 refer to Sajjana as the son of Mahājana and Mahājana as the son of Ratnavajra, their family being that of great Indian scholars.

36. See Supplementary Note 80.

37. See A. Chattopadhyaya AT 68, 93, 139, 295.

38. V omits Asaṅga, though the text has thogs-med (Asaṅga).

return (to Vajrāsana).’ Half of them did not believe him and stayed back.

[Fol 119B]When he reached Vajrāsana with the other half of them, the *Gaṇḍola of Vajrāsana had already caught fire. Both the interior and the exterior were aflame. They extinguished the fire with prayer to the deity and thus the temple was saved from further damage. The ācārya arranged for the restoration of the damaged paintings and the renovation of the wooden structure.

Moreover, in both *Bhaṅgala and *Magadha he renovated numerous older and damaged centres for the Doctrine. He also built many new ones.

These Six Door-keeper Scholars belonged to the first half of king *Bheyapāla’s reign.

Though king *Canaka rendered great services to the Law, he is not counted among the Seven (Pālas) because he did not belong to the line of the *Pālas.

From this period on, the study of logic became wide-spread in Kashmir. The logician Ravigupta³⁹ also belonged to this period.

The thirtythird chapter containing the account of the period of king Canaka.

39. ñi-ma-sbas-pa—cf Stecherbatsky BL i.44.

CHAPTER 34

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF KINGS BHEYAPĀLA
AND NEYAPĀLA

Then king Bheyapāla ruled for about thirtytwo years. He maintained the older tradition, but excepting this did nothing significantly new for the Law. He conferred patra-s on only seventy paṇḍita*-s of *Vikramaśīla. So he is also not counted among the Seven *Pālas.

After the Six Door-keeper Scholars had passed away, during the period of this king, *Dīpaṃkara *Śrījñāna, famed as Jo-bo-rje¹ dPal-ldan *Atīśa (prabhu śrī atīśa) was invited to be the upādhyāya (of Vikramaśīla). He also looked after *Odantapuri. Soon after this, the activity of the powerful *Maitrī-pā² became wide-spread. When *Maitrī-pā returned from the Śrī Parvata, the period of the Six Door-keeper Scholars like *Śānti-pā was already over by a few years.

[Fol 120A] In the confused account of the previous preachers of *Dohā,³ there is no substance. Further, in the corrupt history of *Dohā, *Maitrī-pā is called an incarnation of Kṛṣṇācārya. Depending on this, much confusion is created about Jvālapati and the caryā-dhara Kṛṣṇa.⁴ The firm belief resulting from a bias for such corrupt and confused account that there was somebody called caryā-dhara Kṛṣṇa as distinct from Kṛṣṇācārya is completely baseless. The confusion will be removed by consulting the few brief treatises by ācārya

1. lit. prabhu, the typical Tibetan form of referring to Atīśa.
2. V 'Maitrī-pā (Maitrīnātha)'. cf BA ii. 841f—born in A.D. 1007 or 1010 and passed into nirvāṇa at the age of 78.
3. V n 'S remarks that in Tanjur vol ci, there are several collections of Dohā under the name Dohākoṣa. Besides, there are many Dohās ascribed to well-known celebrities. In vol lu, at the end of the account of the 84 siddha-s, there is a collection of Dohās followed by their explanations.'
4. 'bar-bu'i-gtso-bo-spyod-'chan-nag-po.

Amitavajra.⁵

King *Bheyapāla's son was *Neyapāla. In the authentic biographies, it is stated that he became the king shortly before Jo-bo-rje left for Tibet. There also exists a letter sent (by Atiśa) to him from Nepal.⁶ He ruled for thirtyfive years. Nine years after he became the king, the powerful *Maitrī-pā passed away.

This king worshipped one famous as the Mahā-vajrāsana.⁷ When an ūpāsaka, his name was *Puṇyaśrī. His ordained name was *Puṇyākara Gupta.

To his period belonged *Amoghavajra,⁸ *Vīryabhadra⁹ of the east with abhijñāna, *Devakāracandra,¹⁰ *Prajñārakṣita¹¹ and also most of the direct disciples of *Nāro-pā.

Of the direct disciples of *Nāro-pā, the account of Śrī Śrī *Dombi-pā¹² and of *Kaṇṭa-pā are to be clearly found elsewhere.¹³

5. dpag-med-rdo-rje. Apart from a work on the Cakrasamvara (rG xiii. 53) in Tg is attributed to him a commentary on the Dohakoṣa of Kṛṣṇavajrapāda (rG lxxxv.19).
6. Vimala-ratna-lekha (mDo xxxiii.103=xciv.33). Eng tr A. Chatto-padhyaya AT 520f.
7. rdo-rje-gdan-pa-chen-po.
8. See Supplementary Note 81.
9. See Supplementary Note 82.
10. In Tg three Tāntrika works (rG xliii.93; lxi.3 & lxxxiii.3f) are attributed to Devākaracandra. Lalou 167 equates the name to Śūnyatā-samādhi, to whom are attributed 3 works in Tg (rG xiv.29; 31; lxxvi. 87 [75]).
11. In Tg 7 Tāntrika treatises are attributed to him—rG xiii.12-6; 20; lxxiii.12; lxxxiii.69.
12. The text has Tombhi-pā.
13. S n 'In the account of the 84 siddha-s, where the name of the last is Kha-ndi-pā, one can easily recognise the word khaṇḍa'. V n 'Dombi was engaged in laundry-work in Śālipura-nagara and received ordination from a yogi. The upadeśa-s that he received, in the terminology of his profession, are: with the hot water mudrā wash the impurity of the body, with the water of words the tongue, and by union of father and mother the soul. In 12 years, he attained mahā-mudrā'.

Now about *Kasori-pā. He propitiated Vajrayoginī alone. She appeared through an opening of the cloud and asked, 'What do you desire?'

'I have the desire to attain the same status as that of yourself.'

As he said this, she melted into his heart. [Fol 120B] Immediately he attained many siddhi-s. In the crematoriums even the tigers, jackals, etc worshipped him dancing around. People without fortune could see this from a distance. As they approached near, however, the scene vanished.

Now about *Ri-ri-pā.¹⁴

His textual knowledge was limited. Śrī *Nāro-pā gave him few instructions on the utpanna and *sampanna krama*¹⁵ of Cakrasamvara. He meditated on these, attained siddhi and acquired unfettered proficiency in all subjects. He could summon the rhinoceros and other wild animals of the forest and move about on their back.

At that time came the Gar-log army. On the street somewhere on the west of *Vārāṇasī, he performed a magical rite. When the Gar-log-s reached there, they saw only dead bodies and the ruins full of stones and wood and the soil upturned. So they went back.

Both of them (Kasari-pā and Ri-ri-pā) attained the rainbow body.

Now about *Prajñārakṣita.

He was a great paṇḍita* monk. He listened to many theories on Piṭṭ-tantra-s and Māṭṭ-tantra-s for twelve years from *Nāro-pā and became a special scholar of Maṭṭ-tantra, particularly of Cakrasamvara. He learnt by heart the four systems of exposition (catuḥ-ṣikā-vidhi),¹⁶ and many systems of instruction (upadeśa-vidhi) and many other systems. He meditated for five years in a small holy place near *Odantapurī and had the vision of innumerable tutelary deities like

14. S n 'perhaps a corruption of Tiṅṅi or Tiḍhivi'.

15. V tr 'ways of generation and accomplishment (utsakrama and utpan.sakrama)'.

16. viz. ūha, apoha, rakṣā and āgama.

Mañjuśrī and those of the Cakrasamvara-maṇḍala and Kālacakra etc. It is said that he received as many as seventy abhiṣeka-s of the Cakrasamvara and became extremely powerful. [Fol 121A] When *Vikramaśīla was once attacked by the *Turuṣka army, he made big offerings to Cakrasamvara and the army was struck by terrible thunder four times. This killed their chief and many brave soldiers and thus they were repelled.

Eight tīrthika rivals came to challenge him in debate. When he cast his magic stare from the seat of the debate, six of them turned dumb and two blind. Later on he released them.

After working extensively for the welfare of the living beings mainly according to the Cakrasamvara, he passed away in a forest near *Nalendra, leaving the instruction for the disciples : 'Do not remove my dead body for seven days.' This was accordingly done and in seven days his relics vanished.

*Ri-ri-pā was born in a low Caṇḍāla family. He was highly delighted whenever he saw the great *Nāro-pā. In profound reverence, his body used to become stiff and unconscious. He became a yogī. After acquiring immense wealth (as the preceptor's fee), he received abhiṣeka of Cakrasamvara from *Nāro-pā and meditated with intense concentration.

When he meditated on the utpanna-krama, his vāyu-citta got fixed on the madhyamā. It is said that the bliss of enjoying the Caṇḍālī brought an end to the residue of his previous karma. He soon attained the highest siddhi. Even while moving about as an attendant of *Nāro-pā, he used to listen to the Doctrine. He remained mostly invisible and made himself visible only when necessary.

Ācārya Anupamasāgara¹⁷ also lived during this period.

[Fol 121B] He was a monk paṇḍita* and, though a specialist of the Kālacakra, was vastly learned in all the branches of knowledge. He relieved himself of all distractions and in *Khasarpaṇi intensely propitiated ārya Avalokiteśvara for twelve years. Still he had no sign of success. While asleep, he once received the prediction in dream : 'Go to

17. dpe-med-mtsho.

*Vikramapurī.' Accompanied by his disciple Sādhuputra,¹⁸ he went there. In the city he witnessed a grand dramatic performance that formed part of the seasonal festival.¹⁹ As a result, he attained the samādhi and saw everything as māyā. At midnight his tutelary deity appeared in the form of *Avadhūti-pā and said, 'Oh son, this is the ultimate truth (tathatā).' The moment this was said, he attained the mahā-mudrā-siddhi.

He composed a few treatises for his disciples. It is said that all his disciples attained either the yoga-samādhi with its six components or the (miraculous) power of recollection.

To this period also belonged the logician Yamāri²⁰. He was a great scholar in all the branches of learning and was a specialist in grammar and logic. Though his family consisted of only three persons inclusive of the son and wife, he was too poor to maintain it.

A yogī from the east, on his way to Vajrāsana, asked from him shelter for a night. So he told him about his own poverty. The yogī said, 'Being a paṇḍita*, you have contempt for the yogī and so you have not asked for any instruction. But I know the way (rite) to obtain wealth.'

'So, please get me some.'

'Keep ready the Pi-cu-ra*²¹ fruits and sandal paste. On my way back from Vajrāsana, I shall perform (the rite).'

On his way back, he conferred on him the blessings of Vasudhārā. [Fol 122A] He propitiated (Vasudhārā)²² and the same year the king made a gift of a large property to him. He also received the highly distinguished patra* of *Vikramaśīla.

At about this period, a brāhmaṇa called Śaṃkarānanda²³

18. Tg contains two works on Kālacakra (rG iv. 6 & 7) attributed to Sādhuputra and mentioned as written for mahā-paṇḍita Dharmākaraśānti.

19. S tr 'a festival in the city, where dancing was going on in a grand scale'.

20. Tg contains his enormous commentaries on Pramāṇavārtika (mDo civ.-cv).

21. see Monier-Williams 624.

22. In Tg Śrī-devi-vasudhārā-stotra (rG lxxii.48) is attributed to Yamāri.

23. See Note 66 of Ch 26.

lived in Kashmir. He was a scholar of the śāstra-s in general and was specially proficient in logic. So he thought of composing a new treatise on logic in order to refute the views of Dharmakīrti. Mañjuśrī told him in a dream, 'Dharmakīrti was an ārya and so it is not possible for you to refute him. The faults that you imagine to be there in his views are due to your own wrong understanding.'

So he made amends and composed commentaries on the Seven Treatises. It is said that he became highly prosperous and happy. In the gloss on Dharmottara's commentary it is said that Śaṅkarānanda belonged to a much earlier period. This mistake is the result of the error occurring in the footnote in Parahitabhadrā's²⁴ work.

The thirtyfourth chapter containing the account of the period of kings Bheyapāla and Neyapāla.

24. S misunderstands the name gshan-phan-bzah-po or Parahitabhadrā, a scholar of Kashmir, to whom are attributed many works in Tg (mDo xlviii 1; rG xxvi.27; mDo xxiv.5); he is also mentioned as the translator of many works, inclusive of Śaṅkarānanda's Sambandha-pariṣānusāra (mDo cxii.2). S tr 'in the gloss on the Good Illustrations for the Welfare of others'. V tr 'As regards the commentary, it is said that in the statements and writings of Dharmottara, Śaṅkarānanda's texts have appeared only because they have been inserted as commentaries as examples of service to others'.

CHAPTER 35

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF ĀMRAPĀLA,
HASTIPĀLA AND KṢĀNTIPĀLA

*Āmrāpāla, the son of *Neyāpāla, ruled for thirteen years. During his period ācārya *Ratnākara Gupta¹ was the upādhyāya of Vajrāsana.

At the time of *Āmrāpāla's death, his son *Hastipāla was too young to rule. So his four ministers, along with the child, ruled the kingdom for eight years. After that, *Hastipāla ascended the throne and ruled for about fifteen years. After him, his co-uterine brother² *Kṣāntipāla ruled for fourteen years.

During their period, lived *Ratnākara Gupta in *Sauri. Some of the ācārya-s already discussed under the account of the period of *Neyāpāla lived [Fol 122B] during the reign of these two kings, namely *Maitrī-pā and the disciples of *Dīpaṃkara-śrījñāna, i.e. his 'five spiritual sons'³ called the great *Pi-ṭo-pā, *Dharmākaramati,⁴ Kṣitigarbha (Bhūmigarbha),⁵

1. In Tg are attributed to him rG lix.9 ; lxxi.96 ; lxx.8 ; lxxii.57 & mDo xxxiii.64.
2. ma-sput—D 799 & J 330. V 'brother from the mother'.
3. cf BA i.261-2 : 'The five special disciples of the Master were—the mahā-panḍita Piṭo-pā ; Dharmākaramati, the Lion of the Mādhyamika ; Mitraguhya ; Jñānamati and the panḍita Kṣitigarbha'. In Tār's list, however, Jñānamati is absent and Madhyamakasiṃha (see note 6 of this chapter) appears as a separate name.
4. In Tg is attributed to Dharmākaramati-pāda rG lxxi.296.
5. sa'i-sñiñ-po, who accompanied Atīśa to Tibet. See A. Chatto-padhyaya AT 314. In BA ii,842 he is mentioned as an elder brother of Vajrapāṇi, who was born in A.D. 1017 (BA ii.855ff). Tg contains two works (rG xiv.21 & xv.2) translated by him. V. 'Bhusuku' and adds in note, 'the heart of earth (? Kṣitigarbha). S finds the form Bhusuku (Bhu-su-ku) as the name of the 41st siddha from among the 84 mentioned in Tanjur'. Such conjectures about sa'i-sñiñ-po are plainly baseless.

Madhyamakasiṃha⁶ and Mitrāguhya.⁷

This was the period when thirtyseven *paṇḍita preachers of the Doctrine like *Jñānaśrīmitra and others worked for the welfare of the living beings.

This was also clearly the period when *Maṅikaśrī,⁸ Bodhibhadra⁹ in Kashmir, the *Pham-thiñ brothers¹⁰ in Nepal, Jñānavajra,¹¹ Bhārata-paṇi¹² and others worked for the welfare of the living beings.

Also lived during this period Rāhulamitra,¹³ who wrote the principles of the Guhya-samāja-maṇḍala on cloth, and *Nāropā's disciple known in Nepal as the Indian *Dārika-pā, who wrote on *Lui-pā's system of abhīṣeka. These (two) are sometimes identified with Rāhula, the direct disciple of Āryadeva, and the great siddha *Dārika-pā (respectively). In spite of doubts, it is foolish to try to be categorical in matters concerning identification simply on the strength of imagination.

*Sthirapāla in particular, i.e. the great *paṇḍita *Sthirapāla, alias *Trilakṣa,¹⁴ elaborately explained the Prajñāpāramitā in *Vikramaśīla. There were moreover innumerable others who

6. dbu-ma'i-sen-ge. In Tg is attributed to him Samkṣipta-nānā-drṣṭi-vibhāga (mDo xxix.6), a work summing up the different opinions expressed by the paṇḍita-s in a grand debate.

7. bśes-gñen-gsaiṅ-ba.

8. See Supplementary Note 83.

9. See Supplementary Note 77.

10. cf BA i.217-8 ; 380-4 and ii.402.

11. See Supplementary Note 84.

12. See Supplementary Note 85.

13. sgra-gcan-'dsin-bśes-gñen.

14. 'bum-phrag-gsum-pa. In Tg is attributed to him Ārya-tārā-stotra (rG lxxi.393) and he is also mentioned as the translator of rG lxxviii.19 ; lxxxii.70 & mDo vi—the colophon of the last work mentions him as mahā-paṇḍita Dhīrapāla (Sthirapāla), famed as dvi-lakṣa-granthālaṅkāṛta-grīva, alias Trilakṣa Sthirapāla. V n 'The Sanskrit name Sthirapāla is given in the text itself, which also gives corresponding Tibetan name brtan-skyoñ. To the latter, however, is also adjoined 'bum-phrag-gsum-pa (Trilakṣa), which is not given in Sanskrit. S remarks that in Tg vol zu Tantras one finds the name 'bum-phrag-gsum-pa, as that of a translator (and hence of a Tibetan ?).

are considered as *siddha paṇḍita-s. But it seems that none of them became very famous.

During the period of these three kings the Law was nourished as before. But they are not counted among the Seven (Pālas) because they did nothing spectacular (for the Law).

The thirtyfifth chapter containing the account of the period of Āmrāpāla, Hastipāla and Kṣāntipāla.

CHAPTER 36

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF KING RĀMAPĀLA

King *Rāmapāla was the son of *Hastipāla. [Fol 123A] Though he ascended the throne at an early age, he extended his power widely by virtue of his exceptional intelligence.

Shortly after he became king, the great ācārya *Abhayākaragupta¹ was invited to act as the upādhyāya of Vajrāsana. After many years, he was appointed as the upādhyāya of *Vikramaśīla and *Nalendra. By this time, the older tradition of these centres had changed.

One hundred and sixty paṇḍita*-s and about a thousand monks permanently resided in *Vikramaśīla. Even five thousand ordained monks assembled there for occasional offerings. In Vajrāsana forty Mahāyānīs and two hundred Śrāvaka bhikṣu-s were maintained by the king as the permanent residents. Occasionally even ten thousand Śrāvaka monks congregated there. In *Odantapurī also permanently lived a thousand monks belonging to both Hīnayāna and Mahāyāna. Occasionally even twelve thousand monks congregated there.

Among the Mahāyānīs of the time, the foremost was ācārya *Abhayākara[gupta]. Even the Śrāvakas had high regard for him as an expert in Vinaya. The account of this ācārya is to be found elsewhere. Of particular significance was the reformation of the Law by him, and the śāstra-s he composed were widely read in the later period. Among the Mahāyānīs of India are still found his śāstra-s as unaffected by the various distortions due to dialects etc of the intervening period.

The two ācārya-s, namely this ācārya and ācārya *Ratnākaraśānti-pā, [Fol 123B] who came later, were comparable in qualities to the older mahā-ācārya-s like *Vasubandhu and others, though by the influence of time there was difference in the magnitude of their contributions to the Law and in the welfare caused by them to the living beings.

1. See Supplementary Note 86.

Already after the death of king *Dharmapāla, the number of nīrthika-s and mlechha-s gradually increased in the kingdom of *Bhaṃgala, in Ayodhyā etc on the north of the *Gaṅgā and in all the regions on the east and west of the *Yamunā—from *Vārāṇasī to *Mālava, *Prayāga, Mathurā, *Kuru, Pañcāla, *Āgrā, *Sagari, *Dilli, etc. The number of nīrthika-s became numerous in *Kāmarū(pa), *Tirahuti, *Oḍiviśa, etc. In *Magadha the Buddhists were greater in number than before, because of the increase of the saṃgha-s and yogī-s. It is remarked that this mahā-ācārya Abhayākara was practically the last among the most famous great ācārya-s who fully nourished the Law with their scholarship, compassion, power and wealth. And this is true. Hence he is to be viewed as having transmitted the thoughts of the jina and his spiritual sons to the later living beings. Therefore, his works should be respected more than those of the ācārya-s that came after the Six Jewels. His greatness is obviously proved by his holy words.

This king *Rāmapāla reigned for about fortysix years, inclusive of some years after ācārya *Abhyākara[gupta] passed away.

[Fol 124A] Before he died, his son *Yakṣapāla was placed on the throne. Three years after that *Rāmapāla died. After this, *Yakṣapāla ruled for only one year, when his minister *Lavasena usurped the throne.

During their period, ācārya *Śubhākaragupta² was in *Vikramaśīla and in Vajrāsana the chief was Buddhakīrti.³

2. In Tg are attributed to him rG xiv.64 & lxvi.5. The colophon of the latter mentions him as the preceptor of Śākyaśrī and that this work was composed in the Jagaddala-vihāra.
3. rdo-rje-gdan-na-rtsa-mi-saṅs-rgyas-grags, i.e. Buddhakīrti, the chief of Vajrāsana. cf Roerich SW 498: 'the famous tsa-mi-saṅs-rgyas-grags-pa, a Tibetan-Sanskrit scholar who attained the high distinction of being appointed one of the dvāra-paṇḍita-s of the viḥāra of Vikramaśīla, and some of whose Sanskrit compositions are still extant.' See Tg rG lxxxvi.36; xxvi.90; lxxxiii.11-19.

According to the current account given by rGa lo[-tsā-ba],⁴ *Abhayākara was still alive when he (rGa) was about to return to Tibet. He (rGa) first visited *Abhayākara but did not have the time to study under him for a long time. *Lava-sena was on the throne at the time of his going back to Tibet.

After *Yakṣa(-pāla and Lava-) *sena,⁵ many were born in the royal line of the *Pālas and some of them may be still living. But none of them became king. The *Pāla dynasty is also called the Sūrya dynasty⁶ while the line of the *Senas was originally the same as that of the Candras.⁷

The thirtysixth chapter containing the account of the period of king Rāmapāla.

4. In Tg, rGa lo-tsa-ba, the translator of rG lxxxiii.25 & 26, is mentioned as maula Buddhakīrti.

5. V & S Yakṣa-sena, which occurs in the text, though obviously as a corruption.

6. ñi-ma'i-rigs.

7. zla-ba'i-rigs.

CHAPTER 37

ACCOUNT OF THE PERIOD OF THE
FOUR SENA KINGS AND OTHERS

*Lavasena's son was *Kāśasena. His son was *Maṇitasena. His son was *Rāthikasena. I have not come across any clear account of how many years each of them ruled. Anyway, the four of them taken together did not rule for more than about eighty years.

During their period, the Law was nourished by many scholars and siddha-s like *Śubhākaragupta,¹ *Raviśrījñāna,² *Nayakapaśrī,³ *Daśabalaśrī⁴ and, shortly after them, by Dharmākaraśānti,⁵ Śrī Vikhyātadeva,⁶ *Niṣkalaṅkadeva,⁷ *Dharmākara-gupta and many other followers of *Abhayākara.

To the period of king *Rāthikasena [Fol 124B] belonged many with strong moral vows, vajradhara-s and vast scholars of scriptures like mahā-paṇḍita *Śākyaśrībhadrā⁸ of Kashmir,

1. See note 2 chapter 36.
2. In Tg is attributed to him two commentaries on śaḍaṅga-yoga (rG iv. 15 & 34) and one on ārya-nāma-saṃgīti (rG v. 8).
3. BA ii.1053 mentions the Nepalese paṇḍita Nayaśrī, a contemporary of Daśabalaśrī, under both of whom the Tibetan scholar sTeṅs-pa lo-tṣā-ba (born A.D. 1107) studied.
4. In Tg mDo cxxviii.2 is attributed to Daśabalaśrīmitra. cf BA ii.801 & 1053.
5. chos-'byun-shi-ba. In Tg are attributed to him two works on Kālacakra (rG iv.6 & 7). cf BA ii.761, 764 & 800.
6. dpul-rnam-par-grags-pā'i-lha. Tg contains a work Paṇḍita-vikhyātadeva-mahākārunika-siddhilābhākhyāna (mDo cxxiii.39). cf BA ii.801. V Śrīviśrutadeva.
7. Apart from a number of translations, in Tg are attributed to him xviii.122-23 and lxxi.104, where his name is given also as Ajitamitragupta. cf BA ii.1055: Chag dGra-beom (born A.D. 1153) studied unde- him.
8. See Supplementary Note 87.

*Buddhaśrī⁹ of Nepal, mahā-ācārya *Ratnarakṣita,¹⁰ the great scholar *Jñānākaragupta,¹¹ the great scholar *Buddhaśrīmitra, the great scholar *Saṃghamajñāna, *Raviśrībhadra, Candrākaragupta and others. They were famous as the twentyfour great mahānta-s.

Among them, the account of *mahā-paṇḍita *Śākyaśrī is widely known and is to be accepted as such. *Buddhaśrī of Nepal acted for a short time as the sthavira of the Mahāsāṃghikas in *Vikramaśīla. He returned to Nepal and extensively preached the Prajñāpāramitā, Guhyatantra, etc. From the point of view of practices, he lived ad libitum.¹²

Now about the great ācārya *Ratnarakṣita.

He was known as equal to *Śākyaśrī in the knowledge of the Prajñāpāramitā-yāna and other general branches of learning, though, *Śākyaśrī specialised in logic and he (Ratnarakṣita) in Tantra. The two were equal in their occult power and in receiving blessings.

He (Ratnarakṣita) was ordained in the Mahāsāṃghika sect and was the Tantra-ācārya of *Vikramaśīla. He had visions of many tutelary deities like Cakrasamvara, Kālacakra and Yamāri.

When the Nāgas and Asuras were once playing the musical instruments for worshipping Avalokiteśvara in *Potala, the sound conveyed to him the essence of the doctrine of the sixteen śūnyatā-s. Everytime he conferred an abhiṣeka, he could infuse the spirit of the deity into the initiated.¹³ His offerings

9. In Tg is mentioned Buddhaśrī as the corrector of the translation of rG lxxi.345 and Lalou 156 adds that Buddhaśrī of Nepal went to Tibet in A.D. 1198. cf BA ii.709, 1033, 1055-6 : the Tibetan scholar Chag dGra-bcom (born A.D. 1153) studied under him.

10. See Supplementary Note 88.

11. Tg mentions him as author of rG xlili.82 ; lxxii.14 & 15. In BA i.260 is said that after the death of Atīśa, Tshul-khrims-rgyal-ba (Jayaśīla) translated some works (rG xxi.13 etc) under him. The name is missing in V tr.

12. ci-bder. See D 381.

13. S tr 'During abhiṣeka-s, he could infuse knowledge into logic.' This is perhaps because of misreading tshad-la as tshad-ma (logic).

were directly received by the dākinī-s. He could immobilise mad elephants with magic stare. He predicted the fall of *Magadha two years earlier. Some of his disciples with real faith in him went to Kashmir and Nepal.

At the time of the fall of *Magadha, he went to the north. A wild buffalo attacked him near *Tirahuti. He subdued it with his magic stare [Fol 125A] and it began to lick his feet. It also carried him one yojana afar.

After working extensively for the welfare of living beings in Nepal, he also went to Tibet for a short period. He composed the (Cakra-)*samvara-udaya-ṭikā*¹⁴.

About *Jñānākaragupta : He had the direct vision of Maitreya-nātha.

About *Buddhaśrīmitra : In a dream, he listened to the Doctrine from Vajravārāhī. He acquired wonderful siddhi and with it could perform the feats like subduing an elephant with each hand.

I find that all of them were scholars in all the branches of learning, had visions of the tutelary deities and attained the special merits of sampanna-krama. I cannot write more of them, because I have neither read nor heard in details about any of them.

About *Vajraśrī. He was a disciple of Daśabala.¹⁵ He was already one hundred years old during this period and after this period he lived for another hundred years. He worked extensively for the welfare of the living beings and never looked old. In the south, he led many thousands of fortunate ones to liberation through the practice of the Tantra-yāna.

During the time of these four *Senas, the number of tīrthika-s went on increasing even in *Magadha. There also came many Persian¹⁶ followers of the mleccha view. To protect *Odantapurī and *Vikramaśīla, the king even converted these partially into fortresses and stationed some soldiers there. The Mahāyānīs did not have any special importance in Vajrāsana,

14. See Supplementary Note 89.

15. stob-bc.

16. stag-gzlg—D 548.

though some of the ṛogī-s and *Mahāyānī*s continued to preach there. During a varṣāvāsa, about ten thousand Śrāvaka Sendhavas congregated there. While the other centres for the Doctrine became practically extinct, though it is said that the number of monks both in Vikramaśīla* and Odantapurī* remained as it was during the time of Abhayākara*.

[Fol 125B] After the death of Rāthikasena*, the few years of Labamṣena*'s¹⁷ reign were peaceful. Then came the Turuṣka* king called the Moon¹⁸ to the region of Antaravedī*¹⁹ in-between the Gaṅgā* and the Yamunā*. Some of the monks acted as messengers for this king. As a result, the petty Turuṣka* rulers of Bhaṅgala* and other places united, ran over the whole of Magadha* and massacred many ordained monks in Odantapurī*. They destroyed this and also Vikramaśīla*.

The Persians at last built a fort on the ruins of the Odantavihāra*. Paṇḍita* Śākyaśrī* went to Ja-gar-da-la* (Jagaddala) in Oḍiviśa* in the east. He spent three years there and then went to Tibet.

The great Ratnarakṣita* went to Nepal. Some of the great paṇḍita*-s like the great scholar Jñānākaragupta*, along with a hundred minor paṇḍita*-s went to the south-west of India. The great scholar Buddhaśrimitra* and Daśabala's disciple Vajraśrī*, along with many minor paṇḍita*-s, fled far to the south. The sixteen [remaining] mahānta*-s including the scholar Samghamaśrījñāna*, Raviśrībhadra*, Candrākara-gupta*, along with two hundred minor paṇḍita*-s, went far to the east to Pu-khaṅ*,²⁰ Mu-naṅ*, Kamboja* and other places. Thus the Lāw became almost extinct in Magadha*.

There is no doubt that many śiddha-s and sādhaka-s lived at this period. But since the karma of the people in general

17. Both P-ed and S-ed Lavamṣena in transliteration. V & S Lavasena. This is most confusing, because in Tār's account Lavasena cannot be later than Rāthikasena.

18. zla-ba. V & S Candra.

19. D. C. Sircar CGEIL 170.

20. See chapter 39.

was unalterable, all these could not be prevented.

At that time, most of the yogī* followers of Gaurakṣa* (Gorakṣa) were fools and, driven by the greed for money and honour offered by the īrthika kings, became the followers of Īśvara.²¹ They used to say, 'We are not opposed even to the Turuṣkas*.' [Fol 126A] Only a few of them belonging to the Naṭeśvarī*-varga remained insiders.

Lavaṃsena*. His son was Buddhasena*.²² His son was Haritasena*. His son was Praṭītasena*. And others. They had to obey the Turuṣkas* and did not have much of royal power. According to their limited power, they also worshipped the Law a little. Particularly, during the period of Buddhasena, the great paṇḍita Rāhulaśrībhadrā* resided at Nalendra*. There were then about seventy listeners to the Doctrine.²³

After him lived Bhūmiśrībhadrā* and, after him, Upāyaśrībhadrā and others. Sometimes during their period, Karuṇāśrībhadrā*, Munīndraśrībhadrā* and others also carefully nourished the Law of the Sage.

After the death of Praṭītasena*, their line came to an end.

Some minor kings are sometimes mentioned as having respect for the Law, but I have not come across any original account of them.

After about a hundred years of Praṭītasena*'s death, Ciṅgalarāja*²⁴ became very powerful in Bhaṅgala*. He brought under control all the Hindus* and Turuṣkas* up to Dili* (Delhi). He was originally a devotee of the brāhmaṇa-s. Under the influence of his queen, however, he changed his faith and became a devotee of the Buddhists.

He made lavish offerings in Vajrāsana, renovated all the temples there and properly rebuilt the upper four storeys of the nine-storied mahā-gaṇḍola which was destroyed by the Turuṣkas*. He established there a centre for the Doctrine under 21. dbaii-phyug.

22. cf Altekar in Roerich SW 472ff and Roerich SW 499f, 522.

23. cf Roerich SW 548 : Chag lo-tsa-ba gives exactly this account.

24. P-ed Ciṅgala. S-ed Tsa-ga-la. V Chagala-rāja.

paṇḍita *Śāriputra.²⁵ He made lavish offerings in the temple of *Nalendra, but built no big centre for the Doctrine.

This king was very long-lived. After his death, one hundred and sixty years have passed away.²⁶ But I have not heard of any king of *Magadha [Fol 126B] who lived in this period and was a devotee of the Doctrine. I have neither heard of any with strong moral vow or of any well-versed in the Piṭakes.

Later on, king *Mukundadeva of *Oḍiviśa occupied most of the territory of the madhya-deśa. He established no centre for the Doctrine in *Magadha. In *Oḍiviśa, he established the temple for the insiders and also a number of smaller centres for the Doctrine. Thus the Law was spread a little.

Thirtyeight years²⁷ are known to have passed since the death of this king.

The thirtyseventh chapter containing the account of the four Sena kings and others.

25. In Tg are attributed to him rG lxxiv.3 ; lxxxii.25-6.

26. Tār writes this in A.D. 1608.

27. ib.

TĀRANĀTHA'S
SUPPLEMENT TO THE HISTORY OF
BUDDHISM IN INDIA

Though in the Tibetan text itself there is actually no such division, Vasil'ev rightly comments that the History of Buddhism as narrated by Tāranātha actually ends with the previous chapter. Tāranātha also clearly says that in the remaining few chapters he is going to narrate certain minor details relating to the Doctrine.

CHAPTER 38

ACCOUNT OF THE SUCCESSION OF TEACHERS
AT VIKRAMAŚĪLA

I shall now relate some other minor details.

During the period of the five successive kings beginning with king Śrī Dharmapāla and till the period of *Canaka, a number of great Tāntrika Vajrācāryas looked after the Law at *Vikramaśīla.

During the earlier period of the rule of king *Dharmapāla, ācārya Buddhajñānapāda—and after him Dīpaṃkara-bhadra¹—looked after the Law. The account of this is to be found elsewhere.

*Laṅkā-jayabhadra belonged to the period of king *Masura-kṣita [? Vasurakṣi]. This ācārya was born in *Laṅkā, i.e. *Siṅgala. There he became a bhikṣu *paṇḍita, versed in all the Śrāvaka Piṭakas. Then he came to *Magadha, studied the Mahāyāna thoroughly and became a scholar particularly of the Guhya-tantra. He meditated on Cakrasamvara at *Vikramaśīla and received the vision [of the deity]. Once he went to *Koṅkana in the south. In this region there was the famous *Mahābimba caitya, which was unapproachable but the miraculous reflection of which could be seen in the sky. He lived in that country and preached the Guhya-tantra-yāna thoroughly to some of the disciples. He composed the commentary on the Cakra-sambara etc, [Fol 127A] and acquired such miraculous power that when attacked by a wild buffalo, he simply raised the index finger at it and it dropped dead.

Then he became the Tantra-ācārya of *Vikramaśīla. He was succeeded by the brāhmaṇa ācārya Śrīdhara,² whose account is to be found elsewhere. When he (Śrīdhara) acquired fame as a preacher of the Mahā-māyā in the south, he was invited to *Vikramaśīla. From the treatises on the Rakta and Kṛṣṇa Yamāri Tantra composed by him, it is clear that he belonged to the lineage of ācārya Jñānapāda. The Tibetans imagine that he was a direct disciple of ācārya Kṛṣṇācārya, but the periods of their coming to the mortal world were different and hence he could have been his disciple when, in the later period, he received his vision.

1. See Supplementary Note 89.

2. See Supplementary Note 90.

While practising intense meditation, brāhmaṇa Śrīdhara one morning went out to collect³ flowers etc used for worship and saw a majestic yogī at his door. He recognised him as Kṛṣṇācārya, bowed down at his feet and prayed, 'Please lead me to succeed in the Vidyā-mantra.' He (Kṛṣṇācārya) gave him instructions of the Sarasvatī-mantra-japa and vanished. Immediately, he had the vision of Sarasvatī⁴ on the north-western side of the maṇḍala and soon attained siddhi.

He was succeeded by *Bhavabhadrā.⁵ Broadly speaking, he was also a scholar of all aspects of the Doctrine. He studied in particular Vijñāna-vāda⁶ and acquired proficiency in about fifty Tantras. He received the blessings of Cakra-samvara in dream and also had the vision of Tārā. He practised the Guṭikā-siddhi and attained success. [Fol 127B] Later on, he attained success in the practice of alchemy etc, which proved highly beneficial for himself and for others.

He was succeeded by Bhavyakīrti,⁷ a profound scholar of the Tāntrika scriptures. He is said to have attained unfettered abhijñāna.

He was succeeded by *Lilāvajra, who attained Yamāri-siddhi. It appears that the Bhairava-aṣṭa-vetāla-sādhana, which is extant in Tibetan translation, was composed by him. At

3. S-ed gśig. P-ed gśegs-su (remove). The former reading followed.

4. dbyaṅs-can-ma. D 913 : the goddess of learning of both the Hindus and Buddhists.

5. See Supplementary Note 91.

6. rnam-rig. S 'the Nyāya system'. But see D 761.

7. skal-lān-grags-pa. Tg contains his commentary (rG xxxiv.1) on Nāgārjuna's Pañcakrama, chapters 9-17 of his Pradīpodyotana-nāma-ṭīkā (rG xxxi), [the first eight chapters of which are attributed to Āryadeva] and another of his work on Cakrasamvara (rG vii.1).

this time, he heard the rumour of an impending *Turuṣka invasion and defeated their soldiers by drawing the Yamāri-cakra. After reaching *Magadha, the soldiers became dumb and inactive and remained so for a long time. Thus they were turned away.

He was succeeded by Durjayacandra,⁸ whose account is to be found elsewhere.

He was succeeded by Kṛṣṇa-samaya-vajra,⁹ whose account is already given.

Then came Tathāgata-rakṣita,¹⁰ who attained power by the vidyā of Yamāri and Samvara.¹¹ He attained the special power of learning the languages of the different peoples and animals and also the śāstra-s that he had never studied, immediately after concentrating on his different dhamanī-s.

Next came Bodhibhadra¹², who was a great scholar of all the Guhya-mantras of both the insiders and outsiders. By rank he was an upāsaka and he attained the direct vision of Mañjuśrī. It is said that by virtue of his siddhi in Nāma-saṃgīti, he attained samādhi on the name of each deity. [Fol 128A] To this period belonged many with the name Bodhibhadra. In Tibet he [i.e. Bodhibhadra under discussion] did not evidently have much fame in the earlier period.

He was succeeded by *Kamalarakṣita,¹³ In rank this ācārya was a bhikṣu. He was a scholar in all sūtra-s and tantra-s, specially in the Prajñāpāramitā, Guhya-samāja and Yamāri. When he attained siddhi of Yamāri in the *Aṃḍa-giri¹⁴ to the south of *Magadha, he was confronted with various miraculous obstructions. He meditated on śūnyatā and all these subsided. Then Yamāri appeared before him and asked, 'What do you desire ?'

8. See Supplementary Note 92.

9. nag-po-dam-tshig-rdo-rje. cf BA i.360. In Tg are attributed three Tāntrika works to him (rG xxxiv.3 ; lxxiv.21 & 28).

10. See Supplementary Note 93.

11. S tr 'who attained control of Yamāri and Samvara'. This is because the word mkhas-la does not occur in his edition.

12. See Supplementary Note 77.

13. See Supplementary Note 94.

14. V 'Aṅgiri (Aṅga-giri)'.

‘Please make me identical with yourself.’ As he said this, he (Yamāri) melted into his heart. After this, the moment he thought of anything, he succeeded in it, inclusive of the great siddhi-s. It is said that Yamāri Vajradhara appeared before him every night and he used to listen to the Doctrine from him.

He once thought of holding a gaṇa-cakra in the crematorium of *Vikrama. Along with many Tāntrika disciples, he brought there the materials for sādhana carried by the yoginī-s.¹⁵ On the way they encountered the minister of the *Turuṣka king of *Karna of the west, who was then proceeding to invade *Magadha with five hundred *Turuṣkas. They (Turuṣkas) plundered the materials for sādhana. When, however, they came near the ācārya and his attendants, the ācārya became angry and threw at them an earthen pitcher full of charmed water. Immediately was generated a terrible storm and black men were seen emerging from it and striking the *Turuṣkas with daggers in hand. [Fol 128B] The minister himself vomited blood and died and the others were afflicted with various diseases. Excepting one, none of them returned to their country. This made both the tīrthika-s and *Turuṣkas terror-stricken.

He performed many other abhicāra-s, but for which he could have attained the rainbow body. It is said that the abhicāra-s caused some obstacles even for a great yogī like him.

This ācārya was a kind teacher also of Jo-bo-rje (Atiśa) and Khyuñ-po-rnal-'byor-pa.¹⁶ It is said that in the latter part of his life, he lived in a forest near *Nalendra, fully absorbed in meditation mainly on sampanna-krama.

Except the first two of the twelve ācārya-s, each of them acted as the chief of the centre for twelve years. Thus it is said.

After *Kamalarakṣita came the Six Door-keeper Scholars. After them separately came many ācārya-s of Tantra.

Dīpaṅkara Jñāna and others did not break the tradition of those who nourished the Law in the general sense [? without

15. S tr 'a few yogī-s'. But the text has rnal-'byor-ma (yoginī).

16. See Supplementary Note 95.

being exclusively Tātrikas].

After the Six Gate-keeper Scholars, there was no continuity in the succession of upādhyāya-s for some years. Then came upādhyāya Dīpaṅkara-śrī-jñāna. After him, there was no upādhyāya for seven years. Then Mahāvajrāsana¹⁷ became the upādhyāya for a short period. After him one called *Kamalakulīśa¹⁸ became the upādhyāya. The name of the next upādhyāya was *Narendra-śrī-jñāna. He was succeeded by *Dānarakṣita.¹⁹ After him *Abhayākara acted (as upādhyāya) for a long time. He was succeeded by *Śubhākara-gupta. [Fol 129A] Next was *Nayakapaśrī²⁰ and after him Dharmākaraśānti, who was succeeded by *Śākyaśrī, the great paṇḍita of Kashmir.

After him, there was the end of *Vikramaśīla.

The thirtieth chapter containing the account of the succession at Vikramaśīla.

17. rdo-vje-gdan-pa-chen-po.

18. cf BA i.372.

19. cf BA i.105.

20. cf BA ii.761, 764 & 800, V Sunayakapaśrī, and adds in note 'S remarks that Tg mentions Sunayaśrī and Sunayaśrīmitra, who probably were one and the same person.

CHAPTER 39

ACCOUNT OF THE SPREAD OF THE DOCTRINE
IN THE KO-KI COUNTRY IN THE EAST

Eastern India consists of three parts. Of these, *Bhāṃgala and *Oḍiviśa belong to Aparāntaka and are hence called the eastern Aparāntaka. In the north-east, *Kāmarū(-pa), *Tripurā, *Hasama are called *Girivarta, i.e. surrounded by mountains. Proceeding further east from this region, (one reaches) *Naṃga-ṭa on the slopes of the northern mountains. Bordering on the sea are *Pukhañ, *Balaku, etc.—the country of the *Rākhañ—and *Hāṃsavatī,¹ *Mar-ko etc, the country of *Muññā-s. Further, *Cak-ma,² *Kam-bo-ja etc. All these are collectively called *Ko-ki.³

From the time of Aśoka, saṃgha-s were established in these *Ko-ki countries. Later on, these gradually grew large in number. Before the time of Vasubandhu, these were only of the Śrāvakas. Some of the disciples of Vasubandhu propagated the Mahāyāna (in these places). For sometime, the continuity of this tradition just survived. However, from the time of king *Dharmapāla on, there were in madhya-deśa many students from these places. Their number went on increasing so that during the time of the four *Senas about half of the monks of *Magadha were from *Ko-ki. Thus, in these countries the Mahāyāna was widely spread and the difference between the Hīnayāna and Mahāyāna disappeared, as it had happened in the kingdom of Tibet.

From the time of *Abhayākara [Fol 129B] the influence of the Mantrayāna went on increasing. As most of the scholars of the madhya-deśa went to these countries after the invasion of *Magadha by the *Turuṣkas, the Law extensively spread there.

1. V Pegu.

2. V Campā. S-ed tsa-kma, P-ed tsa-ka-ma.

3. V n This name is probably derived from the Chinese word tszyao-chzhi.

At that time lived king *Śobhajāta. He built many temples and established about two hundred centres for the Doctrine.

Next came king *Siṃhajaṭi.⁴ He also helped the spread of the Doctrine, and the Law became more extensively widespread in all these countries. It is said that even now during the occasional congregations (there), the number of bhikṣu-s reaches twenty to thirty thousand, not to speak of course of the numerous upāsaka-s.

From these countries came the later paṇḍita-s* like Vanaratna,⁵ who visited Tibet.

In the later period, there was a king there called *Bālasundara. Though in these countries, the Vinaya, Abhidharma and the Mahāyāna śāstra-s were very popular, the Guhyamantra-dharma—excepting a few like the Kālacakra and Trayavṛttamālā⁶—had become extremely rare. So he (Bālasundara) sent about two hundred paṇḍita-s* to mahā-siddha Śāntigupta⁷ and others in Dramila and *Khagendra in the south to learn the practice of the Guhya-mantra and restore these in these countries. His (Bālasundara's) sons *Candra-vāhana now⁸ resides in *Ra-khañ, *Atitavāhana rules *Ca-gama (? Cākmā), *Bālāvāhana rules *Mu-ñāñ and *Sundara-haci rules *Naṃ-ga-ṭa. (In these countries) the Law remains extensively spread till now according to the older tradition.

The thirtyninth chapter containing the account of the spread of the Doctrine [Fol 130A] in the Ko-ki country in the east.

4. V n 'I have read saddajaṭi'.

5. See Supplementary Note 96.

6. phreñ-ba-bhkor-gsun.

7. shi-ba-sbas-pa. In Tg are attributed to mahā-siddha Śāntigupta five Tāntrika works (rG lxxiv.31 ; 50 ; lxxxiii.32 ; lxxxvi,88 & lxxiv.32).

8. i.e. A.D. 1608 ?

CHAPTER 40

ACCOUNT OF THE INTRODUCTION OF THE LAW
INTO THE SMALLER ISLANDS AND
OF ITS REVIVAL IN THE SOUTH

In the smaller countries [lit islands] like the *Siṅgala-dvīpa, Yavadvīpa,¹ Tāmradvīpa,² Suvarṇadvīpa,³ *Dhanaśrī-dvīpa and *Pa-yi-gu the Law was spread in an early period and remains widely prevalent till now. Though there are a few Mahāyānīs in the *Siṅgala-dvīpa, the large majority (of the monks there) are Śrāvakas. Even now, about twelve thousand bhikṣu-s congregate there during the *Śrī-pādukā ceremony of (worshipping) the foot-print of the Teacher. Most of them are Śrāvakas. In *Dhanaśrī and *Pa-yi-gu, the Mahāyānīs are only a few in number. In the other smaller islands mentioned above exist only the followers of the Śrāvakas.

In the Dramīla country [lit island], the Law in its purity did not previously exist. It was first introduced by ācārya Padmākara.⁴ Dīpaṅkara-bhadra also went there. After that, numerous Vajradharas from *Magadha, *Urgyana and Kashmir extensively spread the Mantrayāna there for about a hundred years. The Tantras which were previously kept secret during the time of king *Dharmapāla and were eventually lost in India and the Tantras brought from *Oḍiyāna but lost in India survive here. Even now, the four classes of Guhya-mantra in their pure teachings are widely current here, as these were in the earlier times. Also partly survive here the Vinaya, Abhidharma and the Prajñāpāramitā-śāstras.

After the *Turuṣka invasion of *Magadha, in the southern

1. nas-gliḥ.

2. zans-gliḥ.

3. gser-gliḥ.

4. padma'byuḥ-gnas. In Tg are attributed to ācārya Padmākara seven Tāntrik works (rG xlv.37 ; lxvi.9 ; lxx.110 ; lxx.47 ; lxxi.5 ; 145 ; lxxii.2).

parts of India like *Vidyānagara, *Koṅkuna, [Fol 130B] *Ma-lyāra and *Ka-liṅ-ga were established some centres for the Doctrine, though these were not very big and the number of the followers of the Doctrine was not very large. Yet there was no break in the tradition of the purity of the teaching and sādhana.

In *Kaliṅga, which is included in *Triliṅga, there lived a famous *paṇḍita called Narasūrya.⁵

Similarly, from the time of the establishment of the Law in the south-western kingdoms by king *Kaṛṇa until the *Turuṣka invasion of *Magadha, it (the Law) was widely propagated by *Jñānākaragupta⁶ and others. Many centres for the Doctrine were established in the countries like *Maru, *Me-vā-ra, *Cita-vara, *Bi-tu-va, *Ābhu, *Saurāṣṭra, *Gujiratha etc. Even now many saṃgha-s survive in these places.

In the later period, particularly because of the blessings of the mahā-siddheśvara Śāntigupta,⁷ the Law was revived in *Khagendra and the Vindhyācala.

The saṃgha-s were elaborately worshipped during the time of king *Rāmacandra. His son *Bālābhadrā built many temples and monasteries in *Śrī *Ratnagiri, *Jīṭā, *O-ja-na, *U-r-vā-sī, etc. He also established in all possible ways many centres for the Doctrine in these places. It is said that the number of even the newly ordained monks there is about two thousand.

The Law in its purity, along with the study of both sūtra and tantra, became widespread.

The fortieth chapter containing the account of the introduction of the Law in the smaller islands and of its revival in the south.

5. mī'i-ñi-mar-grags-pa.

6. V Dīpaṃkaragupta. But the text has Jñānākaragupta in transliteration.

7. See note 7 of ch 39.

CHAPTER 41

ACCOUNT OF THE SPREAD OF THE DOCTRINE IN THE SOUTH AS RELATED IN THE "GARLAND OF FLOWERS"

I have not seen any comprehensive work on the royal [Fol 131A] chronology of south India¹ and of the *Ko-ki countries. However, the work called the Garland of Flowers² composed by the brāhmaṇa *Manomati—which contains a brief account of those kings that helped the spread of the Doctrine in the south and excellently worked there for the welfare of the living beings—gives the following account.

During the period of *Śuklarāja and *Candraśobha—the kings of *Kāñcī in the south—the Garuḍa and other common birds of the small island were brought under control and these birds used to bring medicine, gems and various marine creatures. With these treasures, each of the kings worshipped two thousand monks.³ A temple was later built for the birds and it was called the *Pañkhi-ūrti⁴ temple, where a few birds from the small island still come and live.

During the period of the three kings Mahendra [? Maheśa], Kṣemaṅkara [? Śaṅkara] and Manohara [? Manoratha], a thousand caitya-s were daily worshipped each with an umbrella (chatra) and various other articles immeasurable in quantity.

Further, during the time of the three kings Bhoga-subāla and his son Candrasena and his [Candrasena's] son Kṣemaṅkara-siṃha [? Śaṅkara-siṃha], each suppliant used to be paid a dināra of alchemical gold. To the bhikṣu-s and upāsaka-s that approached them, they used to give articles worth five

1. P-ed 'the royal chronology of Kashmir and South India'. But S-ed omits Kashmir. The latter reading followed.
2. me-tog-phreñ-ba, evidently not the Puṣpa-mālā (mDo lxxxix.1), which is a Vinaya work of the Sarvāstivādins.
3. V saṅgha-s. The text has dge-'dun. See D 270f.
4. See Imperial Gazetteer of India (1908) xxiii.392.

hundred silver paṇa*-s. The place where they lived is not quite clear, though it appears that they belonged to Koṅkuna*.

[Fol 131B] Kṣemaṅkarasiṃha (? Śaṃkara-siṃha) had three sons. The eldest of them was called Vyāghrarāja*, because he had eyes and stripes like those of a tiger. He ruled Taṭa-koṅkuna* and built two thousand temples there.

The second of them was called Buda* (Budha), i.e. the planet mercury. He ruled Upara-koṅkuna* and Tu-lu-rā-ti*. He used regularly to worship five thousand monks.

The youngest of them was Buddhaśuca*. Expelled from his own country, he eventually became the ruler of Dravali*. He used always to entertain ten thousand brāhmaṇa-s and ten thousand Buddhist teachers.

Now, there was a young king called *Ṣaṇmukha*⁵ in the Vindhyācala region. He obtained inexhaustible food and clothes by attaining siddhi in the Vasudhārā-mantra. This king thrice liquidated all the debts in the whole of the southern region. He gave one cloth to each of the poor people. It is said that for twenty years he provided about eighty thousand poor people and beggars and other paupers with clothes and food.

Each of the kings of Malyara* belonging to the four generations—namely Sagara, Vikrama, Ujjayana and Śreṣṭha—established five hundred centres for the Doctrine and built a corresponding number of temples.

King Mahendra ruled in the Karṇāṭa* and Vidyānagara* regions. His son was Devarāja, whose son, again, was Viśva. Under the royal command of these three kings, the kṣatriya-s and brāhmaṇa-s were to worship only the Three Jewels. Each of them ruled for thirty years. King Viśva had three sons. The eldest of them called Śiśu [Fol 132A] ruled for three years. The second son Pratāpa ruled for only one month. Fifty temples were built by each of the two. Pratāpa took the vow : 'I shall kill myself if I ever worship any god other than the Buddha.' He had once to worship the Śiva-liṅga* and so he threw himself into a pit full of sharp razors. The youngest son *Nāgarāja-bhagavān left the country with ten thousand attendants and sailed eastwards to subdue the enemies near *Pu-khañ. He conquered the place, worshipped the Buddha and worked elaborately for the Law.

5. gshon-nu-gdon-drug. ? Kumāra-ṣaṇmukha. V 'The young Six-faced One'.

The account of king *Sālavāhana is already given.

Brāhmaṇa *Balamitra was born in *Kaliṅga. He filled with caitya-s the land between the two seas.

The triangular region of the south is like a long beak. The apex projects into the south and the base extends towards the madhya-deśa. At the extremity of the apex is *Rāmeśvara. The sea on its eastern side is called *Mahodadhi and the sea on its western side is called *Ratnagiri. Although the line of demarcation is not visible in the ocean, [Fol 132B] as demarcated by the triangular region, however, the colour of the sea along the whole length of the southern coast looks different up to a long distance. The place of the meeting of the waves of the two sides appears to have a higher altitude.

He (Balamitra) built a caitya in each city up to the point where met the *Mahodadhi and *Ratnagiri. This was predicted in the Māñjuśrī-mūla-tantra as : 'The Doctrine will spread in the land up to the shores of the two seas...'

Another brāhmaṇa called *Nāgaketu made a lakh of images of the Teacher and offered ten forms of worship⁶ to each of these.

Further, there was the brāhmaṇa called Vardhamāla. He prepared ten thousand copies of the works containing the Words (of the Buddha), worshipped each of these in fifteen forms and regularly maintained four thousand bhikṣu-s and upāsaka-s who were to preserve, listen to and preach these.

The Mahāyāna ācārya *Gaggari was a śruti-dhara and possessed the power of reading others' thoughts. By his preachings, one thousand disciples attained the stage of *dharma-kṣānti*⁷.

6. V n 'These ten forms of worship are regarded as : flowers, garlands, candles, ghee, clothes, decoration, umbrella, corn, banner and ornaments'. cf D 439.

7. chos-la-bzod-pa.

Kumārananda was a gomi upāsaka. As a result of his preaching to five thousand upāsaka-s, all of them became versed in the Prajñā-pāramitā.

There was a householder upāsaka called Matikumāra. As a result of his preaching the Doctrine, about ten thousand in all—inclusive of the young boys and girls—attained samādhi in Mahāyāna.

[Fol 133A] Further, bhikṣu Bhadrānanda, by the mere utterance of the Truth, used to cure the diseases of everybody in the city and save them from the influence of the evil stars. He used to live in the company of twenty monks of extremely pure moral conduct. It is said that when the other monks started harassing him, he flew to the Tuṣita with his mortal body.

There lived two upāsaka-s called Dānabhadra and *Laṅkādeva. They painted ten thousand pictures of the Tathāgata and made ten thousand images with each of the materials like stone, wood, clay and gems. They built an equal number of caitya-s and offered ten banners to each of these.

For fifteen years, upāsaka *Bahubhuja offered gifts of grain, food, clothes, gold, horses and cattle etc to the suppliants all around. At last he donated his male and female servants—even his son, his wife and his house—meditated in a forest and attained the stage of anutpattikadharmakṣānti. It is said that after preaching the Doctrine to his disciples he went to the Sukhāvati with his mortal body.

Then, there was the upāsaka called bhaṭṭāraka Madhyamati.* He used to go to the īrthika-s in their guise and, to start with, used to preach them their own scriptures. [Fol 133B] In the course of this, he surreptitiously preached the doctrine of anātma and mahā-karuṇā-mārga-krama. Thus their views were gradually changed without their being aware of it. In this way, he converted them into Buddhists. Since he could assume various forms simultaneously, he managed to lead about ten thousand tīrthika-s to the Law of the Buddha.

8. dbu-ma'i-blo-gros.

It seems that these ācārya-s appeared shortly before Nāgārjuna. It is at least certain that they lived during the period intervening between the beginning of the spread of the Mahāyāna and the time of Dharmakīrti. The exact period of these above-mentioned ācārya-s, however, cannot be definitely ascertained.

The fortyfirst chapter containing the account of the spread of the Doctrine in the south as related in the work 'The Garland of Flowers'.

CHAPTER 42

SOME DISCUSSION ON THE FOUR SECTS

All the saṅgha-s discussed so far were divided either in four or in eighteen sects.¹ To discuss these in brief :

There is no difference of opinion as to the theories and practices of these eighteen sects. But there is difference of opinion as to how the division took place.

According to the Sthaviras, the first division was that between the Sthaviras and Mahāsāṃghikas. The Mahāsāṃghikas, again, were divided into eight sub-sects, namely, the Mūla-mahāsāṃghikas,² Ekavyavahārikas,³ Lokottaravādins, Bahuśrutīyas, Prajñaptivādins, Caityakas, Pūrvaśailas and Aparāśailas. And the Sthaviras also were divided into ten sub-sects, namely Mūla-sthaviras, [Fol 134A] Sarvāstivādins, Vātsīputrīyas, Dharmottarīyas, Bhadrāyānīyas, Sammitīyas, Mahīśāsakas⁴ (? Bahuśāsakas), Dharmaguptikas,⁵ Suvarṣakas and Uttarīyas.

According to the Mahāsāṃghikas, the first division was into three, namely the Sthaviras, Mahāsāṃghikas and Vibhajyavādins. Then the Sthaviras, again, were divided into two, namely the Sarvāstivādins and the Vātsīputrīyas. The (Sarvā-)stivādins also were divided into the Mūla-sarvāstivādins and the Sūtravādins.⁶ And the Vātsīputrīyas were divided into Sammitīyas, Dharmottarīyas, Bhadrāyānīyas⁷ and Śaṅṅāgarīyas. The Mahāsāṃghikas were divided into eight, namely

1. S n 'In the following account, I have mainly followed Vasil'ev. Der Buddhismus, p. 247ff, where in the notes, the Tibetan translations of the different names occur. I have also followed Stanislas Julien, Listes diverses des noms des dix-huits ecoles schismatiques qui sont sorties du Bouddhisme, in Journal Asiatique 1859 p. 327-361'.
2. V Mahāsāṃghika Proper.
3. V Vyavahārika.
4. maḥ-ston-pa—sec BA i.27.
5. V Dharmaguptakas.
6. mdo-sde-smra-ba. V Sautrāntikas.
7. This name does not occur in V tr.

the Mahāsāṃghikas proper, Pūrvaśailas, Aparāśailas, Rājagirikas, Haimavatas, Caityakas, Siddhārthakas,⁸ and Gokulikas. The Vibhajyavādins were divided into four, namely the Mahīśāsakas, Kāśyāpiyas, Dharmaguptikas and Tāmraśāṭīyas.

According to the Sammitīyas, the first fundamental division was into the Mahāsāṃghikas, Sarvāstivādins, Vātsīputriyas and Haimavatas. Of these, the Mahāsāṃghikas were divided into six, namely the Mahāsāṃghikas proper, Ekavyavahārikas, Gokulikas, Bahūśrutīyas, Prajñāptivādins and Caityakas. And the (Sarvā-)stivādins were divided into seven, namely the Mūla-sarvāstivādins, Vibhajyavādins, Mahīśāsakas (? Bahūśāsakas),⁹ Dharmaguptikas, Tāmraśāṭīyas, Kāśyāpiyas and Saṃkrāntikas. And the Vātsīputriyas were divided into four, [Fol 134B] namely Mūla-vātsīputriyas, Dharmottariyas, Bhadrāyaṇīyas and Sammitīyas. There was no subdivision of the Haimavatas.

Following the view of the Sarvāstivādins, it is said in Vinītadeva's *Samayabhedoparacanacakra*¹⁰ that the Pūrvaśailas, Aparāśailas, Haimavatas, Lokottaravādins and the Prajñāptivādins were the five main branches of the Mahāsāṃghikas. The Mūla-sarvāstivādins, Kāśyāpiyas, Mahīśāsakas, Dharmaguptikas, Bahūśrutīyas, Tāmraśāṭīyas and the Vibhajyavādins were called the Sarvāstivādins. The Jetavanīyas, Abhayagirivāsins, Mahāvihāravāsins were sthaviras. The Kaurukullakas, Āvantakas and the Vātsīputriyas were the three branches of the Sammitīyas. (Thus these were) eighteen in all, differing among themselves in their places of residence, their theories and their teachers.

In this view, the eighteen sects originated from the four principal ones. Many Tantras mention only four original sects. Though disagreeing with the view of the Vātsīputriyas, this principle of counting the four is acceptable. It is more so, because it is based on the statement of ācārya Vasumitra.¹¹

8. V Saṃkrāntikas. V n 'Arthasiddhakas ?'

9. V Bahūśrutīyas.

10. by Vinītadeva—Tg mDo xc.13.

11. See Samayabhedoparacanacakra by Vasumitra (Tg mDo xc.11).

In the Bhikṣuvarṣāgraprāschā,¹² the four original sects are mentioned according to this, though there are some differences like dividing the Mahāsāṃghikas into six and [Fol 135A] the Sammitīyas¹³ into five. However, the above view should be accepted.

There are many discrepancies in the enumeration of the names given before. But most of these are cases of the same sects being mentioned under different names. Some real discrepancies are also to be found in these enumerations.

The Kāśyapīyas, for example, were none but the dissenting disciples of the later arhat Kāśyapa ; they are also mentioned as the Suvarṣakas. Similarly, the Mahīśāsakas, Dharmaguptikas, Tāmraśāṭīyas, etc were thus called according to the names of their respective Sthaviras. The Saṃkrāntikas, Uttarīyas, Tāmraśāṭīyas are but the same sect (under different names). So also were the Caityakas and Pūrvaśailas (but names of) the same sect and they were the followers of the wandering mendicant Mahādeva.¹⁴ From them branched off the Siddhārthakas and the Rājagirikas. Accepting this view, these two cannot be counted among the eighteen (sects). The Lokottaravādins and Kukkuṭagirikas¹⁵ (bya-gag-ri-pa) were the same. The Ekavyavahārika is also said to have been the general name of the Mahāsāṃghikas. The Kaurukullaka is translated (into Tibetan) as Sa-sgros-ripa. The Vātsīputrīyas, Dharmottarīyas, Bhadrāyaṇīyas and the Ṣaṇṇāgariyas are to be roughly taken as being the same.

The saṃgha-s of the ārya-deśa and the smaller islands are to be clearly regarded as originating from and belonging to the four principal and distinct sects. The scriptural works of the eighteen sects [Fol 135B] still survive. But there is practically none following any one of these theories today who do not mix these up with those of others.

It is clear that during the period of the seven *Pāla kings

12. Tg mDo xc.21—attributed to Padmākaraghoṣa. But see BA i.30 & n attributed to Padmasambhava.

13. V Vātsīputrīyas.

14. lha-chen-po. V n 'see supra ch 9'.

15. V Kaukuṭapāda.

only seven of these sects survived. Among the Śrāvaka-sandhavas this tradition still survives.

Broadly speaking, the four (original) sects exist in their purity. Besides these, there survive only two branches of the Sammitiyas, namely the Vātsīputriyas and Kaurukullakas, two of the Mahāsāṃghikas, namely the Prajñaptivādins and Lokottaravādins and two branches of the Sarvāstivādins, namely the Mūla-sarvāstivādins and the Tāmraśāṭṭiyas.¹⁶

The sect earlier known as the Dārṣṭāntikas was that of the Sautrāntikas which branched off from the Tāmraśāṭṭiyas. Hence, it is not to be separately counted among the eighteen.

In the older days, when the Law of the Śrāvakas alone was current, there surely existed the followers of the views of these different sects. Since the spread of the Mahāyāna, all the Mahāyāna-saṃghas belonged to one or the other of these sects, though these upheld the Mahāyāna alone and were not influenced by the different views of the earlier sects. Similarly the Śrāvakas also for a long time upheld their own views in their purity and only later their views were influenced by those of the others.

In spite of adhering to the views of either the Hinayāna or Mahāyāna, all of them wanted to remain pure in the practices and applications of the Vinaya. Nevertheless, the division into the four sects is to be understood as resulting from the differences in the understanding of the practices of the Vinaya. As it is said,

‘The sayings of the Buddha are to be properly understood as blissful in the beginning, in the middle and in the end, and as being characterised by the three marks and as delivering the threefold teaching.’

[Fol 136A] Following this, profound reverence (for the sayings of the Buddha) should be aroused in everybody.

The fortysecond chapter containing some discussion on the four sects.

16. V n ‘The seven schools—if the author had this number in mind—should probably be taken as Sthaviras’.

CHAPTER 43

A BRIEF DISCOURSE ON THE ORIGIN OF THE MANTRA-YĀNA

Now, I find some conceited people who, in spite of being full of doubts, consider themselves to be extremely ambitious. However, their muddled view of the different origin of the Mantra-yāna¹ needs to be examined.

Generally speaking, each of the Sūtras and Tantras has its respective source-book (nidāna).² Hence, the history of the Sūtras is certainly different from that of the Mantra-yāna. Let us not discuss each of these separately. Speaking in general, the Sūtras and Tantras cannot be differentiated in respect of their place, time and teacher. As to how these reached the human world, (it is to be understood) that most of the Tantras appeared simultaneously with the Mahāyāna-sūtra-s. Many of the profound Yoga and Anuttara Tantras, being separately obtained³ by the different siddhācārya-s, appeared gradually. As for example, Sri *Saraha obtained the Buddha-kapāla,⁴ *Lūi-pā obtained the Yogini-saṃcaryā,⁵ *Lva-va-pā and Saroruha obtained the Hevajra, Kṛṣṇācārya obtained the Samputa-tilaka,⁶ *Lalitavajra obtained the three parts of the Kṛṣṇa-yamāri, Gambhīravajra⁷ obtained the Vajrāmṛta,⁸ *Kukuri-pā obtained the *Mahāmāyā, *Piṭo-pā obtained the Kālacakra.⁹

Earlier, it was wrongly claimed by some that the account of the origin of the Mantra(-yāna) was contained in the

1. śāg-s-kyi-theg-pa.
2. gleñ-gshi.
3. spyān-drañs. Lit. invited.
4. sañs-rgyas-thod-pa.
5. rñal-'byor-ma-kun-spyod.
6. kha-sbyor-thig-le.
7. zab-pa'i-rdo-rje.
8. rdo-rje-bdud-rtsi.
9. dus-kyi-'khor-lo.

commentary on the Sahaja-siddhi.¹⁰ But there exists a history of the Sahaja-siddhi by the great scholar Bu-ston, who compiles in it the account available in all the commentaries¹¹ on the Sahaja-siddhi. [Fol 136B] In this he shows that these (commentaries) contain only the history of Sahaja-siddhi, but not of the Guhya-mantras in general.

‘Gos lo-lsā-ba gshon-nu-dpal,¹² though fully aware of all these, wanted to bring life into the dead issue and gave an elaborate account of the Sahaja-siddhi. Let us even assume that the farmer Padmavajra mentioned in it is the same person as *Padmavajra the Great.¹³ However, connecting on this basis the history of Sahaja-siddhi with that of Sapta-siddhi¹⁴ and presenting all these as a wonderful account of the origin of the Mantras in general is baseless and fanciful. (Both) Sahaja-siddhi and Sapta-siddhi were practised only by some of the guhya Tāntrikas. But this was not true of all. Hence it is extremely confusing to speak of their lineage alone as the lineage of Mantra(-yāna) in general.

So there must have been an amazing account of the history of the Mantra(-yāna) as such, which is not practised by the vast majority of the Tāntrikas of India and Tibet and the lineage of which cannot and should not be considered as their lineage. I say this merely as a joke.

Following this, and depending mainly on fancy, some people invent an account of the first preaching of the Mantra(-yāna) based on incomplete and incorrect citations from the *Tattva-saṃgraha*¹⁵ and the Krodha-trailokya-vijaya-nirmita-bhāṣā.¹⁶ originating from Vajracūḍā.¹⁷

Accepting such a version of the commentary on the Sahaja-

10. lhan-cig-skyes-grub-kyi-'grel-pa.

11. See Supplementary Note 97.

12. i.e. the author of The Blue Annals.

13. see BA i.363.

14. grub-pa-sīle-bdun.

15. de-nid-bsdus-pa.

16. khro-bo-khams-gsum-rnam-rgyal-sprul-bśad.

17. rdo-rje-rtse-mo.

siddhi, one has to consider wrongly king Śūravajra¹⁸ as the preceptor of *Āryadeva and to identify kumāri Sukhalalitā¹⁹ with 'the Yoginī born of the Nāgas'²⁰ and to include her in the lineage of *ārya-viṣayaka*²¹ etc. Further, identifying dākinī Subhagā²² with Matibhadrā,²³ it is baseless and empty babble to say that she belonged to the lineage of the Four Precepts.²⁴

[Fol 137A] It is well-known among the scholars that Śrī Dhānya-kaṭaka was the place where Mantra-yāna was originally preached. But what is written in the glosses by some older Tibetan scholars in defiance of this is unknown in India. To write that this place—the name of which should be known even to the foolish Tibetans—was called Saddharma-megha-viśālagāñja²⁵ is due only to a bias for what is baseless and to the tendency of placating (the older scholars). This is nothing but the way in which the fools befool other fools. Sensible persons do not take it as a serious statement at all.

The account in the commentary on the Sahaja-siddhi represents the correct tradition and its upadeśa may also contain some significance concerning all the Tantras. But why should the preachings and śāstra-s of Sahaja(-siddhi) be considered as preachings and śāstra-s of Lakṣmī²⁶ (Lakṣmīṅkarā) alone? Besides, (the commentary on) Sahaja-siddhi composed by *Dombī *Heruka enumerates seven or eight siddhi-s.

Though the traditions of these are different in both India and Tibet, there is also some similarity between these. But it is ridiculous to be misled by this similarity and proudly proclaim that the two are identical.

18. dpa'-bo'i-rdo-rje.

19. bde-ba't-rol-pa-mo.

20. cf BA i.361.

21. 'phags-skor

22. skal-ba-bzañ-mo.

23. blo-gros-bzañ-mo.

24. gdams-hag-bka'-bshi.

25. chos-bzañ-sprin-gyi-yañ-rdsoñ. V 'The Castle of the Cloud of Faith'.

26. dpal-mo.

The origin of the Mantra-yāna is to be understood on the basis of its śāstra-s and by compiling the original account coming from their traditions. All these are briefly stated in my rin-po-che'i-'byun-gnas-lta-bu'i-gtam,²⁷ which should be consulted.

Who can give a full account of all the siddha-s of the ārya-deśa! [Fol 137B] It is said that only the siddha-s of the Tārā-mantra system belonging to the period of Nāgārjuna alone numbered five thousand. The number of the followers of *Dārika-pā and Kṛṣṇācārya reaches beyond comprehension. Thus it is to be understood.

The fortythird chapter containing a brief discourse on the origin of the Mantra-yāna.

27. i.e. Ratnākara-saḍṣā-kathā.

CHAPTER 44

THE HISTORY OF IMAGE-MAKERS

In the ancient period, the human artists possessed miraculous power and their artistic creations were astounding. In the Vinaya-vastu etc, it is clearly said that the statues made and pictures drawn by them created the illusion of being the real objects. For about a hundred years after the parinirvāṇa of the Teacher, there were many artists like them.

As afterwards there was none of them any more, the celestial artists appeared in human guise and made eight wonderful images for worship in *Magadha, like those of the Mahābodhi and Mañjuśrī-dundubhīśvara.¹ The caitya-s of the eight sacred places and the inner boundary walls of Vajrāsana were built by the Yakṣa artists during the period of Aśoka and the Nāga artists built many (images) during the time of Nāgārjuna.

The (images) thus made by the Deva-s, Nāga-s and Yakṣa-s created the illusion of the real objects for many years. In the later period, under the influence of time such creations were no more and there remained practically none with the knowledge of the technique concerned.

After that, for a long time there developed the traditions of different artistic techniques depending on the individual talents of various artists. There remained no uniform tradition of the technique (of image-making).

[Fol 138A] Later on, during the period of king Buddha-pakṣa there lived an artist called *Bimbasāra, who produced the most wonderful architectural sculptures and paintings : these could be compared to those of the celestial artists of the earlier period.

Numerous artists became his followers. This artist was born in *Magadha. Therefore, the artists following his school were said to belong to the school of the madhya-deśa art, wherever they might have been born.

1. 'jam-dpal-rha-sgra. D 367—an epithet of Buddha Amoghasiddha.

During the period of king Śīla, there was an extraordinarily skilled icon-maker called *Srigadhari, who was born in the region of *Maru. He made many sculptures and paintings in the tradition of the Yakṣas, The school following his technique is known as the school of old western art.

During the time of king *Devapāla and Śrī *Dharmapāla, there lived a highly skilled artist called *Dhīmān in the *Varendra region. His son was called *Bīṭpalo. These two followed the tradition of the Nāga artists and practised various techniques like those of metal-casting, engraving and painting. The tradition of the technique of the father became different from that of the son. The son used to live in *Bhaṃgala. The cast-images made by the followers of both of them were called the eastern icons, wherever these followers might have been born.

In painting, the tradition of those that followed the father was called the tradition of eastern paintings, while those who followed the son were known as belonging to the school of the madhya-deśa painting, because this was widespread mainly in *Magadha.

In Nepal also the earlier tradition of art was similar to the old western (style of Indian art). The paintings and bell-metal castings (of Nepal) of the middle period are said to belong to the Nepalese school, though these resemble the eastern (Indian art).

No distinct (tradition) is found (in Nepal) in the later period.

[Fol 138B] In Kashmir also was followed the tradition of the early central art and of the old western [Indian] art. In the later period one called *Hasurāja introduced new technique both in sculpture and painting. It is now called the art of Kashmir.

Skilled image-makers abounded in every place wherever the Law of the Buddha flourished. In the regions that came under the influence of the mleccha-s declined the art of image-making and the regions under the influence of the tirthika-s had only inferior image-makers. That is why, practically nothing survives today of the tradition of those mentioned above.

In *Pu-khañ and southern India still thrives the tradition of image-making. But it is clear that their tradition of art did not reach Tibet in the past.

In the south, there exist numerous followers of the three, namely Jaya,² Parojaya and Vijaya.

The fortyfourth chapter containing the history of the image-makers.

[ON THE SOURCES ETC.]

The account compiled here, if well understood, will remove all the baseless and erroneous ideas. Thus, some of the highly renowned scholars of Tibet say that Nāgārjuna and others came immediately after the seven hierarchs (of the Law) of the Teacher. They think that the *Candra kings ruled shortly after king Aśoka and they claim that during the reign of the fourteen kings—namely the seven *Candras and the seven *Pālas—lived all the ācārya-s from *Saraha to *Abhayākara. But since this period was too short to allow all these to have happened and finding the periods preceding and following the ācārya-s become extremely brief, they extend the duration of the life of all [Fol 139A] and thus try to extend the period as a whole.

Now, it may be asked what the sources of this compilation are. In Tibet there exist many fragmentary narrations as well as compilations of the history of the Doctrine. But I have not seen anything chronologically complete.

I have not written anything except that which is absolutely authentic. I have gone through the work containing two thousand verses compiled by paṇḍita* Kṣemendrabhadra of *Magadha,¹ in which is narrated the history of the incidents up to the period of king Rāmapāla. Besides, I have listened to some paṇḍita teachers (of India). I have followed here mainly all these and have moreover read the work called the Buddhapurāṇa* containing one thousand and two hundred verses and composed by the Kṣatriya paṇḍita* Indradatta,² In this are exhaustively mentioned the incidents of the period up to the four *Sena kings. The account of the succession of the ācārya-s by the brāhmaṇa paṇḍita* *Bhaṭṭaḥṭi is similar in length. I have extensively used here both these works.

These three authorities are practically unanimous excepting on certain minor points related to the dates of the different

1. magac'ha'i-paṇḍita sa-dbañ-bzah-po.

2. dbañ-pos-byin.

individuals. I find them mainly describing the way in which the Law was spread in the kingdom of Aparāntaka. But I have not read or heard of any detailed account of how the Law was spread in Kashmir, *Urgyana, Thogar, south India, *Ko-ki and the smaller islands. Hence I could not write about these (in details).

The account of the different incidents of the later period (given by me) [Fol 139B] have not come down in writing. In spite of being transmitted only orally, these are authentic. I have also included here the narratives from The Garland of Flowers.

[EPILOGUE]

This pleasing garland made by suitably stitching the wonderful account with the string of simple words is being dedicated to decorate the necks of the highly intelligent persons. It is designed to invoke great reverence for those excellent persons who worked for the Law of the Jina. This will also help to differentiate the baseless works (from the correct account). This will greatly enhance the reverence for the Doctrine by helping the correct understanding of the extremely important and admirable activities of those scholars and siddha-s that upheld the Law. Its purpose is to arouse reverence for the saints and their Path and thus finally to attain Buddhahood by following the True Doctrine.

Such is the purpose of this composition. By its merit let all the living beings attain the anuttara Buddhahood following the path of the practice of virtue. Let them be decorated with merit in all forms.

COLOPHON

With the purpose of causing welfare to the living beings and on the request of some seekers of the Truth, rGyal-khams-pa Tāranātha has composed this work at the age of thirty-four¹ in the Earth-Male-Monkey year² or the Bṛhaspati year at the Brag-stod-chos-kyi-pho-brañ (The Religious Palace of Brag-stod). It is called the dGos-'dod-kun-'byuñ and contains the clear account of how the True Doctrine—the precious, the glorious and the sources of all glories—was spread in the ārya-deśa.

COLOPHON OF THE POTALA-EDITION

[Fol 140A] Let the precious Law spread in all directions for a long time. Thus was written the authentic history of Buddhism in India by the all-knowing Tāranātha of Jo-nañ. Since the printing blocks of this work were damaged and worn out at the rTag-brtan-phun-tshogs-gliñ (The Perfect and Eternally Firm Island) of Jo-nañ, in the Fire-Dog year of sixteenth rab-byuñ³ is prepared a fresh block-printing under the state management at the great printing house at Shola [i.e. the administrative section of the palace of the Dalai Lama at the base of Potala in Lhasa] by the profound desire for working for the Law and the welfare of the living beings on the part of the great *pañḍita sTag-brag, the preceptor of Śaraṇyanātha-śāsana-pālaka (i.e. the Dalai Lama). Let this bring welfare to all the living beings.

1. lo-sum-cu-so-bshi-pa.

2. i.e. A.D. 1608. Sn 'In the year 1608 or 1610, inasmuch as the chronology of the Tibetans as known through Csoma is two years in arrear of the Chinese; cf Schlaginweit BT 278'. But, thanks to the work of P. Pelliot and others, the uncertainty about Tibetan calendar is now removed—see A. Chattopadhyaya AT 563ff.

3. i.e. the year A.D. 1946.

SUPPLEMENTARY NOTES

1. THE PATRIARCHS

Przyluski's thesis (LEA 1-60) concerning the growth of the later legends about the patriarchs has some interesting light to throw on the possible sources on which Tāranātha depends particularly in the earlier chapters of his work.

As Buddhism outgrows the narrow circle of the early Magadhan communities and expands to the north-west, the need is felt for new legends to justify the authority of the new communities and the māhātmya of their new centres. The most prominent of these new centres are Mathurā and Kashmir. Mathurā is the centre of the Sarvāstivādins and Kashmir that of those who call themselves the Mūla-sarvāstivādins. The typical literary product of the monks of Mathurā is the Aśokāvadāna and the most archaic form of this, according to Przyluski, is the Aśoka-rāja-sūtra, now preserved in Chinese translation as A-yü-wang-king. The typical literary product of the monks of the north-west (Kashmir) is the Vinaya of the Mūla-sarvāstivādins (henceforth referred to as VMS).

The first point to be noted about Tāranātha's account is his total indifference to Upāli. Upāli's name occurs nowhere in his History, though, according to the Pali sources and the Vinaya of the Mahāsāṃghikas (Przy 52), Upāli is the first to be entrusted with the responsibility of the Law. As against this, both Aśokāvadāna and VMS claim that the Buddha entrusts Kāśyapa or Mahākāśyapa (who presides over the First Council) with the responsibility of the Law and that Ānanda succeeds Mahākāśyapa. Evidently, therefore, Tāranātha's account of the patriarchs—beginning as it does with Kāśyapa and Ānanda—draws on the tradition recorded in the Aśokāvadāna and VMS.

Przyluski argues that this shift of emphasis from Upāli to Ānanda is indicative of a shift of emphasis from the Vinaya to the Sūtra. In the First Council, Ānanda recites the Sūtra while Upāli the Vinaya. Thus, Ānanda is the first of the bahu-śruta-s, Upāli the first of the śīla-dhara-s (Przy 54). This difference between the traditions of the bahu-śruta-s and śīla-dhara-s becomes one of basic importance for the subsequent history of Buddhism. The Aśokāvadāna—therefore, the Mathurā school of the Sarvāstivādins—strongly champions the former. Hence is the importance attributed in it to Ānanda and this to the exclusion of Upāli. Further, the same work describes the Buddha as first going to Mathurā and then to Kashmir, and this as accompanied by Ānanda. As accompanied by Upagupta, again, Aśoka is described in the Aśokāvadāna as making the grandest offering to the stūpa of Ānanda. All these are indicative of how Ānanda, Upagupta and the region of Mathurā are glorified in the Aśokāvadāna. But the devotion to Ānanda is probably more fervent during the Mathurā phase than during the Kashmirian period (Przy 29). Thus the Mūla-sarvāstivādins of Kashmir—also champions of the tradition of the bahu-śruta-s—show the tendency of pushing Ānanda to the background, inasmuch as the VMS describes the Buddha making journey to Mathurā and Kashmir accompanied by Yakṣa Vajrapāṇi instead of Ānanda.

From this point of view, Tāranātha's glorification of Ānanda is indicative of the influence of the Mathurā school. This is further indicated by his account of the conversion of Upagupta by Śāṇavāsika, also an apostle of Mathurā. By contrast, VMS attributes this conversion to Madhyāntika, the apostle of Kashmir, (though, notes Przulski, the text contradicts itself by also quoting a prophecy concerning the conversion of Upagupta by Śāṇavāsika : Przy 4). At the same time, Tāranātha's account of the conversion of Kashmir by Madhyāntika is fully in accord with the tradition recorded in the VMS.

Tāranātha disapproves of the view of including Madhyāntika in the list of the hierarchs and admits of only seven in the line of succession. The tradition of admitting only seven hierarchs accepted by Tāranātha occurs in the Vinaya-kṣudraka, which is also quoted by Bu-ston ii.108 : 'Kāśyapa, Ānanda, Śāṇavāsika, Upagupta, Dhītika, Kṛṣṇa and Mahāsudarśana—these are the seven hierarchs.' This is exactly the list of the VMS only with this difference that the VMS adds Madhyāntika to it.

Interestingly, the Aśokāvadāna, which from the point of view of Przyluski's argument need not show any special zeal of including Madhyāntika in the list of the hierarchs, does include him: where it differs from the VMS is that it is yet to add to the list the names of Kṛṣṇa and Mahāsudarśana. These two names are perhaps later added by the monks of Kashmir, particularly because of Sudarśana's connection with Kaniška (Tār Föl 31A, Przy 53).

Though the list of the seven hierarchs given in the Vinaya-kṣudraka seems to acquire decisive authority for the Tibetan scholars, Bu-ston ii.108, true to his great erudition in the later Buddhist literature, goes on quoting other sources on the patriarchs, showing thereby that some of these sources vitally differ in enumerating the names of the patriarchs—a circumstance which by itself is indicative of these lists being the results of after-thought prompted largely by the later and local needs—but indicating further the more striking point that according to some of these sources the later custodians of the Law are definitely considered as exercising authority only in certain restricted regions. Thus Bu-ston ii.109: 'It is said in the Mahākaruṇā-puṇḍarika in answer to the question, "Who is to be the guardian of the Doctrine after the Teacher has passed away?",—"Oh Ānanda, the monk Kāśyapa and thyself, ye two are to guard the Highest Doctrine for 40 years and more. Then, in the city of Mathurā on the mountains Gandhamādana and Mahāpārśva, in the grove called Paṅkavatī, there is to appear the monk Ślaṅavāsa, and, in the same place, the monk Nandin. —On the mountain Uśīra, there are to appear 44,000 monks. In the city of Pāṭaliputra, in the Mārgārāma, there will be a monk called Aśvagupta and, in the same city, in the grove of the ducks, the monk called Uttara. —In the country of Aṅga, during the five years' feast, 13,000 Arhats are to arise. —In the city of Suvarṇadroṇa, two monks called Vijña and Sañjaya, in the city of Sāketana—the monk Mahāvīrya, and on the northern border-land of Gandhāra—the monk Kāśyapa, are to appear. All these monks are to be greatly renowned for their miraculous achievements, their great power of faculties... These are to be the propagators of my Teaching.”

Modern scholars are on the whole inclined to view the later legends of the hierarchs exercising an overall authority on the later Buddhist communities as being without any historical foundation (see N. Dutt AMB 16ff and Przuluski 1-60 in particular). ‘It should be observed,’ remarks N. Dutt, ‘that though the Theravādins speak of the line of disciples (ācariya-paramparā) from Upāli to Sāriputta, there is no idea of patriarchal succession. In the Majjhima Nikāya it is expressly stated that in the Buddhist Saṃgha there is no recognised head. The Tibetan and Chinese traditions have, in fact, given currency to the idea of patriarchal succession.’ Observes Przuluski (p.50), ‘Kern has shown in his History of Buddhism that the lists of patriarchs contradict one another.’ There is ‘no common element in this matter’ in the Sinhalese tradition and in the traditions recorded in the works translated into Chinese and Tibetan. For this and other reasons Kern suspects ‘the lists of patriarchs and regards these as apocryphal.’ Przuluski adds, ‘One may go further ; it is doubtful that at any time after the Nirvāṇa of the Buddha the authority of a single savant had been recognised by all the Buddhists together. This happens to throw doubt on the very existence of the patriarchate.’

Nevertheless, as Przuluski says, the study of the later legends of the patriarchs is not without its own interest, for these have light to throw on ‘the real tendencies of the important rival communities, namely the Sthaviras, the Sarvāstivādins and the Mahāsāṃghikas.’

Here is how Przuluski (p.52f) sums up the different accounts of succession that we come across in the different sources :

Works written in Pali : Upāli, Dāsaka, Sonaka, Siggava, Candavajji, Tissa, Moggaliputta. (‘The series continues after the conversion of Ceylon’).

Vinaya of the Mahāsāṃghikas : the first five savants are—Upāli, Dāsabala, Jyotidarśa(?), Jita(?), Sense-protected (? Indriya-rakṣita).

Aśokāvādāna : Mahākāśyapa, Ānanda, Śāṇavāsa and Madhyāntika, Upagupta and Dhītika.

VMS : Mahākāśyapa, Ānanda, Śāṇika and Madhyāntika, Upagupta, Dhītika, Kṛṣṇa and Sudarśana.

Fu-fa-tsang-yin-yuen-king (Nanjio 1340 : a work that 'belongs undoubtedly to the Sarvāstivādin group'—Przy 53) enumerates 23 patriarchs, beginning with the list of the Aśokāvadāna, though omitting Madhyāntika.

Thus, while the lists of the Sthaviraṣ and Mahāsāṃghikas begin with Upāli and Dāsaka, those of the Sarvāstivādins begin with Mahākāśyapa and Ānanda. Przulski (p. 54) argues that of these two lists, the second is earlier, because all the accounts of the First Council—inclusive of those of the Sthaviraṣ and Mahāsāṃghikas—mention Kāśyapa and not Upāli as presiding over the Council. Thus, the first tendency to formulate a definite list of patriarchs manifests itself among the Sarvāstivādins.

Now, Śāṇavāsa is the apostle of Mathurā ; Madhyāntika is the ascetic who converts Kashmir. Both were extolled among communities of the west and it had to be early acknowledged that they were the disciples of Ānanda' (Przy 55.) This becomes the pattern of the entire western communities. Upagupta being the immediate disciple of Śāṇavāsika, the spiritual family of Ānanda is formulated as follows :

Ānanda succeeded by Śāṇavāsa and Madhyāntika and Śāṇavāsa succeeded by Upagupta.

'The bifurcation of the genealogical line after Ānanda was an inconvenient complication.' This is sought to be solved by 'the process of arbitrary simplification.' Thus, the author of the Aśokāvadāna, failing to separate Śāṇavāsa and Upagupta (both monks of the Naṭa-bhaṭa monastery), is obliged to narrate the life of Madhyāntika before Śāṇavāsa, violating thereby 'the chronological order', since 'the conversion of Madhyāntika is posterior to the entry of Śāṇavāsa into the faith'. The author of the Fu-fa-tsang-yin-yuen-king solves the problem by simply dropping the name of Madhyāntika.

'The History of Tāranātha,' observes Przulski (p.56), 'is more complex and hence more instructive. The Tibetan chronicler who appears to have had access to diverse sources endeavours sometimes to notice the synchronism of events.' While 'following the development of Buddhism in the west, Tāranātha does not lose sight of the eastern communities.' Thus, on the one hand he follows the series of the Sarvāstivādins (Mahākāśyapa, Ānanda, Śāṇavāsika, Upagupta, Dhītika), while on the other hand he 'informs us that king Mahendra and his son Camasa reigned in the country of Aparāntaka during the partiarchate of Upagupta, and during the same epoch Arhat Uttara lived in the east. The inhabitants of Bagala built the monastery of Kukkuṭārāma for the latter, and the greatest disciple of Uttara was Arhat Yaśas.'

Now, according to the Pali Cullavagga, among the monks that sat in the Second Council (of Vaiśālī) are Sabbakāma, Uttara, Śāṇavāsī and Yaśas. Further a story of the Second Council—which, according to Przyluski (p. 57) was somehow 'inserted' into the VMS but which nevertheless includes 'archaic fragments anterior to the... very formation of Sarvāstivādin group'—mentions that 'at the time of the Council of Vaiśālī, Yaśas had as his teacher Sarvakāma, who himself was a disciple of Ānanda. During the same time, the ascetic Uttara lived in the town of Lieu-chuan (Śrughna). (Przy 56)

From these evidences Przyluski concludes that 'Madhyāntika at Kashmir, Śāṇavāsa and Upagupta at Mathurā, and Uttara, Sarvakāma and Yaśas in the east, were all personages pretty nearly contemporary (Przy 56).' Of these, Madhyāntika, Śāṇavāsa and Upagupta are the heads of the Western Church; Sarvakāma, Uttara and Yaśas are the heads of the Eastern Church. The authors wanting to glorify the Western Church are the first to draw up for this purpose a rigid list of patriarchs by totally eliminating the heads of the Eastern Church.

From the point of view of this argument we have to conclude that though Tāranātha is fully aware of the developments in the eastern region evidently on the basis of some other tradition (see Supplementary Note 2: on the possible implications of Tār's reliance on the Śrāvaka-piṭakas and Kṣemendra's works), when it comes to the question of formulating the list of the patriarchs he wants to subscribe to the tradition recorded in the Aśokāvadāna and the VMS and at the same time, for reasons not yet clear to us, drops the name of Madhyāntika from the list.

2. THE AŚOKA LEGENDS

'We are yet in the dark', remarks N. Dutt (AMB 19) 'about the part played by Aśoka in the propagation of Buddhism... Throughout his exhortations, so far as they have been found in the Edicts, there is not the slightest hint of his actively helping the propagation of Buddhism. His Edicts refer to the dharmavijaya as opposed to conquest by arms, but by dhamma he does not mean Buddhism. His dhamma consisted of maxims for leading an ideal life and performing meritorious acts which make a person happy in this world as well as the next. The Edicts do not contain a single reference to Nirvāṇa or Śūnyatā, Anātma or Duḥkha, while on the other hand they speak of heaven, and happiness in a heavenly life, which was never an ideal of early Buddhism, for it considered existence in any of the three dhātus, Kāma, Rūpa and Arūpa, to be misery (duḥkha).'

It is difficult to overlook the main point of this argument, however much violently it may go against the usually accepted idea of Aśoka being a committed Buddhist [see e.g. Vincent A. Smith in ERE ii.125f]. At the same time, without admitting Aśoka's patronage of Buddhism in some form or other, it is impossible to explain the tremendous enthusiasm with which the later Buddhists wanted to look back at him. This is not denied by N. Dutt. 'But it must be admitted,' he continues, 'that when an emperor like Aśoka shows a bias for a particular religion and even proclaims himself to be a Buddhist upāsaka and pays visits to the monasteries or sacred places of the Buddhists, the religion automatically receives an impulse, and its propagation by the Buddhist monks then becomes easy. So we may regard Aśoka as a passive propagator of Buddhism, and, during his rule, the religion probably made its way throughout his kingdom, also reaching places beyond his dominion.' (AMB 19-20).

The result was the fabrication by the later Buddhists of an enormous mass of legends about Aśoka. These legends became all the more complicated, because the later Buddhists—themselves divided into different sects and having their centres in different regions—went on spinning these often with the specific purpose of glorifying their own centres with little scruple for history and sometimes even reckless of the question of internal consistency of these legends.

One has only to glance through the travel-notes of the famous Chinese pilgrims—Fa-hien, Yuan-chuang and I-Tsing—to see how the country became eventually full of legends concerning Aśoka. Nothing was too extravagantly fanciful—too quaint or too grotesque—to their authors, so long as these served their basic purpose of glorifying the Doctrine by way of glorifying its great patron.

Like these Chinese pilgrims, Tāranātha himself is a devout follower of later Buddhism and, therefore, is expected to show no more critical attitude to these legends than the Chinese pilgrims. Nevertheless, Tāranātha is also confronted with a special problem. The Chinese pilgrims recall these legends piecemeal, usually in connection with what is shown to them as the monuments built by Aśoka in the different parts of the country. They have therefore no problem of bringing all these into a systematic or orderly form. For Tāranātha, however, it is quite different. A history of Buddhism in India is evidently inconceivable for him without a substantial account of Aśoka. At the same time he finds himself confronted with an enormous mass of the legends about Aśoka, which he has to retell in a brief chapter and at least with some semblance to a logical sequence. For this purpose, he has got to be selective ; he has to rely more on some of the sources and reject some others.

What interests us in particular about his account of Aśoka, therefore, is the question of his sources for it.

Unlike most of his other chapters, the one on Aśoka is concluded by Tāranātha with the enumeration of the main sources on which it is based. These are :

- 1) the Avadāna texts,
- 2) a historical work (now lost to us) by sa-dbañ-bzañ-po,
- 3) the Kalpalatā and
- 4) the Śrāvaka-piṭakas.

Sa-dbañ-bzañ-po is usually taken as the Tibetan form of the name of the celebrated Kashmirian writer Kṣemendrabhadra who lived in the 11th century, though there are some difficulties about this identification. Thus,

i) Tāranātha himself knew his sa-dbañ-bzañ-po as a paṇḍita of Magadha (Fol 139A).

ii) the Indian equivalents of sa-dbañ-bzañ-po given in Tg are Mahīndrabhadra or Bhūmīndrabhadra, which also better correspond to the literal meaning of the name given in Tibetan [see our note 36 of Ch 4].

iii) the Tibetan equivalent given in Tg of Kṣemendra's name is dge-ba'i-dbañ-po (and not sa-dbañ-bzañ-po) [see our note 60 of Ch 6].

Przyluski himself does not note these difficulties and argues, 'The historical work of Kṣemendra mentioned by Tāranātha has not come down to us for all we know. But there cannot have been any doubt regarding the identity of its author. He is the celebrated Kashmirian writer who lived in the eleventh century' (Przy LEA 103).

The work referred to as the Kalpalatā is taken by Przyluski to be the Avadāna-kalpalatā by the same Kṣemendra and on which Tāranātha evidently depends for certain features of the Aśoka legends.

Przyluski argues that since Tāranātha depends so much on Kṣemendra for his version of the Aśoka legends, the general tendency of Kṣemendra himself has some important light to throw on Tāranātha's account of Aśoka, and though Kṣemendra's major historical work (presumably containing a full biography of Aśoka) is lost to us, Kṣemendra's general tendency can be well-judged from his surviving work, namely the Avadāna-kalpalatā. 'Drawing heavily from earlier literature, he had never any scruple about mixing up heterogeneous traditions. Pallavas 70-72 of the Avadāna-kalpalatā referring to Śāṇvāsa, Madhyāntika and Upagupta, appear to be inspired by the section on the lives of the saints in the Aśokāvadāna while the next two Pallavas are borrowed from quite a different redaction of the Aśoka-legend. Written in the north-western region of India during an epoch when Buddhism was in full decadence, the Avadāna-kalpalatā is the meeting ground of two traditions. With a biography of Aśoka drawn from a canonical text it mixes a number of narratives inspired by the Aśokāvadāna. Similarly, in the body of Tāranātha's comparatively modern account we can point through the medium of Kṣemendra, to a class of much earlier writings.' (Prz. 108-9)

But what is the significance of Tāranātha's reference to the Śrāvaka-piṭakas? Przulski answers: 'Just as a section of the Aśokāvadāna has ultimately been incorporated into the Samyuk-tāgama of the Sarvāstivādins, it is possible that another redaction of the Aśoka-legend—the same that Tāranātha summarises—has been inserted into the canon of another sect. This is what the reference to the Śrāvaka-piṭakas appears to imply.' (p. 108). What, then, was this 'other sect'? Przulski thinks that it had presumably its centre in Campā or the eastern regions between Magadha and the sea (p. 112), for certain peculiarities of the Aśoka-legends as told by Tāranātha show a preference for this region.

To sum up Przulski's argument (pp. 112 & 123): The stories forming the Cycle of Aśoka-legends were originally elaborated by the Buddhist communities in the neighbourhood of Pāṭaliputra. From there it spread to two opposite directions, viz. a) towards the west, taking roots first at Kauśāmbi (the centre of the Sthaviras) and then at Mathurā (the centre of the Sarvāstivādins) and finally in Kashmir (the centre of the Mūla-sarvāstivādins) ; and 2) towards the east in the region between Magadha and the sea, near Campā ; 'it was there enriched by new elements from the folk-lore of the neighbouring provinces... it has been incorporated into the canon of the local sects [Śrāvaka-piṭaka-s] and transferred afterwards to Kashmir where it was set in verse by Kṣemendra.' (p. 112).

Drawing heavily as he does on the Śrāvaka-piṭakas and on Kṣemendra's work, though at the same time relying on the Aśokāvadāna, Tāranātha gives us a conglomeration of the Aśoka-legends that developed differently in the different regions. Thus, Tāranātha's version of 1) the youth of Aśoka, 2) his conversion, 3) subduing the Nāgas, 4) erection of the stūpa-s, 5) conveying the assembly of the monks and 6) offerings to the saṃgha-s 'correspond in spite of acute differences to chapters 1, 2, 3 and 6' of the Chinese translation of the Aśokarāja-sūtra (which, according to Przyluski, contains the Aśoka-legends in their earliest forms). At the same time, in Tāranātha's account arhat Yaśas 'belongs to the basic framework of the legend', while Piṇḍola and Upagupta, the saints specially eulogised by the monks of Kauśāmbī and Mathurā respectively, are conspicuously absent : Tāranātha nowhere mentions the name of Piṇḍola and he speaks of no connection between Aśoka and Upagupta, though the writers of Mathurā are specially anxious to emphasise such a connection. (Prz. 69).

In the following characteristics also, the Aśoka-legends of Tāranātha show a decisive influence of the eastern regions (i.e. derived from the Śrāvaka-piṭakas of Campā). Thus : a) Tāranātha says that Aśoka was the son of a king of Campā, 'a singularly audacious alteration of historical truth' which 'could have been imagined only by a story-teller belonging to a country east of Magadha' (p. 111). Again, though according to the Aśokāvadāna, Aśoka subdues during his youth the Khasas and the country of Takṣaśīlā, in Tāranātha's narrative he subdues the Khasas and the people of Nepal, here too the tradition deviating towards the east.

At the same time, argues Przyluski, such eastern elements introduced by Tāranātha into his account of Aśoka are indicative of a more developed form of the Aśoka-legends. Thus, while in the Aśokāvadāna the Nāga kings of Rāmagrāma do not oblige Aśoka by allowing him to take the relics of the Buddha, in Tāranātha's work the account of subduing the Nāgas is elaborately told and the gradual progress of Aśoka's power fully illustrated. To begin with, Aśoka is the master only of the region between the Vindhya and the Himālayas without any control over the Nāgas. 'But his power increases along with his merits and he finishes by bringing under his subjection the whole universe including the Nāga kings of the ocean Judged by the versions of Tāranātha and the Avadāna-kalpalatā, the legend inserted in the Śrāvaka-piṭakas is thus more developed than that of the Aśoka-sūtra' (Przy. 110).

C. D. Chatterjee (in JAIH i. 114f) comes out rather sharply against Przyłuski's thesis that the earliest form of the Aśoka-legends is to be found in the Aśoka-rāja-sūtra (which survives for us only in a Chinese translation : A-yü-wang-king). On the contrary, argues Chatterjee, the tendency to fabricate such legends finds its earliest expression in the Kalpanāmaṇḍitikā of Kumāralāta (c. A. D. 150), the founder of the Sautrāntika school and a native of Takṣaśilā. The author of the Aśoka-rāja-sūtra presumably collected the Aśoka-legends from Kumāralāta's work. But 'the legends of emperor Aśoka, as recorded in both these works are so fantastic and imaginary (kalpanāmaṇḍita) that they are far away from the bonds of sober history. Aśoka-legends also appear in certain Pali chronicles and commentaries composed in Ceylon ; but they are not so obviously fabricated and preposterous as we find them in the Avadāna texts composed in Sanskrit'. (ib.) 'Such fabricated stories in the Avadāna texts, as also in the Kalpanāmaṇḍitikā, only tends to show that the evolution of Aśokan legends, as delineated in them, took place at a period that is far remote from the time of the ruler, to which they relate' (ib. 126).

3. 'TEN PROHIBITIONS' AND THE SECOND COUNCIL

According to the Pali Cullavagga (xii.1.1 ; Eng. tr SBE xx.386f), the Ten Prohibitions violated by the monks of Vaiśālī are : 1) carrying salt in a horn, 2) taking meals when the shadow is two fingers broad, 3) going to another village and taking a second meal there, 4) observance of the uposatha ceremonies in various places in the same parish, 5) obtaining sanction for a deed after it is done, 7) drinking butter-milk after meals, 8) drinking toddy, 9) using a rug without a fringe and 10) acceptance of gold or silver.

According to the Vinaya-kṣudraka (quoted by Bu-ston ii.91), these are : 1) exclamation of astonishment (aho !), 2) rejoicing, 3) digging ground, 4) using the sacred salt, 5) eating on the way, 6) taking the food with two fingers, 7) eating not at due time, 8) taking intoxicating drink, 9) making a new rug without stitching to it a patch of an old one and 10) begging for gold or silver.

Vasil'ev gives another list from the Chinese translation of the Vinaya of the Mahīśāsakas. cf also BA i.24.

But whatever might have been the actual list of these prohibitions, there are grounds to think that by violating these the Vaiśālī monks were working for their material prosperity. As it is said in the Vinaya-kṣudraka, 'And from the city of Dhanika there came an arhat called Yaśas with five hundred attendants who had made a turn through the country. Having arrived at Vaiśālī, they found that the monks had a large income, and they themselves obtained a great share. Having asked the reason of this, they came to know that the ten prohibited points were admitted'. (quoted by Bu-ston ii.91).

Connected with these Ten Prohibitions is the question of the Second Council. Bu-ston ii.95-6 asserts that the alms-giver of this Second Council was the pious king Aśoka (mya-nan-med), that it took place after 100 years of the Buddha's nirvāṇa with the aim of the exclusion of the ten inadmissible points, and that it was the Council of 700 arhat-s mobilised mainly by Yaśas and culminating in the expulsion of the Vaiśālī monks. Tāranātha's account of the Second Council agrees with all these excepting one vital point. Tāranātha asserts that the Second Council was organised 'at the Kusumapurī-vihāra under the patronage of king Nanda (dga'-byed), a Licchavi by birth' (Fol 22A). Thus, both Bu-ston and Tāranātha are referring to the same Council, though, according to the former, its patron was Aśoka, while, according to the latter, a Licchavi king called Nanda or dga'-byed.

Vasil'ev, therefore, asks in the note : Could this word dga'-byed be a Tibetan translation of Piyadasī ? In other words, he suggests the possibility of construing from the Tibetan form in which the name is given by Tāranātha an epithet of Aśoka, so that the discrepancy between the two accounts is somehow or other removed. But the problem is not so easily solved, for Tāranātha also asserts that this dga'-byed is Licchavi by birth.

In the statement of Tāranātha, therefore, Kern sees only a tissue of errors (see Filliozat SAI 6), moreover because, as Kern thinks, by the Kusumapurī-vihāra is to be understood Kusumapura or the town of Pāṭaliputra, where the Ceylonese sources place the Third Council.

However, Filliozat argues that this is misunderstanding the real point of Tāranātha. As a matter of fact, the problem of the Second Council is connected with that of the two Aśokas and hence also with the two chronologies. 'The longer one, that of the Pali tradition, places the Second of the Great Councils under the first Aśoka, Kālāśoka, at Vaiśālī, one hundred years after the death of the Buddha, and the Third of the Great Councils at Pāṭaliputra under the second Aśoka [Aśoka Maurya], two hundred and thirtysix years after the death of the Buddha. The shorter chronology, in its most well-known form, places a Council at Vaiśālī or at Pāṭaliputra a hundred years after the death of the Buddha under a unique Aśoka.'

In the background of this, Filliozat proposes to understand the real significance of the statement of Tāranātha : 'Tāranātha is perfectly in accord with the Sinhalese sources in stating that at the time of the Second Council, the reigning king at Pāṭali-putra was a Licchavi. The Vaṃsaṭṭhappakāsini, commenting on the Mahāvamsa iv.6, in fact calls Kālāśoka, who was reigning at Pāṭali-putra (cf Mahāvamsa iv.31), the son of Susunāga of the Licchavi family. From the outset one must ask if Nandin (ḍga'-byed) of Tāranātha should not be identified with Kālāśoka. Bu-ston had spoken of Aśoka, while Tāranātha has given the Tibetan equivalent of Nandin, and on the other hand nandin, or The Happy One, is the synonym of Aśoka, "without chagrin". Tāranātha, far from furnishing an aberrant fact, thus corresponds well with the Pali sources. We have already remarked that to the Kālāśoka of the Pali sources, corresponds, in the Aśokāvadāna, Kākavarṇin, whose name is a synonym of Kāla, since it means "the colour of a crow", whereas kāla signifies "black". In Tāranātha we simply find a synonym of the other part of the name of Kālāśoka. Kālāśoka is the same as Kākavarṇin and Nandin at the same time, and Tāranātha, who simultaneously knew both Nandin and Aśoka Maurya, thus knew, as did the Pali sources, two Aśokas, Kālāśoka and Aśoka Maurya. The distinction between these two Aśokas does not have to be a fallacious doubling by the Pali tradition of Theravāda of a single Aśoka. From this it follows that the hypothesis of the real existence of two Councils under these two kings becomes now considerably reinforced, and it will have to be admitted that the sources that knew only one of these kings and councils are those which are in error.' (Filliozat SAI 6-7).

Such a solution of the problem, however, leaves a number of points unexplained. First, Tāranātha shows no awareness at all of any Council having been convened under the patronage of the pious king Aśoka or Aśoka Maurya. Instead of that, he passes on to the account of the Third Council held under the patronage of king Kaṇiṣka (Fol 31ff). Secondly, Tāranātha himself is fully aware of the difficulties of the two chronologies connected with the question of the Second Council and he tries to solve the problem at best with some questionable success (Fol 22Bf) : the suggestion of counting a half year as one year and the pedantic discussion on the meaning of the word yadācit. Thirdly, the sources like Mahāvamsa with which Tāranātha is alleged to agree mention the venue of the Second Council as Vālukārāma and not Kūsumapurī-vihāra. And so on.

In view of these difficulties, therefore, it appears to be safer to think that Tāranātha, being a very late compiler of the Buddhist legends, allows various traditions to get mixed up in his account, though he tries somehow or other to evolve a rationalised version of the Second Council out of these. In this circumstance, instead of either summarily discarding Tāranātha's version of the Second Council as fanciful (Kern) or of fully defending it (Filliozat), we can perhaps try to understand the peculiar problem with which Tāranātha finds himself confronted. This is best done by recalling the different traditions of the Second Council as recorded in the different Buddhist sources. Vallée Poussin in ERE iv. 183 sums these up :

'According to a tradition fully developed in Cullavagga xii and common at least to several sects, there was held in the year 100 or 110 after the nirvāṇa a Council to examine and condemn ten extra-legal practices of the monks of Vaiśālī'. Cullavagga gives the date as 100 years after the Buddha's nirvāṇa ; but it is completely silent about the reigning king and also about any subsequent Council. According to the tradition of the Mahīśāsakas, Dharmaguptikas and Sarvāstivādins, the Council took place 110 years after the nirvāṇa, though these traditions also are equally silent about the reigning king and about any subsequent Council. Fa-hien and Yuan-chuang (see Watters ii. 73ff) also mention the time of the Vaiśālī Council as 110 years after the nirvāṇa. Thus, Bu-ston's date of 100 years after the nirvāṇa agrees more with the tradition recorded in the Cullavagga, while Tāranātha's date of 110 years agrees more with the other traditions.

'Pali later sources (Sinhalese sources) know the name of the sovereign, Kālāśoka, and they add that the Vesālian schismatics (Vajjiputtakas) in their turn held a Council, the Great Assembly, whence issued the sect Mahāsāṃghika, "of the great assembly",—while the Mahāsāṃghikas are said by other sources to maintain that this Great Assembly was held immediately after the Rājagṛha Council.'

Incidentally, Tāranātha does not speak of the Great Assembly convened by the expelled monks of Vaiśālī and Watters ii. 76-7 comments: 'Very little is told in any treatise about the effect of the Council's action on the Sinning Brethren, but we are left to infer that they submitted to authority and returned to orthodox practices. There is nothing whatever to indicate that they seceded and formed a great sect or school.'

Vasumitra, the famous author of the treatise on the sects, asserts that 100 years after the nirvāṇa, a Council was held in Pāṭaliputra under the patronage of Aśoka; but the agenda of this Council was the consideration of 'the five points' of Mahādeva and Bhadra and that this 'Council resulted in the division between the Church and the Mahāsāṃghika sect.'

Bhavya relates the tradition of the Sammitīyas that a Council was held 137 years after the nirvāṇa at Pāṭaliputra under the patronage of kings Nanda and Mahāpadma (to consider the 'five points'). According to the same authority the Sthaviras say that a Council was held 160 years after the nirvāṇa at Pāṭaliputra under the patronage of Aśoka to consider certain controversial questions and that it resulted in the Mahāsāṃghika schism.

Tāranātha, however, does not at all connect the Second Council with the 'five points' of Mahādeva and Bhadra. According to him, the confusion created by these 'five points' were cleared up in the Third Council held under the patronage of king Kaṇṣka.

'Sinhalese sources: a Council in A. B. (After Buddha) 236 at Pāṭaliputra under Aśoka (Dharmāśoka), which proclaimed the orthodoxy of the Vibhajjavāda ('doctrine of the distinction') to which belongs the Pali or Sinhalese Church and authenticated the last of the Pali Abhidhamma treatises, the Kathāvattu.'

On the basis of the above, Vallée Poussin proposes to reach the following conclusions :

1. Though the Sinhalese sources identify the Vaiśālī monks expelled by the Second Council with those that founded the Mahāsāṃghika sect, there is no evidence in favour of this identification. Other sects claim that the Mahāsāṃghikas originated out of the dispute over 'the five points' and it is certain that 'they admitted the five points'. The Mahāsāṃghikas themselves claim their sect to be ancient and orthodox.

2. 'There was a tradition of the Veśālin Council on Ten Points ; date uncertain, no mention of king.'

3. There was also a 'tradition of a council on "some controverted question" more precisely on "five points" ; date uncertain and probably no mention of king.'

4. In spite of the claim of the monks of Ceylon that their Kathāvattu is an ancient text 'preached mysteriously by the Buddha,' the text is actually comparatively modern.

5. Because Aśoka was viewed later as the second mover of the Dharma-cakra, it was natural to try to place all the important events concerning the history of Buddhism as taking place under him. The later monks did this. They were also eager to describe Pāṭaliputra as the place of the meetings. 'Our northern documents are scanty and conflicting, but they give the impression that there was no certain tradition of the date of Aśoka : 100, 110, 137 or 160 After Buddha are figures out of which no chronology can be extracted.'

6. 'Sinhalese tradition places the Vaiśālī Council in 100 (after Nirvāṇa) under Kālāśoka and the Pāṭaliputra Council in 236 under Dharmāśoka. Besides the "northern" figures for Aśoka (100, 110, 137, 160 years after Nirvāṇa), there was a fourth figure 237 After Buddha (17 or 19 years after his coronation in 217, 219 After Buddha). We are not concerned with the question whether these were fanciful or traditional computations. In fact, the authors of the ecclesiastical history "concocted" in Ceylon admitted this figure without troubling themselves very much to adjust it to some other chronological details of their own ; and as they maintained the canonic date of Vaiṣāli and were at a loss to name the sovereign reigning in 100 After Buddha, they imagined a Black Aśoka (Kālāśoka)—a mere idolum libri.'

4. TIṢYARAKSITĀ AND THE KUṆĀLA LEGEND

Though this legend of the erotic attachment of Tiṣyarakṣitā or Tiṣyarakṣā for Kuṇāla is persistently told in the Avadāna texts, C. D. Chatterjee in JAIH i. 125f draws our attention to a completely different version of the story of Tiṣyarakṣā as preserved in the Mahāvamśa: 'It tells us that the wicked Tiṣyarakṣā, who was the last chief queen of Aśoka, grew impatient at her husband's paying regular visits to the Bodhi-tree and lavishly spending money for its worship and also at the bestowal of the costliest gifts upon it on these occasions. Being of perverted mentality, she began to compare in her mind how much her husband was spending on the Bodhi-tree and how much on her. Thus, torturing herself in her own mind, she became extremely jealous of that sacred tree and conspired with some officers, who were loyal to her, for its destruction. The Bodhi-tree undoubtedly showed signs of withering away because of the mischief done, but was resuscitated after some time through the mystic power of some members of the Saṃgha.' In the Avadāna texts, by contrast, 'Tiṣyarakṣitā's traditional wickedness has been sought to be proved... by representing her as a notorious woman given to sensual pleasure, who, failing to get any response from her stepson for her illicit love, ultimately got him blinded in taking revenge'.

Cf also G. M. Bongard-Levin & O. F. Volkova, The Kuṇāla Legend p. 6 for another version of the legend given by the Jaina poet Hemacandra: 'The legend of Kuṇāla is presented in quite a different light in the Jain tradition reflected in Hemacandra's work, the Pariśiṣṭaparvan. First, there is no mention of Tiṣyarakṣitā, one of the main characters of the legend, who is present in all the versions of the legend cycle known to us. Instead of the passionate and insidious Tiṣyarakṣitā, who took revenge on Kuṇāla for her rejected love, Hemacandra mentions only one of Aśoka's wives, who blinded Kuṇāla with the help of forgery in order to assert the right of her son to the throne. It shows that the basic conflict—the clash between Tiṣyarakṣitā and Kuṇāla rejecting her love—which can be traced throughout all the versions of the legend, acquires quite a different aspect with Hemacandra: Kuṇāla is presented as an eight-year old child and the conflict is caused not by amorous passion but by the desire of one of the king's wives to make her son the heir to the throne instead of Kuṇāla. Hemacandra's narration of the legend seems to fall into two parts: 1) the blinding of Kuṇāla and the sending of his rival—the queen's son—to Ujjain; 2) the birth of Kuṇāla's son, Kuṇāla's wanderings, his coming to Pāṭaliputra and the appointment of Kuṇāla's son—Samprati—the heir to the throne. In the Pariśiṣṭaparvan, Takṣaśilā—the principal scene of action in the legend—is not even mentioned. Nothing is said about the rebellion. Ujjain, the capital of north-western India, and not Takṣaśilā, occupies the central place in the story. According to Hemacandra, Kuṇāla was brought up there. The king's forged order to blind Kuṇāla was sent to Ujjain. From Ujjain, the blind Kuṇāla set out for the capital of the empire... All this makes it possible to suppose that in his version of the legend, Hemacandra relied not on the northern versions of the legend, which served as the basis for Divyāvadāna, Kṣemendra and Tāranātha, but on some other—probably southern—version, which, unfortunately has not reached us. Hemacandra does not mention the episode of the restoration of Kuṇāla's eyesight as the reward for his virtuous behaviour. Another thing was more important for the Jaina chronicler: to show how Samprati (who, according to the Jain tradition, was a zealous follower of Jainism) made his way to the throne... In the sources of the northern Buddhist tradition Kuṇāla is described as an object of the action of karma, as an embodiment of Buddhist virtue and as a true follower of Buddhist dhamma ; in the Jain Parīṣiṣṭaparvan the plot develops more vigorously : there are no homilies on Buddhist morals and more room is allotted to the story of how the blinded Kuṇāla was unable to become the heir to the throne and how Samprati became heir in his place. That is why Hemacandra does not describe how eyesight was restored to Kuṇāla'.

5. MAHĀDEVA AND HIS 'FIVE PRINCIPLES'

Watters i.267-270 : 'According to the Abhidharma work, Mahādeva was the son of a Brhāmin merchant of Mathurā. While still a very young man, he took advantage of his father's prolonged absence from home on business and formed an incestuous connection with his mother. When his father returned, Mahādeva murdered him, and soon afterwards he fled with his mother. Finding that a Buddhist arhat had an inconvenient knowledge of his guilty life, he promptly killed the arhat. Then finding that his mother was not true to him, he murdered her also. By thus taking the lives of his parents and an arhat, he had committed three unpardonable offences ; in the technical language of Buddhism he had "made three immediate karma-s", three ānantarya karma-s. Stung by conscience and haunted by fear, he now skulked from place to place until he reached Pāṭaliputra. Here he resolved to enter religion, and he easily persuaded a monk of the Kukkuṭārāma-vihāra to have him ordained. He now devoted all his energies and abilities to his new profession and having zeal and capacity, he soon rose to be the head of the establishment, and the leader of a large party in the church at Pāṭaliputra. His intellectual abilities were much above those of the ordinary brethren, but his orthodoxy was doubtful, and his moral character was not above suspicion. Mahādeva claimed to have attained arhatship, and he explained away circumstances which seemed to be destructive of his claim. In answer to queries from younger brethren, he enunciated five dogmas, or tenets which led to much discussion, and at length to open dissension. These tenets were: 1) an arhat may commit a sin under unconscious temptation, 2) one may be an arhat and not know it, 3) an arhat may have doubts on matters of doctrine, 4) one cannot attain arhat-ship without the aid of a teacher, 5) the "noble ways" may begin by a shout, i.e. one meditating seriously on religion may make such an exclamation as "How sad!" and by so doing attain progress towards perfection. These five propositions Mahādeva declared to be Buddha's teaching, but the senior Brethren declared them to be Mahādeva's invention and opposed to the orthodox teaching. There were at the time four "sects" or "parties" of Buddhists at Pāṭaliputra, and these had bitter controversies about the five propositions. When dispute ran high the king, on Mahādeva's suggestion, called an assembly of all the monks to have an open discussion and vote on the subject, the king being a friend and patron of Mahādeva. When the assembly was summoned it was attended by a number of senior Brethren, who were arhats, and by an immense number of ordinary ordained members of the church. The superior Brethren argued and voted against the five propositions, but they were far outnumbered by the inferior members who were all friends of Mahādeva. When the discussion and voting were over the wrangling still continued, and the king ordered all the brethren to be embarked in rotten boats and sent adrift on the Ganges; by this means he thought it would be shewn who were arhats and who were not. But at the critical moment five hundred arhats rose in the air, and floated away to Kashmir. Here they dispersed, and settled in lonely places among the vales and mountains. When the king heard what had occurred he repented, and sent messengers to coax the arhats to return to his capital, but they all refused to leave. Hereupon he caused five hundred monasteries to be built for them and gave the country to the Buddhist church. These five hundred arhats introduced and propagated the Sthavira school in Kashmir and the majority of inferior brethren at Pāṭaliputra began the Mahāsāṃghika school.

'It will be noticed that in this account we have neither the name of the king nor the date of the schism. But in the I-pu-tsung-lun and the Shi-pa-pu-lun the king is Aśoka, and the time above hundred years after Buddha's decease. Additional information on the subject will be found in Wassiljew's Buddhismus and in Schiefner's Tāranātha. In the Shan-chien-lu-vibhāṣā and in the passages of the Pāli works referred to in connection with Madhyāntika we find mention of a Mahādeva at Pāṭaliputra. But this man lived apparently a good and pious life, and he was sent by Tissa as a missionary to the Andhra country. He preached (or composed) the Devadūta-sūtra, and seems to have been successful in propagating Buddhism. This may be the Mahādeva of the northern treatises, the popular and influential abbot of Pāṭaliputra. But the latter dies, and is cremated with peculiar circumstances at the capital, and there is no mention of his mission to Andhra. On the other hand it seems possible that the Brethren, sent away in different directions as apostles, were men who had taken prominent part in the controversies which had arisen among the Buddhists of Pāṭaliputra. All accounts seem to agree in representing their Mahādeva as a man of unusual abilities and learning; and the story of his great crimes as a layman, and his unscrupulous ambition as an abbot related in the Abhidharma treatises are probably the malicious inventions of enemies.'

6. KANIṢKA'S COUNCIL : YUAN-CHUANG & BU-STON

Watters i. 278 : 'It is to the statements made by our pilgrim about Kaniṣka's Council that we are indebted for nearly all our information about the Council.' Yuan-chuang's account (Watters i. 270f) is as follows : 'Our pilgrim next proceeds to relate the circumstances connected with the great Council summoned by Kaniṣka. This king of Gandhāra, Yuan-chuang tells us, in the four hundredth year after the decease of Buddha, was a great and powerful sovereign whose sway extended to many peoples. In his leisure hours he studied the Buddhist scriptures, having a monk everyday in the palace to give him instruction. But as the Brethren taught him different and contradictory interpretations, owing to conflicting tenets of sectarians, the king fell into a state of helpless uncertainty. Then the Venerable Pārśva explained to His Majesty that in the long lapse of time since Buddha left the world, disciples of schools and masters with various theories had arisen, all holding personal views and all in conflict. On hearing this the king was greatly moved, and expressed to Pārśva his desire to restore Buddhism to eminence, and to have the Tripiṭaka explained according to the tenets of the various schools. Pārśva gave his cordial approval of the suggestion, and the king thereupon issued summons to the holy and wise Brethren in all his realm. These came in crowds, from all quarters to Gandhāra, where they were entertained for seven days. They were far too numerous, however, to make a good working Council, so the king had recourse to a process of selection. First all had to go away who had not entered the saintly career—had not attained one to the four degrees of perfection. Then of those who remained all who were arhats were selected and the rest dismissed; of the arhats again those who had the “three-fold intelligence” and the “six-fold penetration” were retained; and these were further thinned out by dismissing all of them who were not thoroughly versed in the Tripiṭaka and well learned in the “five sciences”. By this process the number of arhats for the Council was reduced to 499. Yuan-chuang goes on to tell that the king proposed Gandhāra as the place of meeting for the Council, but that this place was objected to on account of its heat and dampness. Then Rājagaha was proposed, but Pārśva and others objected that there were too many adherents of other sects there, and at last it was decided to hold the Council in Kashmir. So the king and the arhats came to his country and here the king built a monastery for the Brethren. When the texts of the Tripiṭaka were collected for the making of expository Commentaries on them, the Venerable Vasumitra was outside the door in monk's costume. The other Brethren would not admit him because he was still in the bonds of the world, not an arhat. In reply to his claim to deliberate, the others told him to go away and come to join them when he had attained arhatship. Vasumitra said he did not value this attainment a spittle—he was aiming at Buddhahood and he would not have any petty condition (“go in a small path”); still he could become an arhat before a silk ball which he threw in the air fell to the ground. When he threw the ball, the Devas said to him so as to be heard by all—“Will you who are to become Buddha and take the place of Maitreya, honoured in the three worlds and the stay of all creatures,—will you here realise this petty fruit?” The Devas kept the ball and the arhats made apologies to Vasumitra and invited him to become their President, accepting his decisions on all disputed points. This Council, Yuan-chuang continues, composed 100,000 stanzas of upadeśa-śāstra-s explanatory of the canonical sūtra-s, 100,000 stanzas of Vinaya-vibhāṣā-śāstra-s explanatory of the Vinaya, and 100,000 stanzas of Abhidharma-vibhāṣā-śāstra-s explanatory of the Abhidharma. For this exposition of the Tripiṭaka all learning from remote antiquity was thoroughly examined; the general sense and the terse language (of the Buddhist scriptures) were again made clear and distinct, and the learning was widely diffused for the safe-guiding of disciples. King Kaniṣka had the treatises, when finished, written out on copper-plates, and enclosed these in stone boxes, which he deposited in a tope made for the purpose. He then ordered the Yakṣas to keep and guard the texts, and not allow any to be taken out of the country by heretics; those who wished to study them could do so in the country. Kaniṣka renewed Aśoka's gift of all Kashmir to the Buddhist church.

However, to the Tibetan historians of much later period came down a confused account of various traditions concerning what they knew the Third Council, and Bu-ston simply compiles these without much of critical comment. Thus, Bu-ston ii.96f : '(The account of this third rehearsal) is not to be found in the Vinaya and therefore we meet here and there with disagreeing points. According to some, 137 years after the Teacher had passed away, at the time when kings Nanda and Mahāpadma were reigning, and when the elders Mahākāśyapa, Uttara and others were residing at Pāṭaliputra, Māra the Evil One, having assumed the form of a monk named Bhadra, showed many miraculous apparitions, sowed disunion amongst the clergy and brought confusion into the Teaching. At that time, when the elders Nāgasena and Manojña were living, (the clergy) became split into (various) sects. On the 63rd year (after this division had taken place), the Teaching was rehearsed by the elder Vātsīputra. According to others, 160 years after the Teacher had passed away, at the time when king Aśoka began to reign in the city called Kusumavistara (?), the Arhats were reading the word of the Buddha in (4 different languages), viz. Sanskrit, Prakrit, Apabhraṃśa and Paiśācika. Accordingly, the pupils (of the different Arhats) formed separate fractions, and this gave origin to the division into the 18 sects. In the philosophical views (of the different sects) there were many disagreeing points which brought confusion into the Church. —It was for this reason that Arhats and ordinary learned monks, having assembled in the monastery of Jalandhara, rehearsed (Scripture) for a third time. This took place 360 years after the Teacher had passed away. We read however in the Karuṇā-puṇḍarīka the following prophecy :— One hundred years after I have passed away, there will appear in Pāṭaliputra a king named Aśoka of the Maurya dynasty. This king will cause to worship the 84,000 monuments containing my relics in a single day. And in the Prabhāvatī it is said :— Thereafter the king Dharmāśoka died, and the arhats, in order to put an end to the practice of reciting (Scripture) in Prakrit, Apabhraṃśa and in a dialect of intermediate character, gradually rehearsed (the canonical texts) according to other methods. These new texts were like the sūtras which were compiled in Sanskrit. (Thereafter) the Teaching assumed 18 different forms. — I am of the opinion that (the statement of the authority just mentioned) disagrees with the texts I have quoted before.

‘Others (speak about the 3rd council) as follows :—The aim of it was to clear the doubts of the 18 sects as regards the spurious texts of scripture. The time was 300 years after the Teacher had passed away. The place was the country of Kashmir and the monastery of Kuvana, and the alms-giver was Kaṇiṣka, the king of Jalandhara. The members of the council were 500 Arhats with Pūrṇika at their head, 500 Bodhisattvas, Vasumitra and others, and 250 or 10,000 ordinary Paṇḍitas. After a recitation (of the texts) had been made, it was settled, that the texts acknowledged by the 18 sects were all of them the Word of the Buddha.’

Though neither in the account of Yuan-chuang nor in those quoted by Bu-ston is there any part being played by Aśvaghōṣa in Kaṇiṣka’s Council, the Life of Vasubandhu (see Watters i. 278) assigns a prominent role to Aśvaghōṣa in this Council.

7. VARARUCI

The following works are attributed to Vararuci in Tg :

Mahākāla-sādhana. rG xxvi.78 ; lxxxii.69 ; lxxxii.74-5 ; lxxi.81

Mahākāla-stotra. rG xxvi.88.

Mahākāla-abhiṣeka-vidhi. rG xxvi.80

Mahākālī-devī-stotra-aṣṭaka. rG xxvi.91

Mahākāla-karma-guhya-sādhana. (by mahāśmaśāna-siddhi-sampanna mahā-brāhmaṇa Vararuci) rG lxxxii.71

Mahākāla-bali-vidhi. rG lxxxii.76

Mahākāla-stotra. rG lxxxii.77 ; 82

Mahākāla-stotra-mālā. rG lxxxii.78

Devī-kālī-stotra. rG lxxxii. 84 ; 85

Karmakara-stotra. rG lxxxii.91

Yakṣa-kāla-stotra. rG lxxxii.92

Mahākāla-kīla-sādhana. rG lxxxii.103

Mahākāla-stotra-ākṣepa. rG lxxxiii.3 ; mDo cxvii.2

Śatagāthā. mDo cxxiii.30

8. SARAHA

The following works are attributed in Tg to Saraha, alias Rāhula, Rāhulabhadra and Sarahapāda.

Vajrayoginī-sādhana. rG xiv.71

Buddhakapāla-tantrasya pañjikā jñānavatī-nāma. rG xxiv.4

Buddhakapāla-sādhana. rG xxiv.7

Sarva-bhūta-vali-vidhi. rG xxiv.8

Buddhakapāla-nāma-maṇḍala-vidhi-krama-pradyotana.

rG xxiv.9

Dohā-koṣa-gīti. rG xlvi.9

Dohā-koṣa-nāma-caryā-gīti. rG xlvii.4

Dohā-koṣa-upadeśa-gīti. rG xlvii.5

Kakhasya-dohā. rG xlvii.7

Kakhasya-dohā-ṭippaṇa. rG xlvii.8

Kāya-koṣa-amṛta-vajra-gītā. rG xlvii.9

Vāk-koṣa-rucira-svara-gītā. rG xlvii.10

Citta-koṣa-aja-vajra-gītā. rG xlvii.11

Kāya-vāk-cittamanasikāra. rG xlvii.12

Tattva-upadeśa-śikhara-dohā-gīti. rG xlvii.17

Saraha-gītikā. rG. xlviii.14 ; 15

Mahāmudrā-upadeśa-vajra-guhya-gīti. rG xlvii.100

Trailokya-vaṃśakara-lokeśvara-sādhana (Oḍḍiyāna-udbhava-krama). rG lxx.25 ; 26 ; lxxi.66 ; 122 ; 123

Adhiṣṭhāna-mahākāla-sādhana. rG lxxxii.107

Mahākāla-stotra. rG lxxxiii.5

Sarahaprabhu-maitrīpāda-praśnottara. (mahābrāhmaṇa Sarahapādaprabhu Maitrīpāda mahāmudrā-praśnottara) rG lxxxv.18

Dvādaśa-upadeśa-gāthā. rG xlvii.15

Svādhiṣṭhāna-krama. rG xlvii.16

Bhāvanā-dṛṣṭi-caryā-phala-dohākoṣa-gītikā. rG xlvi.5

9. NĀGĀRJUNA : BIOGRAPHICAL

The most remarkable of the recent studies in Nāgārjuna being K. Venkata Ramanan NP, the points discussed in it about the life of Nāgārjuna are summed up below.

K. Venkata Ramanan NP 336 points out that our main sources for the traditional account of the life of Nāgārjuna are :

- In Sanskrit :
1. Laṅkāvatāra (Sagāthaka)
 2. Mañjuśrīmūlakalpa
 3. Harṣucarita (Bāṇa)
 4. Rājatarāṅgiṇī (Kalhaṇa)

- In Chinese :
1. Biography of Nāgārjuna attributed to Kumārajīva
 2. Yuan-chuang's account (Watters ii.100-2 ; 200-8)

- In Tibetan :
1. Account of the 84 Siddha-s, where Nāgārjuna is mentioned as the sixteenth.
 2. Bu-ston ii.122-130
 3. Tāranātha's work, (though in the present History Tār does not discuss the life of Nāgārjuna, because, as he says, he has discussed it elsewhere)
 4. Sum-pa's dPag-bsam-ljon-bzañ.

The different versions of the life of Nāgārjuna given in these are so full of palpable legends—often in violent disagreement with each other—that a review of these leads Max Walleser (Life of Nāgārjuna from Tibetan and Chinese Sources, Asia Major 1923) to 'strike a very sceptical note not only in regard to the different and sometimes conflicting traditional accounts of the life and work of this Buddhist master but also in regard to the very question of his having ever existed.' (Venkata Ramanan NP 25). As against this Venkata Ramanan (NP 25ff) argues that certain works are indisputably to be attributed to Nāgārjuna and this proves his historicity. 'Furthermore the recent archaeological discoveries at Amarāvati corroborate to some extent certain broad facts about Nāgārjuna's life on which his traditional biographies agree, these facts being his friendship with a Śātavāhana king and his having spent the latter part of his career in the monastery built for him by this king at Bhramaragiri (Śrī-parvata).'

The traditional account agrees that Nāgārjuna was born as a Brahmin in south India, though, on the question of what led him to the Buddhist Order, the Chinese sources differ from the Tibetan ones. After entering the Order, he is said to have thoroughly studied the Buddhist scriptures then available. But he failed to be satisfied with these and started searching for more texts. Thus he eventually obtained the Prajñāpāramitā-sūtras (Kumārajīva's Vaipulya-sūtras) from a Nāga. These texts fully satisfied him and he devoted the rest of his life to the propagation of their teachings. 'As regards the Nāga from whom Nāgārjuna is said to have obtained the Prajñāpāramitā-sūtras, Kumārajīva speaks of the Nāga chief (Mahānāga), who led him into the sea and opened up for him the Treasury of the Seven Jewels (Saptaratnakośa). Nāgārjuna read the Vaipulya (Mahāyāna) Sūtras, which the Mahānāga selected for his reading, and having read them he deeply penetrated into their meaning. He told the Mahānāga that what he already read there was ten times of what he had read in Jambudvīpa, and eventually brought away with him a boxful of them.'

Nāgārjuna's friend, the Śātavāhana king to whom Nāgārjuna wrote the Suhṛllekha (Tg mDo xxxiii.32=xciv.27) and the Ratnāvali (see JRAS 1934 pp. 307-325 ; 1936 pp. 237-252, 423-435), according to Venkata Ramanan, was presumably Gautami-putra Śātakarṇi, who ruled, according to one view, during A.D. 106-130, and according to another view, during A.D. 80-104. Yuan-chuang says that Nāgārjuna was a contemporary of Aśvaghoṣa, who, again, was a contemporary of Kaniṣka. According to the Rājataranṅiṇī, Nāgārjuna was a contemporary of Huṣka, Juṣka and Kaniṣka. The first two names probably referred to Huviṣka and Vajeṣka, the contemporaries of Kaniṣka II, who was ruling in the year 41 after the accession of Kaniṣka I. 'If the latter's accession is assigned to 78 A.D., the Kaniṣka II should be considered as ruling in 119 A.D.; and if the later date be accepted for Gautamīputra, he would be a contemporary of Kaniṣka II.' Still Venkata Ramanan thinks that, assuming Nāgārjuna to have lived a long life (about 100 years), the possibility of his contemporaneity with Kaniṣka I need not be rejected. Concludes Venkata Ramanan, 'it could perhaps be taken as a highly probable working hypothesis that the upper and the lower limits of the philosophical activity of Nāgārjuna lay somewhere between 50 A.D. and 120 A.D.'

As for the Tibetan sources, Venkata Ramanan p. 336 comments that these 'mix up the two Nāgārjunas, the Mādhyamika philosopher at the beginning of the Christian era and the Siddha Nāgārjuna coming some four hundred years later.' This confusion 'hardly pertains to the Chinese sources which are earlier.'

10. WORKS OF NĀGĀRJUNA

In Tg about 180 works—on all sorts of subjects—are attributed to Nāgārjuna. Bu-ston i.50f, however, mentions six main treatises of Nāgārjuna : 'The six main treatises of the Mādhyamika doctrine (by Nāgārjuna) demonstrating, that which is expressed by the sūtra-s directly or otherwise, the essential meaning (of the Doctrine). These works are :

'The Śūnyatā-saptati, expounding the theory of the relativity of all elements of existence, devoid of the extremities of causality and pluralism, and

'The Prajñā-mūla, denying the reality of origination from self and non-self ;

'These two works (are to be regarded as) the fundamental or principal. 'Next come :

The Yukti-ṣaṣṭikā,—containing a logical vindication (of the theories).

'The Vigraha-vyāvartanī, refuting the challenges of antagonists,

'The Vaidalya-sūtra, demonstrating the methods of controversy with adversaries and logicians (in general) and

'The Vyavahāra-siddhi, showing that from the point of view of the Absolute Truth—Non-substantiality—and from the empirical standpoint—worldly practice—go along together.'

On the basis of a critical survey of the works associated with the name of Nāgārjuna in Chinese and Tibetan traditions, K. Venkata Ramanan NP 36-7 concludes that the works that can be attributed to Nāgārjuna are :

I. Texts that constitute chiefly a critical examination of other schools, specially of the Sarvāstivāda doctrine of elements : i) Madhyamaka-śāstra (Mādhyamika-kārikā), ii) Vigraha-vyāvartanī, iii) Ekaśloka-śāstra and iv) Dvādaśa-mukha-śāstra. v) Śūnyatā-saptati also perhaps belongs to this class.

II. Texts chiefly expository : i) Pratītya-samutpāda-hṛdaya-śāstra, is an exposition of the twelve-linked chain of the course of phenomenal existence, which constitutes the subject-matter of Kārikā xxvi ; ii) Yukti-ṣaṣṭikā is a short compendium on the basic tenets of Mahāyāna ; iii) Bodhisattva-pātheya-śāstra is a short exposition of the factors of the Great Way.

III. Commentaries or/and Records of Oral Instruction (Upadeśa) : i) Mahā-prajñā-pāramitā-śāstra and ii) Daśabhūmi-vibhāṣā-śāstra are the two important works that belong to this class ; iii) Bhava-saṅkrānti-śāstra and iv) Ārya-dharmadhātu-garbha-vivarana also perhaps belong here ; v) perhaps Vaidalya which has a sūtra and a prakaraṇa also belongs here.

‘IV. Devotional verses. i) Niraupamya-stava, ii) Lokā-tīta-stava, iii) Acintya-stava, iv) Stutyātīta-stava, v) Paramārtha-stava, vi) Dharmadhātu-stava.

‘V. Letters : i) Suḥḥlekha and ii) Ratnāvalī.

‘VI. To these there can perhaps be added the collection of sūtras (Sūtra-samuccaya) on the authority of Śāntideva’s Bodhicaryāvatāra ; the work is, however, not extant.’

11. ĀRYADEVA

In Tg are attributed a large number of Tāntrika works to Āryadeva : rG xxiii. 3 ; 6 ; xxx ; xxxi ; xxxiii. 8-13 ; xlviii. 117 ; lxxiv. 29 ; 41 ; lxxxiii. 70-74 ; 76 ; xxiii. 5 ; 7 ; 8 ; lxxviii. 10. Of these, Bu-ston ii. 131 considers the following to be really the works of Āryadeva : Caryā-melāyana-pradīpa (rG xxxiii. 8), Citta-āvaraṇa-viśodhana (rG xxxiii.9), Catuḥ-piṭha-tantrarāja-maṇḍala-upāyikā-vidhi-sāra-samuccaya (rG xxiii.6), Catuḥ piṭha-sādhana (rG xxiii. 3), Jñānaḍākinī (rG xxiii.5), Ekadrumapañjikā (rG xxiii. 7) and doubtfully also Pradīpa-uddiyotana-abhisamdhī-prakāśikā-vyākhyā-ṭikā (rG xxx & xxxi).

These apart, to Āryadeva are attributed in Tg the following works :

Ārya-prajñā-pāramitā-mahāparipṛcchā-nāma. mDo cxxviii.8

Hastabāla-prakaraṇa-nāma. mDo xvii.22=xviii.3

Vṛtti on above, mDo xvii. 23=xviii.4

Catuḥśataka-śāstra-kārikā. mDo xviii.1

Skhalita-pramathana-yukti-hetu-siddhi. mDo xviii.2

Jñāna-sāra-samuccaya. mDo xviii.6

Madhyamaka-bhramaghāta. mDo xviii.5

The colophon of the last mentions that it was composed at the grand vihāra of Nālandā at the request of Jambudvīparāja Sukhācārya, alias Udayī, Sadvaha.

12. OBERMILLER'S NOTE ON THE MĀDHYAMIKA ĀCĀRYAS AND THEIR DIFFERENT POINTS OF VIEW

Obermiller (Bu-ston ii. 135n) : 'In the work of Tson-kha-pa's pupil Khai-ḍub (mKhas-grub) called stoñ-thun-bskal-bzañ-mig-'byed (Tsañ edition Vol i, 37a 1 sqq) we have a short account concerning the Mādhyamika ācārya-s and their different points of view. It is said as follows :—The standpoint of Nāgārjuna and Āryadeva was that of the Prāsaṅgikas. However (in their works) no direct discrimination between the Svātantrika and Prāsaṅgika points of view and no refutation of the former has been made. Subsequently, the teacher Buddhapālita composed his commentary on the Mūla-mādhyamika and explained the theory of Nāgārjuna and Āryadeva from the Prāsaṅgika standpoint. After that the teacher Bhāvaviveka likewise composed a commentary on the Mūla-mādhyamika (the Prajñā-pradīpa) and made many refutations concerning the points commented by Buddhapālita. It is he who has first founded the Svātantrika system. The followers of each of these two (schools i. e. of Buddhapālita and Bhāvaviveka) are accordingly called by the earlier Tibetan authors "the Mādhyamikas adhering to the different fractions" (pakṣa-grāhiṇo-mādhyamikāḥ). Bhāvaviveka has moreover composed independent works of his own, namely the main aphorisms of the Mādhyamika-hṛdaya with the auto-commentary Tarkajvālā. In this he has expounded the Svātantrika theories and the activity of the Bodhisattvas in detail. Thereupon the teacher Jñānagarbha composed the Svātantrika work Mādhyamika-satya-dvaya (or Satya-dvaya-vibhaṅga). This teacher, as well as Bhāvaviveka are the representatives of the system which maintains the reality of external objects from the empirical standpoint and does not admit the existence of introspective perception (sva-samvedana). Thereafter the teacher Śāntirakṣita composed the Mādhyamika-alaṃkāra and laid the foundation to another school of the Mādhyamikas which denies the empirical reality of the external world, acknowledges the introspective perception, but on the other hand does not consider consciousness to have an ultimate reality (differing in this from the Yogācāra-vijñānavādins). The Mādhyamika-ālokā and the three Bhāvanū-krama of Kamalaśīla, as well as the texts of Vimuktasena, Haribhadra, Buddha-jñānapāda, Abhayākaragupta, etc agree with Śāntirakṣita in the main standpoint (which is that of the Yogācāra-mādhyamika-svātantrika, whereas Bhāvaviveka and Jñānagarbha express the point of view of the Sautrāntika-mādhyamika-svātantrikas). As we have seen, Bu-ston counts Jñānagarbha among the Yogācāra-mādhyamikas.'

13. NĀGABODHI

In Tg the following works are attributed to Nāgabodhi, alias Nāgabuddhi, Nāgabuddhi-pāda, Nāgamati etc.

Samāja-sādhana-vyavasthāvalī. rG xxxiii.14

Kramāntarbhāva-upadeśa-nāma-prakaraṇa. rG xxxiii.17

Karmāntavibhaṅga. rG xxxiii.16

Guhyasamāja-maṇḍalopāyikā-viṃśavidhi. rG xxxiii.15

Pañcakrama-ṭikā-maṇimālā-nāma. rG xxxiv.2

Sarvatathāgata-stava. rG lxxiii.3

cf Bu-ston ii.132

14. ŚĀKYAMITRA

In Tg the following works are attributed to Śākyamitra :

Mahāmudrā-yoga-avatāra-piṇḍārtha. rG lxxii.68

Ārya-bhadra-caryā-praṇidhāna-rāja-ṭikā. mDo xxxviii.4

Caryā-melāyana-pradīpa-nāma-ṭikā. rG xxxiv.8

Kosala-alamkāra-tattva-saṃgraha-ṭikā. rG l-li

Ārya-vajra-krodha-mahābala-sādhana. rG lxxi.32

15. ŚABARA-PĀDA

Tg contains the following :

- Śrī-sahaja-upadeśa-svādhiṣṭhāna-nāma. Text expounded by Mahā Śabara. rG xiii.4
 Śrī-sahaja-sambara-svādhiṣṭhāna-nāma. Text expounded by Mahā Śabara. rG xiii.5
 Rakta-vajra-yoginī-sādhana by Śrī Śabareśvara. rG xiv.26
 Śrī-vajra-yoginī-sādhana by Śabareśvara. rG xiv.28
 Dohakoṣa-nāma-mahāmudrā-upadeśa by Śrī Mahā Śabara Saraha. rG xlvii.13.
 Sārdha-pañca-gāthā by ācārya Nāgārjunagarbha. Text expounded by bhāṭṭāraka Śabara at Śrī-giri. Afterwards transmitted to Karma-pāda and at last to bhāṭṭāraka Nāro-pā. rG xlvii.19.
 Śrī-sabara-stotra-ratna by Śrī Vanaratna-pāda. rG lxxxvi.12.

16 MĀTṚCEṬA

The following works are attributed to Mātṛceṭa in Tg.

- Varṇanārha-varṇane-bhagavato-buddhasya-stotre-aśakya-stava-nāma. bsTod.29.
 Tri-ratna-maṅgala-stotra. bsTod.30
 Samyak-sambuddha-keta-stotra (Mahākavi Maticitra) bsTod. 31
 Ekottarikā-stotra. bsTod.32
 Sugata-pañcatīṃśat-stotra-nāma-ratnamālā-nāma. bsTod. 33
 Tri-ratna-stotra. bsTod.35.
 Miśraka-stotra-nāma (Mātṛceṭa and ācārya Dignāga) bsTod.41
 Ārya-tārā-devī-stotra-sarvārtha-sādhana-nāma-stotra-rāja. rG xxvi.21.
 Ārya-tārā-stotra. rG lxxi.392
 Mahārāja-kaniṣka-lekha. mDo xxxiii.34=xciv.29
 Catuḥ-viparyaya-(parihāra)-kathā. mDo xxxiii.48=xciv.14

Kaliyuga-parikathā. mDo. xxxiii.49 = cxiv.15

Aṣṭāṅga-hṛdaya-saṃhitā-nāma (Pitṛceṭa) mDo. cxviii.4

Aṣṭāṅga-hṛdaya-nāma-voidūryaka-bhāṣya (Pitṛceṭa). mDo.
cxviii.5.-cxix

17. AŚVAGHOṢA & MĀTRCEṬA

Following are in brief the results reached by M. Anesaki (in ERE ii.159f) and F. W. Thomas (in ERE viii.495f) about Aśvaghōṣa and Mātrceṭa.

Anesaki on Aśvaghōṣa : The Tibetan colophon of the Buddhacarita and the Life of Vasubandhu mention him as a native of Sāketa. The latter source further asserts that Aśvaghōṣa was summoned to Kabul by Kātyāyaniputra to cooperate in the compilation of the Mahāvibhāṣā—a compilation which according to Yuan-chuang took place under the patronage of king Kaniṣka. The Records of the Patriarchs also mentions Aśvaghōṣa as a contemporary of Kaniṣka. 'We are told that Aśvaghōṣa was a learned but haughty man, who was at last converted to the Buddhist faith in the non-entirety of the phenomenal world.' The agent in his conversion was Pūrṇayaśas, a disciple of Pārśva, who is said to have presided over the compilation of the above-mentioned great commentary (Mahāvibhāṣā). After his conversion, Aśvaghōṣa worked eagerly for the propagation of the Buddha's teaching in Kusumapura (modern Patna), not only as a preacher, but also as a poet and musician. When that town was taken by the army of Candana Kaniṣṭha, the king of the Yueh-chis, Aśvaghōṣa was carried away to their country in the north as a portion of the tribute paid to the conqueror by the Magadhans.' These traditions about Aśvaghōṣa, authenticated as these are by the oldest sources of our knowledge of him, may be accepted as more or less dependable. 'But when we take up many other writings which bear his name, we find ourselves in the dark as to the identity of the person. And the matter is made no clearer by the Tibetan tradition, which applies many epithets to him. This tradition dates from the 16th cent. and itself seems to be the result of confusion.'

Thomas on Mātṛceṭa : 'Mātṛceṭa is the name of a Buddhist author identified by the Tibetan historian of Buddhism, Tāranātha, with Aśvaghōṣa'. However, only Tāranātha identifies the two, while the much earlier Chinese pilgrim I-Tsing 'plainly distinguishes the two authors.' The main ground of this identification is that 'both writers stood in relation to Kaniṣka'. But 'nothing is more certain concerning Aśvaghōṣa than that he was a figure at the court of Kaniṣka, whereas we have an epistle from Mātṛceṭa declining, upon grounds of old age and sickness, to visit the king. Perhaps this is the reason why Tāranātha, identifying the two poets, makes an untenable distinction between Kaniṣka of Aśvaghōṣa and Kanika of Mātṛceṭa.'

18. ŚŪRA

The following works are attributed to Śūra in Tg. :

Pāramitā-samāsa. mDo xxxi.6

Subhāṣita-ratna-karaṇḍaka-kathā. mDo xxxiii.47 = xciv.13

Jātaka-mālā. mDo xci.1

Bodhisattva-jātaka-dharma-gaṇḍī. mDo xciv.2

Supatha-deśanā-parikathā. mDo xciv.20

19. AŚVAGHŌṢA

The following works are attributed to Aśvaghōṣa in Tg. :

Śata-pañcāśatka-nāma-stotra. bsTod.38

Gaṇḍī-stotra-gāthā. bsTod.40

- Mahākāla-tantra-rudra-kalpa-mahāśmaśāna-nāma-ṭikā.
rG xxvi. 72
- Vajrayāna-mūlāpatti-saṃgraha. rG xlviii.135
- Sthūlāpatti. rG xlviii.136
- Maṇidvīpa-mahākāruṇika-pañca-deva-stotra. rG lxviii.35
- Guru-pañcāśikā. rG lxxii.17
- Daśa-akuśala-karma-patha-nirdeśa. mDo xxxiii.39 = xciv.23
- Śoka-vinodana. mDo xxxiii.41 = xciv.22
- Aṣṭākṣaṇa-kathā. mDo xxxiii.46 = xciv.12
- Pariṇamanā-saṃgraha. mDo cxxxvi.36
- Buddhacarita-nāma-mahākāvya (Suvarṇākṣi-putra bhikṣu ācārya mahākavi vādin bhadanta Aśvaghōṣa of Sāketa-deśa, probably Ayodhyā). mDo xciv.1
- Vajra-sattva-praśnottara. (ācārya Śrīghoṣa, probably Aśva-ghoṣa) rG lxxxv.52

20. LUI-PĀ

The following works are attributed to Lūi-pā in Tg :

- Bhagavad-abhisamaya. rG xii.8
- Vajra-sattva-sādhana. rG xiii.1
- Tattva-svabhāva-dohākoṣa-gītikā-dṛṣṭi-nāma. rG xlviii.2
- Lūhipāda-gītikā. rG xlviii.27
- Buddhodaya. rG xlvii.41
- The above text revised by Taṅkipāda. rG lxxiii.62

21. ASAṄGA

The following works are attributed to Asaṅga in Tg :

- Yogacaryā-bhūmi (col : pañca-bhūmyādivarga-yogacaryā-bhūmi-bahubhūmika-vastu alias yogācāra) mDo xlix

- Yogacaryā-bhūmau Śrāvaka-bhūmi. mDo 1
 Yogacaryā-bhūmau Bodhisattva-bhūmi. mDo li
 Yogacaryā-bhūmi Nirṇaya-saṃgraha. mDo lii-liiii.1
 Yogacaryā-bhūmau Vastu-saṃgraha. mDo liii.2
 Yogacaryā-bhūmau Vinaya-saṃgraha. mDo liv.1
 Yogacaryā-bhūmau Paryāya-saṃgraha. mDo liv.2
 Yogacaryā-bhūmau Vivaraṇa-saṃgraha. mDo. liv.3 (According to the colophon of the present text the Pañcabhūmivarga [sa-sde-lña] is composed by ārya Asaṅga)
 Dharmakāya-āśraya-asāmānya-guṇa-stotra. bsTod. 7
 Prajñā-pāramitā-sādhana. rG lxxi.246
 Ārya-maitreya-sādhana. rG lxxi.345
 Ārya-sandhi-nirmocana-bhāṣya. mDo xxxiv.1
 Buddha-anusmṛti-vṛtti. mDo xxxiv.2
 Dharma-anusmṛti-vṛtti. mDo xxxiv.3
 Saṃgha-anusmṛti-vyākhyā. mDo xxxiv.4
 Mahāyāna-uttara-tantra-śāstra-vyākhyā. mDo xliv.6
 Mahāyāna-saṃgraha. mDo lvi.1
 Abhidharma-samuccaya. mDo lvi.2
 Dhyāna-dīpa-upadeśa-nāma. mDo lxi.4

22. MAITREYA

- The following works are attributed to Maitreya in Tg.
 Mahāyāna-sūtra-alaṃkāra-kārikā. mDo xliv.1
 Madhyānta-vibhaṅga. mDo xliv.2
 Dharma-dharmatā-vibhaṅga. mDo xliv.3
 Dharma-dharmatā-vibhaṅga-kārikā. mDo xliv.4
 Mahāyāna-uttara-tantra-śāstra. mDo xliv.5
 Abhisamaya-alaṃkāra-nāma-kārikā-prajñā-pāramitā-upadeśa-śāstra. mDo i.1

cf Bu-ston i.53f : 'The works of the Lord Maitreya, which are—the Sūtrālaṃkāra, the Madhyānta-vibhaṅga, the Dharmadharmatā-vibhaṅga, the Uttara-tantra. Some authorities say that the first two of these four (treatises) belong to the Abhidharma Code, the latter two to the Sūtra Code, and the Abhisamayālaṅkāra to the Vinaya Code. I however see no reason (for such a classification). The Sūtrālaṅkāra contains an exposition of all the Mahāyānistic doctrines in abridged form...The Madhyānta-vibhaṅga : Anta—“extremity”, means the extremities of realism and nihilism, or otherwise those of eternalism and materialism. Madhya—“the middle”, is the middle way shunning both these extremities. The treatise, as it gives an analysis (vibhaṅga) of both these points, is called Madhyānta-vibhaṅga...The Dharma-dharmatā-vibhaṅga : Dharma are the elements of existence that belong to the phenomenal world and are influenced by defiling agencies. Dharmatā is the true essence of all the elements—nirvāṇa. The work, being an investigation of these two principles, bears the name, Dharma-dharmatā-vibhaṅga. The Uttara-tantra is called so, because it is the highest (uttara) of the series (tantra) of the Mahāyānistic teachings, it consequently contains the highest of doctrines... Having adjoined (to these four works) the Abhisamayālaṅkāra (mentioned before), we shall have all the five treatises of Maitreya.’

23. VASUBANDHU

The following works are attributed to Vasubandhu in Tg. :
Pratītyasamutpādādi-vibhaṅga-nirdeśa. (commentary on Kg. mDo vol. tsha xviii.11) mDo xxxvi.1

Tri-ratna-stotra. bsTod 37

Ārya-śaṅmukhī-dhāraṇī-vyākhyāna. rG lxviii.1

Sapta-guṇa-parivarṇana-kathā. mDo xxxiii.43=xciv.8

Śīla-parikathā. mDo xxxiii.44=xciv.9

Sambhāra-parikathā. mDo xxxiii.45=xciv.11

Pañcavidha-kāma-guṇa-upālabha-nirdeśa. (mDo xxxiii.59=
 xciv.25

Sapta-guṇa-varṇanā-kathā. mDo xxxiii.85

- Buddha-anusmṛti-ṭikā (commentary on Tg mDo xxxiii.56) mDo xxxiv.7
- Eka-gāthā-bhāṣya (commentary on Kg mDo vol. sa xxviii.23) mDo xxxiv.8
- Ārya-caturdharmaka-vyākhyāna (commentary on Kg. mDo vol. za xxii.8) mDo xxxiv.10
- Ārya-gayāśirṣa-nāma-sūtra-vyākhyāna (commentary on Kg. mDo vol. ca v.4) mDo xxxiv.12
- Ārya-daśa-bhūmi-vyākhyāna (commentary on Kg. Phal-chen 3I vol ji xxxvii.1) mDo xxxiv.14
- Ārya-akṣayamati-nirdeśa-ṭikā (commentary on Kg. mDo vol. ma xvi.4) mDo xxxv
- Ārya-bhadracaryā-praṇidhāna-ṭikā. mDo. xxxviii.6
- Sūtra-alamkāra-bhāṣya (commentary on Maitreya's Mahāyāna-sūtra-alamkāra-kārikā. Tg mDo. xlv.1). mDo. xlv.7
- Madhyānta-vibhaṅga-ṭikā (commentary on Maitreya's Madhyānta-vibhaṅga mDo. xlv.2) mDo xlv.1
- Dharma-dharmatā-vibhaṅga-vṛtti (commentary on Maitreya's Dharmā-dharmatā-vibhaṅga. mDo xlv.3). mDo xlv.2
- Mahāyāna-saṃgraha-bhāṣya (commentary on Asaṅga's Mahāyāna-saṃgraha. mDo lvi.1) mDo lvi.3
- Vivṛta-gūdhārtha-piṇḍa-vyākhyā (incomplete commentary on the first part of Asaṅga's Mahāyāna-saṃgraha. mDo lvi.1). mDo lvi.5
- Triṃśaka-kārikā = Vijñaptimātratā-siddhi = Sarvavijñāna-mātra-deśaka-triṃśaka = Vidyāmātra-siddhi-triṃśat-śāstra-kārikā. mDo lviii.1
- Viṃśaka-kārikā = Vāhyārtha-nirodhaka-viṃśaka. mDo lviii.2
- Viṃśaka-vṛtti = Viṃśaka-sva-vṛtti. mDo lviii.3
- Tri-svabhāva-nirdeśa. mDo lviii.4
- Pañca-skandha-prakaraṇa. mDo lviii.5
- Vyākhyā-yukti-sūtra-khaṇḍa-śata = Yukti-sūtra-khaṇḍa-śataka. mDo lviii.6
- Vyākhyā-yukti. mDo lviii.7
- Karma-siddha-prakaraṇa. mDo lviii.8

Mahāyāna-śata-dharma-prakāśa-mukha-śāstra = Dharma-vidyā-dvāra-śāstra [col. A : Vasubandhu (acc. to Chinese index). A : Śrīmad Dharmapāla (acc. to Tibetan tradition)] mDo lviii.9

Abhidharmakośa-kārikā. mDo lxiii.1

Abhidharmakośa-bhāṣya (col. auto-commentary). mDo lxiii.2
-lxiv.1

Gāthā-saṃgraha-śāstra-nāma. mDo lxxii.4

Gāthā-saṃgraha-śāstrārtha-nāma (col. auto-commentary). mDo lxxii.5

cf Bu-ston i.56f : 'The eight treatises of Vasubandhu are as follows. The Triṃśaka-kārikā-prakaraṇa, teaching that all the elements of existence are but modes of one conscious principle. The Viṃśaka-kārikā-prakaraṇa, a vindication of this theory by means of logic. The Pañcaskandha-prakaraṇa, a vindication of the theory of the five groups of elements which is the foundation of logic. The Vyākhyā-yukti, vindicating the possibility of studying and preaching (the Doctrine), in conformity with the theory of idealism. The Karma-siddhi-prakaraṇa, vindicating the acts of the three media (from the same standpoint). These five works are independent. Next come interpretations of other works as follows :—The commentary on the Sūtrālaṃkāra, vindicating the practice of the six transcendental virtues. The commentary on the Pratītya-samutpāda-sūtra, vindicating the twelve-membered formula of the evolution of individual life, and the commentary on the Madhyānta-vibhaṅga, a vindication of the three aspects of reality. Such are these eight works, according to the tradition. Some authorities say that since this teacher has composed many more treatises—including the commentary on the Daśabhūmaka-sūtra etc—the limitation of their number to eight is incorrect, and so is likewise that of twenty treatises connected with the teaching of Maitreya. Those that insist on a definite number with regard to the latter, count the five volumes of the Yogacaryā-bhūmi, the two summary works, the five books of Maitreya and the eight treatises (of Vasubandhu). The treatises elucidating the practical part of the doctrine are the Bodhisattva-samvara-viṃśaka, etc.'

24. VASIL'EV ON 'THE TWO VIBHAṄGA-S'

V n : 'viz. the Madhyānta-vibhaṅga-ṭīkā and Dharmadharmatā-vibhaṅga-vṛtti. Both are available in Tanjur (vol bi). cf Journal Asiatique 1849, p.405, No. 455. Madhyānta-vibhaṅga considerably differs from the Sūtrālaṃkāra and belongs to a much later period. The word dharma means everything belonging to saṃsāra and by dharmatā—nirvāṇa. The author [Tār] wants to say that either the number of prakaraṇa-s is less or they have been lost. We have already noted above that for the Tibetans the five books, unknown to the Chinese, are the teaching of Maitreya. Besides, among the Yogācāra canonical works, they enumerate the seven works of Ārya Asaṅga : the five sections of the Yogacaryā-bhūmi considering these as separate works, the Abhidharma-samuccaya and Mahāyāna-saṃgraha. After this, came the five prakaraṇa-s or original works (rab-tu-byed-pa) of Vasubandhu. These are : 1) Vyākhyā-yukti, 2) Karma-siddhi-prakaraṇa, 3) Viṃśaka, the twenty-śloka treatise on idealism, 4) Triṃśaka, about the emptiness of dualism of self, 5) Pañca-skandha-prakaraṇa, on the five skandha-s. Besides, among the same prakaraṇa-s, however, are also enumerated 1) commentary on Sūtrālaṃkāra, 2) commentaries on the two vibhaṅga-s (according to some). According to others (Bu-ston) these two commentaries are taken as one work and the other one is the commentary on Pratitya-samutpāda.'

25. DĀRIKA-PĀ

The following works are attributed to Dārika-pā in Tg. :
Kālacakra-tantrarājasya-seka-prakriyā-vṛtti-vajrapada-udghāṭi-
(ni)-nāma. rG iv.3

- Cakra-samvara-sādhana-tattva-saṃgraha-nāma. rG xii.9
 Cakra-samvara-maṇḍala-vidhi-tattva-avatāra-nāma.
 rG xii.10
 Cakra-samvara-stotra-sarvārtha-siddhi-viśuddha-cūḍāmaṇi-
 nāma. rG xii.11
 Yogānusāriṇī-nāma-vajrayoginī-ṭīkā. rG xiv.43
 Vajrayoginī-pūjā-vidhi. rG xiv.45
 Kaṅkāla-tāraṇa-sādhana. rG xiv.46
 Oḍḍiyāna-vinirgata-mahā-guhya-tattva-upadeśa. rG xlvi.6
 (A : a disciple of Lilāvajra, who, again, is the disciple of princess Lakṣmīnkarā)
 Saptama-siddhānta. rG xlvi.46
 Tathatā-dṛṣṭi. rG xlviii.48
 Prajñā-pāramitā-hṛdaya-sādhana. rG lxiii.14

26. STHIRAMATI

- The following works are attributed to Sthiramati in Tg. :
 Sūtra-alaṃkāra-vṛtti-bhāṣya (commentary on Vasubandhu's Sūtra-alaṃkāra). mDo xlvi-xlvi Triṃśaka-bhāṣya (commentary on Vasubandhu's Triṃśaka-kārikā). mDo lviii.10 Pañca-skandha-prakaraṇa-vaibhāṣya (commentary on Vasubandhu's Pañca-skandha-prakaraṇa). mDo lix.1 Abhidharmakośa-bhāṣya-ṭīkā-tattvārtha-nāma (supra-commentary on Vasubandhu's Abhidharmakośa). mDo cxxixcxxx Madhyānta-vibhaṅga-ṭīkā (commentary on Maitreya's Madhyānta-vibhaṅga). mDo xlviii.3
 Ārya-mahāratnakūṭa-dharma-paryāya-śata-sāhasrikā-parivarta-kāśyapa-parivarta-ṭīkā (commentary on Kg Ratnakūṭa, vol. cha vi.8). mDo xxxvii.12
 Paramālaṃkāra-viśva-paṭala-vyūha-nāma. rG lxiii.34=lxv.39
 Prakaraṇa-ṭīkā-viśeṣa-vyākhyā. rG lxxv.37

- Bodhicitta-druma. rG lxxv.38
 Samaya-aṣṭaviṃśa-mūla-vṛtti. rG lxxvi.45
 Samaya-ratnanidhi. rG lxxvi.46
 Sūtra-pañjikā. rG lxxvi.123.
 Yāna-uddiyotana-pradīpa (col. probably of Sthiramati).
 rG lxxvi.124

27. DIGNĀGA

- The following works are attributed to Dignāga in Tg. :
- Miśraka-stotra (Mātṛceṭa and Dignāga). bsTod 41
 Guṇāparyanta-stotra-ṭīkā (commentary on Ratnadāsa's Guṇāparyanta-stotra, bsTod 44=mDo xxxiii.96) bsTod 45
 =mDo xxxiii.97
 Guṇāparyanta-stotra-pada-kārikā bsTod 46=mDo xxxiii.98
 Eka-gāthā-ṭīkā. bsTod 64
 Ārya-mañjuḥoṣa-stotra. rG lxxviii.20
 Ārya-prajñā-pāramitā-saṃgraha-kārikā. mDo xiv.2=cxxviii.7
 Yoga-avatāra. mDo xxx.12
 Samantabhādra-caryā-praṇidhānārtha-saṃgraha. mDo xxxviii.3
 Abhidharmakośa-vṛtti-marma-pradīpa-nāma. mDo lxx.2
 Pramāṇa-samuccaya. mDo xcv.1
 Pramāṇa-samuccaya-vṛtti (col. auto-commentary). mDo xcv.2-3
 Ālambana-parīkṣā. mDo xcv.4
 Ālambana-parīkṣā-vṛtti (col. auto-commentary). mDo xcv.5
 Trikāla-parīkṣā. mDo xcv.6
 Nyāya-praveśa-nāma-pramāṇa-prakaraṇa. mDo xcv.7
 Nyāya-praveśa-nāma-pramāṇa-śāstra. mDo xcv.8
 Hetu-cakra-ḍamaru. mDo xcv.9

28. BHAVYA OR BHĀVAVIVEKA

The following works are attributed to Bhavya or Bhāvaviveka in Tg :

Pradīpa-uddiyotana-nāma-ṭikā (chapters 1-8 ācārya Āryadeva and 9-17 mahācārya Bhavyakīrti). rG xxxi

Pañca-krama-pañjikā-nāma (commentary on Nāgārjuna's Pañca-krama). rG xxxiv.1

Prajñā-pradīpa-mūla-madhyamaka-vṛtti (commentary on Nāgārjuna's Prajñā-nāma-mūla-madhyamaka-kārikā. mDo xvii.1) mDo xviii.8

Madhyamaka-ratna-pradīpa-nāma. mDo xviii.9

Madhyamaka-hṛdaya-kārikā. mDo xix.1

Madhyamaka-hṛdaya-vṛtti-tarka-jvālā. mDo xix.2

Madhyamaka-artha-saṃgraha. mDo xix.4

Nikāya-bheda-vibhaṅga-vyākhyāna. mDo xc.12

29. CANDRAKĪRTI

The following works are attributed to Candrakīrti in Tg :

Pradīpa-uddiyotana-nāma-ṭikā (commentary on Guhya-samājatantra). rG xxviii.1

Gaṇapati-samaya-guhya-sādhana. rG lxxxiii.60

Ṣaḍaṅga-yoga-nāma-ṭikā. rG xxviii.2

Yukti-ṣaṣṭikā-vṛtti. mDo xxiv.1

Bodhisattva-yogacaryā-catuh-śataka-ṭikā (commentary on Āryadeva's Catuh-śataka-śāstra-kārikā). mDo xxiv.2

Pañcaskandha-prakaraṇa. mDo xxiv.3

Śūnyatā-saptati-vṛtti. mDo xxiv.4

Mūla-madhyamaka-vṛtti-prasannapadā-nāma. mDo xxiii.1

Madhyamaka-avatāra-kārikā. mDo xxiii.2

- Madhyamaka-avatāra. mDo xxiii.3
 Madhyamaka-avatāra-bhāṣya. mDo xxiii.4
 Madhyamaka-prajñā-avatāra. mDo xxiii.5
 Tri-śaraṇa-(gamana)-saptati. mDo xxxii.9=xxxiii.101
 Vyākaraṇa-līṅga-avatāra (Attributed to Thon-mi-sambhoṭa, section 6 of which is Samanta-bhadra-vyākaraṇa attributed to Candrakīrti). mDo cxxiv.4
 Amṛta-siddhi-maṇḍala-vidhi (mādhyamika Candra, probably Candrakīrti). rG lxxv.49

30. CANDRAGOMĪ

In Tg are attributed over sixty works to Candragomī, a large number of which are Tāntrika treatises and stotra-s of Tārādevī. Specially interesting, however, appear to be the following works on medicine, grammar and ethics.

- Akāla-maraṇa-nivāraṇa-upāya. rG lxix.145
 Kuṣṭha-cikitsā-upāya. rG lxix.151
 Jvara-rakṣā-vidhi. rG lxix.155
 Paśumārī-rakṣā-vidhi. rG lxix.156
 Puṣṭi-vaśī-homa. rG lxix.159
 Siddhi-sādhana-anusāreṇa-mṛtavatsā-cikitsā.
 rG lxix.160
 Āyuh-varadhanī-tārā-kalpa. rG lxxi.363
 Candra-vyākaraṇa-sūtra. mDo cxvi.1
 Viṃśati-upasarga-vṛtti. mDo cxvi.2
 Varṇa-sūtra. mDo cxvi.3
 Candragomī-vṛtti. mDo cxxiii.38
 Uṇādi. mDo cxxxii.7
 Śiṣya-lekha. mDo xxxiii.33

There is also one work attributed to him having the title Lokānanda-nāṭaka-nāma (mDo xcii.2), a drama with a Jātaka theme consisting of 4 acts and a prologue.

31. DHARMAPĀLA

As is evident from the use of the expression 'it is said', Tāranātha hesitates to subscribe fully to the view that ācārya Dharmapāla of the period under discussion actually visited Suvarṇadvīpa in the later part of his life. Still, this reference to such a hearsay is interesting and it indicates that among the Tibetan scholars this view somehow or other gained ground. There is no doubt, however, that the view itself is due to a confusion. There was actually another Dharmapāla—also an outstanding Mahāyāna ācārya—who lived in Suvarṇadvīpa and is usually referred to as the guru of Suvarṇadvīpa (gser-glin-pa). But he belonged to a much later period, because Atiśa spent a considerable period studying the Mahāyāna texts under him—see A. Chattopadhyaya AT 84ff.

Ācārya Dharmapāla referred to by Tāranātha as a disciple of Dignāga and the successor of Candrakīrti at Nālandā must have been the same ācārya as mentioned by Yuan-chuang and I-Tsing. Yuan-chuang's own preceptor Śīlabhadra was a disciple of this Dharmapāla. See Watters i.372, 374, ii.109, 165, 168, 215, 226ff and I-Tsing (Takakusu) xiv, xxvi, lvii, lviii, 179, 181.

Strangely, however, it is difficult to trace with certainty the works of this Dharmapāla in the Tg, most of the Mahāyāna texts attributed to Dharmapāla in Tg being the works of the guru of Suvarṇadvīpa. Yet the Chinese pilgrims speak of Dharmapāla of the period under discussion as 'an author of repute and wrote treatises on etymology, logic and the metaphysics of Buddhism' (Watters ii.228).

However, the works of ācārya Dharmapāla, the preceptor of Śīlabhadra, survive in Chinese translation: 'The translations of 4 works attributed to Dharmapāla all date A.D. 650 to 710—see Nanjio Cat. Appendix i, 16.' [Takakusu (I-Tsing) lvii].

Incidentally, another Buddhist ācārya called Dharmapāla visited Tibet on the invitation of king Ye-śes-'od ten years before Atiśa went to Tibet—see BA i.69 ; 83-6.

32. VIRŪ-PĀ

- The following works are attributed to Virū-pā in Tg :
- Rakta-yamāri-sādhana. rG xliii.96
 Rakta-yamāntaka-sādhana. rG xliii.97
 Bali-vidhi. rG xliii.98
 Prabhāsa-udaya-krama. rG xliii.99
 Suniṣprapañca-tattva-upadeśa. rG xliii.100
 Rakta-yamāri-sādhana-vidhi. rG xliii.101
 Yamāri-yantrāvalī. rG xliii.102
 Amṛta-adhiṣṭhāna. rG xliii.125
 Śrī-virūpa-pada-catuḥ-aśīti. rG xlvii.23
 Dohā-koṣa. rG xlvii.24
 Mārga-phalānvita-avavādaka. rG xlvii.25
 Amṛta-siddhi-mūla. rG xlvii.27
 Karma-caṇḍālikā-dohākoṣa-gīti. rG xlviii.4
 Virūpa-vajra-gītikā. rG xlviii.16
 Virūpa-gītikā. rG xlviii.29
 Chinnamundā-sādhana. rG xiv.33
 Uddiyāna-śrī-yogi-yoginī-svayambhū-sambhoga-śmaśāna-kalpanāma. rG xxvi.63
 Guhya-abhiṣeka-prakriyā. rG lxxiv.25
 Amara-siddhi-vṛtti-(sanātana-siddhi) (commentary on rG
 xlvii.27). rG lxxxiv.14
 Amṛta-siddhi. rG lxxxv.21

33. ŚĀNTIDEVA

- The following works are attributed to Śāntideva in Tg :
- Sarasvatī-pūjā-vidhi. rG lxxi.400
 Cakra-samvara-ṭikā. rG lxxiii.59
 Cakra-samvara-sādhana. rG lxxiii.60
 Bodhisattva-caryā-avatāra (in 2 parts containing 1000 śloka-s, 10 chapters). mDo xxvi.1
 Śikṣā-samuccaya-kārikā. mDo xxxi.1=xxxiii.86
 Śikṣā-samuccaya. mDo xxxi.2
 Tathāgata-hṛdaya-pāpa-deśanā-vidhi-sahita-śatākṣara-rakṣā (extract from Śikṣā-samuccaya). mDo xxxi.3=xxxiii.61
 Ārya-atyaya-jñāna-(nāma)-mahāyāna-sūtra-vṛtti. mDo xxxvii.7
 Kevalī. mDo cxviii.15
 Bhodhisattva-caryā-avatāra-udbhava-praṇidhāna. mDo cxxxvi.31

34. DOMBĪ HERUKA

- The following works are attributed to Dombī Heruka in Tg :
- Guhya-vajra-tantra-rāja-vṛtti (Dombī, the king of Magadha), rG ix.3
 Ekavīra-sādhana. rG xiii.11=lxxiii.19
 Daśa-tattva. rG xxi.11
 Yogī-yoginī-nāma-sādhāraṇa-artha-upadeśa. rG xxi.12
 Gaṇa-cakra-vidhi. rG xxi.13
 Tri-krama-upadeśa. rG xxii.4
 Nairātmya-yoginī-sādhana. rG xxi.17
 Ārya-tārā-kurukullā-stotra. rG xxi.30
 Śrī-sahaja-siddhi. rG xlvi.8
 Nāma-saṃgīti-vṛtti. rG lix.8
 Sastotra-kurukullā-sādhana. rG lxxiv.49
 Mṛta-vidhi. rG lxxxi.29
 Śrī-gaṇapati-cakra-sūrya. rG lxxxiii.48

35. VAJRAGHAṆṬA

In Tg the following works are attributed to Vajraghaṇṭa (rdo-rje-dril-bu) :

- Cakrasambara-seka-prakriyā-upadeśa. rG xii.12
 Cakrasambara-sādhana. rG xii.13
 Cakrasambara-pañcakrama. rG xii.14=lxiii.21
 Sambara-kāya-maṇḍala-abhisamaya. rG xii.15
 Cakrasambara-pañcakrama-vṛtti. rG xii.16
 Sahaja-sambara-sādhana. rG xii.17
 Bhagavat-cakrasambara-sādhana-ratna-cintāmaṇi. rG xii.18
 Dvibhuja-sahaja-sambara-sādhana. rG xii.19
 Gaṇacakra-vidhi. rG xii.20
 Maṇḍala-deva-stotra-ratna-māyādāna. rG xii.22
 Vajra-vārāhi-sādhana. rG xiv.49
 Ekavīra-sādhana. rG xxi.8
 Abhiṣeka-vidhi-ratnamālā-sannibha. rG lxxxiii.21

36. RATNAKĪRTI

In Tg the following works are attributed to Ratnakīrti (rin-chen-grags) :

- Yoga-caturdeva-stotra. bsTod 59
 Śāsana-sarvasya-nāma-sādhana. rG xl.25
 Prajñā-pāramitā-maṇḍala-vidhi. rG lxiii.18
 Sarva-dhāraṇī-sādhana-krama-dvaya. rG lxix.196
 Sarva-dhāraṇī-maṇḍala-vidhi. rG lxix.197
 Sarva-sādhana-karman. rG lxix.198
 Vajra-vidāraṇī-sādhana. rG lxxxii.55
 Vajra-vidāraṇī-snāna-vidhi. rG lxxxii.56
 Abhisamaya-alamkāra-vṛtti-kīrtikalā-nāma. mDo viii.4
 Kalyāṇa-kāṇḍa-prakarāṇa. mDo lxi.11
 Dharma-viniścaya-prakarāṇa. mDo lxi.15

37. DHARMAKĪRTI

Bu-ston i.44ff: 'The Seven Treatises (of Dharmakīrti) consist of the three main works, which may be compared to a body, and four supplementary, which act as its members.' The three main ones are :

Nyāya-bindu. mDo xcv.12

Pramāṇa-viniścaya. mDo xcv.11

Pramāṇa-vārtika. mDo xcv.10

The four supplementary works are :

Hetu-bindu. mDo xcv.13

Sambandha-parīkṣā. mDo xcv.14

Vādanyāya. mDo xcv.16

Santānāntara-siddhi. mDo xcv.17

These apart, Tg contains—

Pramāṇa-vārtika-vṛtti (auto-commentary on Pramāṇa-vārtika and supra-commentary on Pramāṇa-samuccaya) mDo xcv.18. According to the Tibetan tradition, the first parivarta is Dharmakīrti's auto-commentary and from 2-4 by his contemporary Devendrabuddhi.

Sambandha-parīkṣā-vṛtti. (auto-commentary on the Sambandha-parīkṣā) mDo xcv.15.

Jātaka-mālā-ṭīkā. (commentary on Śūra's Jātaka-mālā). mDo xci.2.

Buddha-parinirvāṇa-stotra. bsTod 47

In Tg the following Tāntrika works are also attributed to him :

Hevajra-mahātantrarāja-sya-pañjikā-netra-vibhaṅga. rG xvii.6

Sūtra-vidhi. rG li.6

Sarva-durgati-parīśodhana-mara-homa-maṇḍala-upāyikā.

rG lxiii.10

Vajradākasya-stava-daṇḍaka. rG xii.23

38. KAMBALA

- In Tg the following works are attributed to Kambala :
- Ārya-prajñā-pāramitā-upadeśa. rG lxxxvi.33 ; lxiii.15 ;
mDo xxx.11
- Bhagavat-hevajra-sādhana-tattva-caturakrama. rG xxi.31
- Asambandha-dṛṣṭi. rG xlvi.38
- Asambandha-sarga-dṛṣṭi. rG xlvi.39
- Maṇḍala-vidhi. rG lxxii.54 ; mDo xxxiii.66
- Bhagavatī-prajñā-pāramitā-nava-śloka-piṇḍārtha. mDo xvi.1 ;
xvi.3 ; cxxxiii.10
- Commentary on above. mDo xvi.4
- Sādhana-nidāna-nāma-śrī-cakrasamvara-pañjikā. rG vi.2
- Bhagavat-śrī-cakrasamvarasya-sādhana-ratna-cūḍāmaṇi.
rG xii. 24
- Cakrasambara-maṇḍala-upāyikā-ratna-pradīpa-uddiyotana-
nāma. rG xii.25
- Kambala-gītikā. rG xlvi.30
- Cakrasambara-abhisamaya-ṭīkā. rG lxxiii.58
- Ārya-sapta-śloka-kā-bhagavatī-prajñā-pāramitā-nāma-sūtra.
mDo cxxxiii.11

cf BA ii.753 : 'ācārya Nāgārjuna and his disciples obtained the Yoga-tantras, including the Guhya-samāja and others (the Anuttara-yoga-tantras were also called Mahā-yoga-tantras) and preached them. They spread from the south. After that from the west Śrī Kambala (dPal La-ba-pa) and others discovered the Yoginī-tantras in the country of Oḍḍiyāna. They also spread towards Madhyadeśa.'

BA ii.731 Ni-gu-ma (sister of Nāro-pāda) said, 'Except myself and Kambala-pāda (La-ba-pa) no one else knows the precepts of the Six Doctrines.'

Kambala is also called the Sleeping Bhikṣu, because he is said to have slept for three years at the gate of king Indra-bhūti's palace—BA i.362.

39. INDRABHŪTI

In Tg the following works are attributed to Indrabhūti :
Sarvabuddha-samayoga-dākinī-jāla-samvara-tantrārtha-ṭikā.

rG xxiv.11

Cakrasamvara-tantra-rāja-samvara-samuccaya-nāma-vṛtti.

rG viii.1

Cakrasamvara-stotra. rG xii.21

Cakrasamvara-anubandha-saṃgraha. rG xiii.2

Siddha-vajrayoginī-sādhana. rG xiv.23

Śukla-vajrayoginī-sādhana. rG xiv.27

Dākinī-vajra-pañjara-mahātantrarājasya-pañjikā. rG xxiii.3

Sampuṭatilaka-nāma-yoginī-tantrarājasya-ṭikā...rG xviii.6

Ānanda-puṣpa-mālā. rG xxii.50

Tattvāmṛta-upadeśa. rG xxii.51

Sarvabuddha-samayoga-nāma-tantra-pañjikā. rG xxv.1

Sarvabuddha-samayoga-gaṇa-vidhi. rG xxv.12

Vajrasattva-upāyikā. rG xxv.20

Jñānasiddhi-nāma-sādhana-upāyikā. rG xlvi.3

Sahaja-siddhi. rG xlvii.1

Tattva-aṣṭaka-dṛṣṭi. rG xlviii.42

Ratnacakra-abhiṣeka-upadeśa-krama. rG xlviii.132

Ājñā-vinivarta-gaṇapati-sādhana. rG lxxii.36

Vajrayāna-mūlāṅgāpatti-deśanā. rG lxxiii.23

Guhyagarbha-kramadvayodeśa. rG lxxvi.17

Ratnacakra. rG lxxvi.32 (41)

Jñānāloka. rG lxxvi.32 (42)

Ratnamālā. rG lxxvi.32 (43)

Aparājītā-meruvarābhadrāṅkara-ratnasādhana. rG lxxxi.43

Aparājītā-ratnabhadra-sādhana. rG lxxxiii.62

Cittaratna-viśodhana. rG lxxxiv.16

Kurukullā-sādhana. rG lxx.75

Aṣṭabhūja-kurukullā-sādhana. rG lxxi.268

Vajrayoginī-mantratattva-svādhiṣṭhāna-nirdeśa. rG xiv.24

There is also a work attributed to 'king Middle Indrabhūti' (rājā-madhyama-indrabhūti)—Sahaja-samvara-svādhiṣṭhāna rG xiii.6. For Middle Indrabhūti, see note 68 of ch 26. Cf. BA ii. 553 for other legends about Indrabhūti.

40. KUKURI-PĀ

The following works are attributed to Kukuri-pā in Tg :

- Vajra-sattva-guhyārtha-dhara-vyūha. rG xxv.4
 Vairocana-guhyārtha-dhara-vyūha. rG xxv.5
 Vajra-heruka-guhyārtha-dhara-vyūha. rG xxv.6
 Padma-nartteśvara-guhyārtha-dhara-vyūha. rG xxv.7
 Vajra-ratnaprabha-guhyārtha-dhara-vyūha. rG xxv.8
 Sughoṭa-lalita-guhyārtha-dhara-vyūha. rG xxv.9
 Sarva-maṇḍala-anusāreṇa-pāñca-vidhi. rG xxv.10
 Sarva-buddha-samayoga-maṇḍala-vidhi. rG xxv.11
 Mahāmāyā-tantra-anusāriṇi-heruka-sādhana-upāyikā.
 rG xxiii.21
 Vajra-sattva-sādhana. rG xxiii.22
 Moha-taraṇa-kalpa. rG xxiii.23
 Mahāmāyā-sādhana-maṇḍala-vidhi. rG xxiii.24
 Mahāmāyā-maṇḍala-deva-stotra. rG xxiii.25
 Tattva-sukha-bhāvanā-anusāri-yoga-bhāvanā-upadeśa.
 rG xlviii.65
 Srāva-paricchedana. rG xlviii.66
 Mahāmāyā-vali-vidhi. rG lxxvi.28

41. SARORUHAVAJRA

The following works are attributed to Saroruhavajra in Tg :

- Gīti-tattva. rG xx.9
 Hevajra-sādhana. rG xxi.1

- Hevajra-maṇḍala-vidhi. rG xxi.4
 Samvara-cakra-īśvara-ālikāli-mahāyoga-bhāvanā. rG xlviii.80
 Hevajra-tantra-pañjikā-padminī-nāma. rG xv.2
 Hevajra-maṇḍala-karma-krama-vidhi. rG xxi.2
 Hevajra-pradīpa-śūlopama-avavādaka. rG xxi.3
 Homa-vidhi. rG xxi.5
 Hevajra-bhaṭṭāraka-stotra. rG xxi.7
 Hevajra-maṇḍala-karma-krama-vidhi. rG xxii.1
 Guhya-kośa-nāma-mantra-śāstra. rG lxxiv.22
 Amṛta-srava. rG lxxv.1

42. LALITAVAJRA

- Vajrabhairava-baḥi-vidhi, rG xliii.73
 Bhairava-maṇḍala-vidhi. rG xliii.74
 Vajrabhairava-sādhana. rG xliii.72
 Vajrasattva-sādhana-vṛtti. rG xxxiv.10
 Yamāri-maṇḍala-upāyikā-yamāntakodaya. rG xliii.4
 Caitya-sādhana-piṇḍikṛta-vidhi. rG xliii.5
 Kṛṣṇa-trimukha-ṣaḍbhūja-sādhana. rG xliii.41
 Kṛṣṇa-yamāri-homa-vidhi. rG xliii.44
 Vajra-bhairava-caturyoga-niyama. rG xliii.84
 Karma-yama-dharmarāja-sādhana. rG xliii.127
 Kṛṣṇa-yamāri-nāma-cakra. rG lxxx.11
 Samaya-amṛta-svāda. rG lxxx.12
 Cakra-nāma. rG lxxx.13
 Vajra-bhairava-tantra-vṛtti-alamkāra-upadeśa-nāma.
 rG lxxx.14
 Vajra-bhairava-sādhana-upāyikā. rG lxxx.16
 Vajra-bhairava-samaya-maṇḍala-vidhi. rG lxxx.17
 Mahā-vajra-bhairava-māraṇa-cakra. rG lxxx.22
 Kālacakra-riṭiti-sahaja-sādhana-nāma. rG iv.10
 Bhagavat-ekajaṭa-sādhana. rG xlv.33

Besides, about sixteen Tāntrika works are attributed to Mitrayogī or Jagat-mitra-ānanda—probably the same as Lalitavajra : rG xlv.35 ; 39 ; 40 ; 47 ; xlviii. 126-31 ; lxxiii. 161-2 ; 164 ; lxxxiv. 9-10. The other name by which Lalitavajra is mentioned in Tg is Ajita-mitra-gupta (rG xlv. 33) cf BA i. 367—Buddhajñānapāda heard many Kriyā and Yoga Tantras from Lalitavajra, who was born in Maṇḍivīpa.

43. JĀLANDHARI-PĀ

The following works are attributed to Jālandhari-pā in Tg :
Cakra-samvara-garbha-tattva-siddhi. rG xiii.3

Vajra-yoginī-sādhana. rG xiv.48

Vimukta-mañjarī. rG lxxiii.49

Mahā-kāruṇika-abhiṣeka-prakarāṇa-upadeśa. rG lxxxii.8

Bhagavat-samvara-stotra. rG lxxiii.24

Hevajra-sāadhanasya-ṭippanī-śuddhi-vajra-pradīpa. rG xxi.19

Huṃkāra-cittabindu-bhāvanā-krama. rG xlvi.72

44. KRṢṆĀCĀRĪ

cf. the prophecy quoted by Bu-ston ii.120 : 'And in the country of Oḍiviśa there will appear a man possessed of the faculty of mystic meditation which he will exercise with great energy. He will be a follower of the precepts of Rāmaṇi. His name (is spelt as follows) :—The letter Ka of the first phonetic class is adorned with the first vowel (i.e. A). Then comes the fourth letter of the seventh class (Ha), being as if slightly mounted on the letter Na. This unique and powerful Yogin will secure the eight great principal magical properties.

The person spoken of here is Kāhna-pā or Kṛṣṇacārin (nag-po-spyod-pa-pa). The six pupils of the latter are to secure the Great Seal (Mahā-mudrā) by means of which everything which has a separate and physical reality will be rejected.'

Tg contains a large number of works—over 150 in all—attributed to nag-po-spyod-pa-pa, Kāhnapāda, Kṛṣṇapāda, Kṛṣṇācārya, Kṛṣṇapaṇḍita, Kāhna-pā, nag-po('i)-shabs, etc.

of BA ii. 754 : regarding the appearance of Kālacakra in the Ārya-deśa, 'Gos lo-tsā-ba remarks—'after Ghaṇṭapāda (came) Kūrmapāda, he (transmitted it) to Jālandharapāda ; the latter to Kṛṣṇapāda, the latter to Bhādrapāda ; the latter to Vijayapāda ; the latter to Tilli-pā ; the latter to Nāro-pā. Thus from Ghaṇṭa(pāda) till Nāro-pā, there have been eight teachers in the line.' BA i. 385 also mentions Kṛṣṇapāda coming next to Jālandharapāda in the lineage.

45. SAHAJALALITA

Following works are attributed to Sahajalalita in Tg :
Hevajra-tantra-krameṇa-svādhiṣṭhāna-kurukullā-sādhana.

rG xxii.26

Ārya-tārā-maṇḍala-sādhana-vidhi. rG xxvi.23

Samanta-mukha-praveśa-raśmi-vimala-uṣṇiṣa-prabhāsa-sarvatathāgata-hṛdaya-samaya-vilokinī-nāma-dhāraṇī-vivṛṭti.

rG lxvi.18

Hevajra-udbhava-kurukullā-sādhana. rG xxii.28

Hālāhala-sādhana. rG lxxi.25 ; 29 ; 116

Khasarpaṇa-sādhana. rG lxxi.26

Ārya-avalokiteśvarasya-ṣaḍakṣarī-sādhana. rG lxxi.27

Hari-hari-harivāhana-udbhava-avalokiteśvara-sādhana.

rG lxxi.28

Uḍḍiyāna-mārīci-sādhana. rG lxxi.39

Ārya-ṣaḍakṣarī-mahāvidyā-sādhana. rG lxxi.100

Oḍḍiyāna-mārīci-sādhana. rG lxxi.225

Kurukullā-sādhana. rG lxxi.263

Ārya-amoghapāśa-sādhana. rG lxxxii.12

46. VINĪTADEVA

- In Tg the following works are attributed to Vinīta-deva, whom Vidyabhusana HIL 320 proposes to place in c A.D.700.
- Prakaraṇa-viṃśaka-ṭīkā. (commentary on Vasubandhu's Viṃśaka-kārikā). mDo lviii.11
- Triṃśaka-ṭīkā. (commentary on Vasubandhu's Triṃśaka-kārikā). mDo xli.1
- Vinaya-stotra-pada-vyākhyāna. (commentary on Dharmasreṣṭhī's Vinaya-stotra). mDo lxxviii.5=xc.10
- Triṃśata-kārikā-vyākhyāna. mDo lxxxix.4
- Vinaya-vibhaṅga-pada-vyākhyāna. (commentary in 5,100 śloka-s on Kg Vinaya). mDo lxxx.
- Commentary on Vasumitra's Samaya-bheda-uparacana-cakra. mDo xc.13
- Tantrāntara-siddhi-ṭīkā. (commentary on Dharmakīrti's Santānāntara-siddhi). mDo cviii.1
- Nyāyabindu-ṭīkā. (commentary on Dharmakīrti's Nyāyabindu). mDo cxi.1
- Hetubindu-ṭīkā. (commentary on Dharmakīrti's Hetubindu). mDo cxi.5
- Sambandha-parīkṣā-ṭīkā. (commentary on Dharmakīrti's Sambandha-parīkṣā-prakaraṇa). mDo cxii.1
- Vādanyāya-ṭīkā. (commentary on Dharmakīrti's Vādanyāya-prakaraṇa). mDo cxii.3
- Ālambana-parīkṣā-ṭīkā. (commentary on Dharmakīrti's Ālambana-parīkṣā). mDo cxii.5

47. Jñānagarbha

The Mādhyamika works attributed in Tg to Jñānagarbha appear to be—

Satya-dvaya-vibhaṅga. mDo xxviii.1

Auto-commentary on the above called Satyadvaya-vibhaṅga-vṛtti Satya-dvaya-viniścaya, mDo xviii.2, which was commented upon by Śāntarakṣita, mDo xxviii.3

Bhāvanā-yoga-mārga. mDo xxx.2

Ārya-sandhi-nirmocana-sūtra-ārya-maitreya-kevala-parivarta-bhāṣya. (Partial commentary on Kg mDo Vol ca v.1-2)

These apart, certain Tāntrika works and commentaries on Dhāraṇīs are attributed to Jñānagarbha : rG xxi.58 ; xli.13 ; lxviii.2-3. Tg also contains a considerable number of works translated by Jñānagarbha of India.

Mar-pa is mentioned as a disciple of Jñānagarbha, under whom he translated some works contained in Tg—see Roerich BA ii.417n.

48. Buddhajñāna

cf Bu-ston ii,159f—Buddhajñāna, a disciple of Haribhadra and a preceptor of Guṇamitra. He composed 14 works on Guhya-samāja and also 'works on offerings, burning sacrifices, worship, magic circles, the propitiation of the Lord of the Water, etc, as runs the tradition.'

In Tg about 50 works are attributed to Buddhajñāna.

'Gos lo-tṣā-ba (BA i.367ff) gives a long account of the Tāntrika career of Buddhajñāna.

49. ŚĀNTARAKṢITA

In Tg the following works are attributed to Śāntarakṣita, Śāntirakṣita or Śāntijīva, about whom see A. Chatto-padhya AT 228ff :

Vajradhara-saṃgīta-bhagavat-stotra-ṭīkā. bsTod.52

Aṣṭa-tathāgata-stotra. bsTod.55

Hevajra-udbhava-kurukullā-pañca-mahā-upadeśa. rG xxii.29
 Tattvasiddhi-nāma-prakaraṇa. rG lxxii.4
 Satyadvaya-vibhaṅga-pañjikā. mDo xxviii.3
 Madhyamaka-alamkāra-kārikā. mDo xxviii.4
 Madhyamaka-alamkāra-vṛtti. mDo xxviii.5
 Samvara-viṃśaka-vṛtti. mDo lxi.13
 Vādanyāya-vṛtti-vipañcitārtha. mDo cviii.2=cxii.4
 Tattva-saṃgraha-kārikā. mDo cxiii.1
 Daṇḍa-hasta-lekha. rG lxxvi.32

50. HARIBHADRA

In Tg the following works are attributed to Haribhadra (señ-ge-bzañ-po) :

Pañcaviṃśati-sāhasrikā-prajñā-pāramitā. mDo iii-v. The text is different from the Prajñā-pāramitā of Kg.
 Ārya-aṣṭa-sāhasrikā-prajñā-pāramitā-vyākhyāna-abhisamaya-alamkāra-āloka-nāma. mDo vi.
 Bhagavat-ratna-guṇa-saṅcaya-gāthā-pañjikā-nāma. mDo vii.1
 Abhisamaya-alamkāra-nāma-prajñā-pāramitā-upadeśa-śāstravṛtti. mDo vii.2

51. YAŚOMITRA

In Tg the following works are attributed to Yaśomitra :

Abhidharmakośa-ṭīkā Sphuṭārthā-nāma. mDo lxxv-lxxvi. Commentary on Vasubandhu's Abhidharmakośa.

Bodhisattva-bhūmi-śīla-parivarta-ṭīkā. mDo liv.7
 Abhidharma-samuccaya-bhāṣya. mDo lvii.1
 Abhidharma-samuccaya-vyākhyā. mDo lvii.2

Also two stotra-s are attributed to ācārya Jinaputra (rgyalba'i-sras-po), probably the same as Yaśomitra :

Tathāgata-nāma-saṃgīti-kalpika-bhadrālamkāra-mālā.
 bsTod 58

Tri-ratna-stotra-vṛtti bsTod 36

52. ŚĀKYAMITRA

BA i. 359 mentions Śākyamitra as one of the four disciples of Nāgārjuna. Another Śākyamitra is mentioned in BA i. 310 who was evidently in Tibet in A. D. 1387. The works of Śākyamitra catalogued in Supplementary Note 14 are perhaps those of the former.

53. KALYĀṆAMITRA

In Tg the following works are attributed to Kalyāṇamitra, mentioned as a Sautrāntika ācārya :

Pratimokṣa-vṛtti-pada-premotpādikā. mDo lxxviii.3

Śramaṇera-śikṣāpada-sūtra. mDo xc.4

Vinaya-praśna-kārikā. mDo xc.7

Vinaya-praśna-ṭīkā. mDo xc.8

Vinayottara āgama-viśeṣa-āgama-praśna-vṛtti. mDo lxxxi.2

Vinaya-vastu-ṭīkā. mDo lxxix.2

54. DAMṢṬRĀSENA

The following works are attributed to Damṣṭrāseṇa (mche-ba'i-sde) in Tg :

Ārya-śata-sāhasrikā-pañcaviṃśati-sāhasrikā-aṣṭādaśa-sāhasrikāprajñā-pāramitā-vṛhat-ṭīkā. mDo xiv

Śatasāhasrikā-prajñāpāramitā-vṛhat-ṭīkā. mDo xii-xiii.

The name occurs in various forms : ācārya Diṣṭasena, Damṣṭasena, Damṣṭasyana, etc.

55. Mañjuśrīkīrti

In Tg the following works are attributed to Mañjuśrīkīrti :
 Vajrayāna-mūlāpatti-ṭīkā. rG xlvi.146
 Sarvaguhya-vidhi-garbhālaṅkāra. rG xlvi.148
 Ārya-mañjuśrī-nāma-saṃgīti-ṭīkā. rG lviii.3
 Dharmadhātu-vāgīśvara-mañjuśrī-maṇḍala-vidhi. rG lx.50
 Ārya-sarva-dharma-svabhāva-samatā-vipañcita-samādhirājanāma-mahāyāna-sūtra-ṭīkā-kīrti-mālā-nāma. (commentary on Kg mDo vol da—Sendai Cat. 127). mDo xxxviii.1
 Syādyanta-prakriyā. (Sans. Title Kalāpasyādi) mDo. cxvi.12

56. LĪLĀVAJRA

Fortyseven works are attributed in Tg to Līlāvajra, Līlāvajrapāda, Vilāsavajra, Varabodhi, Viśvarūpa : rG xxi.66 ; xxii.35 ;
 xli.7 ; 10 ; xlii.5 ; xliii.4-5 ; 90 ; xlv.5-6 ; lviii.2 ; lxxii.18-38 ;
 lxxiv.12 ; lxxv.3 ; 8 ; 23 ; 26 ; 29 ; 33 ; lxxvi.9 ; lxxxi.4 ; 23 ;
 xxxiii.19 ; xlv.27 ; lxxvii-lxxx ; xlv.4 ; lviii.2

57. Paṇḍita RĀHULA

The following works are attributed in Tg to paṇḍita Rāhula :
 Utpādanasamāpi-nāma-nairātmya-ekavīra-sādhana. rG xxii.22
 Acintya-paribhāvana. rG xlvi.73
 Dharma-caryā-aparādha-svayaṃ-mukti. rG lxxiii.33
 Vajra-khecari-sādhana. rG lxxxii.102
 Nātha-samaya-stotra. rG lxxxiii.4

58. KALYĀṄAGUPTA

In Tg the following works are attributed to Kalyāṅagupta, alias Vāk-gupta, Vāk-praja, Kuśalarakṣita, Kalyāṅarakṣita :

Sarvajña-siddhi-kārikā. mDo cxii.7
 Vāhyārtha-siddhi-kārikā. mDo cxii.8
 Śruti-parīkṣā-kārikā. mDo cxii.9
 Anya-apoha-vicāra-kārikā. mDo cxii.10
 Īśvara-bhaṅga-kārikā. mDo cxii.11

59. PRABHĀKARA

The following works are attributed in Tg to Prabhākara :

Nāma-saṃgīti-sādhana. rG lxi.25
 Hayagrīva-sādhana. rG lxix.117
 Caṇḍa-mahāroṣaṇa-sādhana. rG lxix.123
 Sarva-tantra-hṛdaya-uttara-hayagrīva-sādhana. rG lxxi.319

60. BUDDHAGUHYA

The following works are attributed to Buddhaguhya in Tg :

Durgati-pariśodhana-artha-vyañjana-vṛtti. rG lxi.54
 Dhyānottara-pañjala-ṭīkā. rG lxvi.1
 Ārya-suvāhu-paripṛcchā-nāma-tantra-piṇḍārtha. rG lxvi.2
 Ārya-vajra-vidāraṇi-nāma-dhāraṇi-ṭīkā-ratna-ābhāsvarā-nāma.
 rG lxvi.10
 Sarva-durgati-pariśodhana-maṇḍala-vidhikrama. rG lxiii.9
 Vairocana-abhisambodhi-vikurvita-adhiṣṭhāna-mahā-tantravṛtti. rG lxv.1
 Vairocana-abhisambodhi-tantra-piṇḍārtha. rG lxv.2

- Vairocana-abhisambodhi-tantra-vṛtti. rG lxiv. 2
 Citta-piṇḍārtha-dhyāna. rG lxxvi.32(108)
 Cittārtha-prakaraṇa. rG lxxvi.32(109)
 Yoga-bali-krama. rG lxxvi.32(112)
 Caturapramāṇa-ṣikā. mDo xxx.6
 Maṇḍala-kriyā-vidhi. mDo xxxiii.62
 Yogi-kalpa-vighna-nirvahaṇa. mDo xxxiii.72 = rG xlvi.116
 Bhoṭa-svāmi-dāsa-lekha. (Letter addressed to Khri-sroṅ-lde-btsan, king of Tibet and his subjects, the Tibetan devotees). mDo xciv.39
 Vajrasattva-māyā-jāla-prabhā-krama. rG lxxv.16
 Sūkṣma-jāla. rG lxxv.19
 Tattva-āloka-karma-alaṅkāra. rG lxxv.20
 Mārga-vyūha. rG lxxv.21
 Citta-bindu-upadeśa. rG lxxv.23
 Krodha-māyā-abhiṣeka-maṇḍala-vajra-karmāvali. rG lxxvi.7
 Māyā-abhiṣeka-āvaśyaka-mūla-vṛtti. rG lxxvi.8
 Vibhāga-vṛtti. rG lxxvi.32(2)
 Bindu-piṇḍārtha. rG lxxvi.32(24)
 Śānti-krodha-utpādana-samāpana-upadeśa. rG lxxvi.32(81)
 Māyā-prabhāvali. rG lxxvi.32(82)
 Heruka-kāya-vāk-citta-sādhana. rG lxxvi.32(98)
 Krodha-mudrā-dhyāna. rG lxxvi.32(99)
 Vairocana-abhisambodhi-tantra-piṇḍārtha. rG lxiv.1
 Karma-upāya. rG lxviii.241
 Vajrapāṇi-sādhana. rG lxviii.173
 Vajra-vidāraṇi-nāma-dhāraṇi-sādhana-ekavīra-sādhana.
 rG lxviii.238
 Ārya-vajra-vidāraṇi-nāma-dhāraṇi-bali-vidhi-krama.
 rG lxviii.239
 Ārya-vajra-vidāraṇi-nāma-abhiṣeka-vidhi. rG lxviii.242
 Dharma-maṇḍala-sūtra. rG lxxii.1
 Maṇḍala-kriyā-vidhi. rG lxxii.55
 Māyā-jāla-vajra-karma-krama. rG lxxv.5
 Vajrasattva-māyā-jāla-abhiṣeka-āvaśyaka. rG lxxv.6
 Abhiṣeka-ārtha-nirbheda. rG lxxv.7

61. VAIROCANABHADRA

Tg contains a number of works translated by Vairocana of India (rG xlvii.24 ; lxxxiii.47 ; 57 ; 60), by Vairocanarakṣita (rG xxi. 31 : xlvii.13 ; lxiii. 13 ; lxxxiv.7 ; lxiii. 55)

Besides these, Tg contains the following by Vairocanarakṣita of Vikramaśīla :

Bodhisattva-caryā-avatāra-pañjikā. mDo xxvii.30

Śiṣyalekha-ṭippaṇa. mDo xciv.36

Śikṣā-kusuma-mañjarī. mDo xxxi.5

The same Vairocanarakṣita appears to be the author of a number of Tāntrika works (rG xliii.91 ; 92 ; 112).

62. KAMALAŚĪLA

The following works are attributed to Kamalaśīla in Tg :

Ārya-sapta-śatika-prajñā-pāramitā-ṭīkā. mDo xvi.6

Āya-vajra-chedikā-prajñā-pāramitā-ṭīkā. mDo xvi.7

Prajñā-pāramitā-hṛdaya-nāma-ṭīkā. mDo xvi.12

Madhyamaka-alamkāra-pañjikā. mDo xxviii.6

Madhyamaka-ālokanāma. mDo xxviii.7

Tattva-āloka-prakaraṇa. mDo xxviii.8

Sarva-dharma-abhāva-siddhi. mDo xxviii.9

Bhāvanā-krama. mDo xxx 7, 8, 9.

Bhāvanā-yoga-avatāra. mDo xxx.10 = mDo xxxiii.74

Ārya-avikalpa-praveśa-dhāraṇī-ṭīkā. mDo xxxvii.3

Ārya-śāli-stambaka-ṭīkā. (commentary on Kg mDo vol. isha xviii.10) mDo xxxvii.4

Śramaṇa-pañcāśatka-kārikā-pada-abhismarāṇa. mDo xc.2

Aṣṭa-duḥkha-viśeṣa-nirdeśa. mDo xciv.38

Śraddhā-utpāda-pradīpa. mDo xciv.40

Nyāya-bindu-pūrvapakṣa-samkṣipti. mDo cxi.3

Tattva-saṃgraha-pañjikā. mDo cxii.2-cxiv
 Citta-sthāpanā-sāmānya-sūtra-saṃgraha. mDo cxxvii.3
 Prañidhāna-paryanta-dvaya. mDo cxxxvi.39

63. DHARMOTTARA

The following works are attributed to Dharmottara in Tg :

Pramāṇa-viniścaya-ṭīkā. mDo cix-cx.1
 Nyāyabindu-ṭīkā. mDo cxi.2
 Pramāṇa-parīkṣā. mDo cxii.12, 13
 A-(nyā)-poha-prakaraṇa. mDo cxii.14
 Paralokasiddhi. mDo cxii.15
 Kṣaṇabhaṅga-siddhi. mDo cxii.17

64. VIMALAMITRA

See BA i. 191f : 'Vimalamitra was also a direct disciple of Buddhaguhyā. Buddhaguhyā taught the Māyā Cycle to Vimala and the latter to rMa Rin-chen-mchog. Now, it is stated in ancient records about the ācārya Vimalamitra that there had been two Vimalamitras, the Earlier and the Later, during the reigns of the religious kings Khri-sroñ-lde-btsan and mÑa'-bdag Ral-pa-cān. The Earlier lived during the reign of the religious king Khri-sroñ-lde-btsan. He did not dress in monastic robes but went about attired as a Yogin. The king and his ministers expressed doubt as to whether he was a heretic or a Buddhist. Doubts were also expressed, because while making obeissance, he had broken an image of Vairocana. In order to remove the doubts of the ministers, he composed the ṣaḍaṅga-śaraṇa, in which he said : "The king and ministers did not trust me, so I compose the rite of the six Branches of the Refuge-taking Ceremony. He also composed an extensive commentary on the Prajñā-hṛdaya and Sakṛtprāveśikanirvikalpa-bhāvanārtha. To judge from the method employed in these books he must have lived after the ācārya Kamalaśīla. The Later Vimalamitra is the author of an extensive commentary on the Pratimokṣa-sūtra in fifty chapters (Pratimokṣa-sūtra-ṭikā Vinayasamuccaya). He should be regarded as a monk. The Earlier Vimala taught the precepts of the sññ-thig to the king and to Myan Tiñ-'dzin-bzañ-po. Then Vimala proceeded to China.'

Roerich adds in note BA i. 119n: rDsogs-po-chen-po-sññ-thig [i.e. the Doctrine of Māha-śānti] is the 'name of a mystic doctrine of the rññ-ma-pas [i.e. followers of the old Tantras] said to have been founded by Vimalamitra. The philosophic background of the system is the Mādhyamika doctrine.'

Tg contains over eighty works of which Vimalamitra is mentioned either as the author or the translator.

For Vimalamitra, see also BA i. 106-8 ; 197 : ii. 491 ; 497.

65. DHARMĀKARA

The following works are attributed to Dharmākara in Tg :
Vajra-tārā-sādhana. rG lxxi.185

Dhvajāgra-keyūra-sādhana. rG lxxi.296

Tg also contains the following works as translated by Dharmākara : mDo xxiii.38 ; lxxii.4, 5 ; xc.7, 8, 11 ; xciv.24

66. ĀNANDAGARBHA

The following works are attributed to Ānandagarbha in Tg :
Sarva-kalpa-samuccaya-nāma-sarva-buddha-samayoga-dākinī-jāla-samvara-uttara-uttara-tantra-ṭikā. rG xxv.2

Śrī-guhya-samāja-pañjikā. rG xlii.1

Sarva-tathāgata-tattva-saṃgraha-mahāyāna-abhisamaya-nāmatantra-vyākhyā-tattvālokakarī. rG lii-liii

- Paramādi-vṛtti. rG liv.1
 Paramādi-ṭīkā. rG liv.2 ; lv ; lvi.1
 Māyājāla-mahātantra-rāja-ṭīkā. rG lvi.2
 Vajra-dhātu-mahāmaṇḍala-upāyikā-sarva-vajrodaya. rG lvii.1
 Vajra-sattva-udaya-nāma-sādhana-upāyikā. rG lvii.2
 Vajra-sattva-sādhana-upāyikā. rG lvii.3
 Ārya-tattva-saṃgraha-tantra-uddhṛta-śrī-trailokya-vijayamaṇḍala-upāyikā. rG lvii.4
 Paramādi-maṇḍala-vidhi-nāma. rG lvii.5
 Pratiṣṭhā-vidhi. rG lvii.6, 7
 Sarva-durgati-pariśodhana-tejorājasya-tathāgatasya-arhataḥsamyak-sambuddhasya-nāma-kalpa-ṭīkā. rG lxiii.1
 Sarva-durgati-pariśodhana-mahāmaṇḍala-sādhana-upāyikā.
 rG lxiii.3 ; 4
 Sarva-durgati-pariśodhana-preta-homa-vidhi. rG lxiii.5
 Sarva-durgati-pariśodhana-āgame Śava-śuddhi-saṃskāra-sūtra-piṇḍita-vidhi. rG lxiii.6
 Sarva-durgati-pariśodhana-maṇḍala-vidhi. rG lxiii.8
 Sarva-durgati-pariśodhana-nāma-saṃkṣipta-prakriyā-vidhi.
 rG lxiii.12
 Prajñā-pāramitā-maṇḍala-upāyikā. rG lxiii.18
 Mārīci-devī-sādhana. rG lxxi.358
 Mahāvatyāli. rG lxxvi.32(52)
 Śrī-guhya-samāja-mahātantra-rāja-ṭīkā. rG lxxvii-lxxx

67. PARAHITA

The following works are attributed to Parahita in Tg :
 Maṇḍala-abhiṣeka-vidhi. rG xxvi.27
 Śūnyatā-saptati-vivṛti. mDo xxiv.5
 Sūtra-alamkāra-di-śloka-dvaya-vyākhyāna. mDo xlvi.1

Tg also contains more than twenty works as translated or corrected by Parahita.

See BA i. 87—Parahita of Kashmir who went to Tibet and assisted Mahājana and other Tibetan scholars in translating the Buddhist scriptures.

68. JINAMITRA

A large number of works in Kg and Tg remain preserved as translated by Jinamitra, who went to Tibet during the reign of king Ral-pa-can and took part in the large-scale and authentic translation of the Buddhist texts. cf. Bu-ston ii.196-97 : Ral-pa-can found the earlier translations of the scriptures partly unintelligible. 'Besides, different translations were made from the Chinese, from the language of Li and Sahor etc. Owing to this there were many different rendering of words and the study of the Doctrine became very difficult. Seeing this, the king issued the following order : "The Aparāntaka teachers Jinamitra, Surendrabodhi, Śilendrabodhi and Bodhimitra, the Tibetan teachers Ratnarakṣita and Dharmatāśīla, the skilful translators Jñānasena, Jayarakṣita, Mañjuśrīvarman, Ratnendratāśīla and others are to translate the Hīnayānistic and Mahāyānistic Scriptures directly from Sanskrit."

69. Sarvajñadeva

Tg contains more than twentythree works as translated by Sarvajñadeva, inclusive of the works by Māṛceta, Dignāga, Āryadeva, Śāntideva, Nāgārjuna, Candragomī and others.

70. TILLI-PĀ

The following works are attributed to Tilli-pā in Tg :
 Tattvacaturopadeśa-prasanna-dīpa-nāma. rG xxi.24
 Antara-vāhya-ṛṣa-nivṛtti-bhāvanā-krama. rG xlvi.88
 Bodhicitta-vāyu-caraṇa-bhāvanā-upāya. rG xlvi.92
 Śaḍ-dharma-upadeśa. rG lxxiii.27
 Acintya-mahāmudrā. rG lxxiii.32
 Guru-sādhana. rG lxxxiv.2
 Vāhya-siddhi-pratītya-samutpāda, rG lxxxiv.3

71. Prajñāpālita

The following works are attributed to Prajñāpālita in Tg :
 Pratiṣṭhā-vidhi. rG lvii.9

Thirtyseven (or thirtysix) works on Yamāri-tantra beginning with Rakta-yamāri-karmāvali-sādhana-cintāmaṇi-nāma (rG xliii.129) and concluding with Yamāri-cintāmaṇi-mālā-nāma-sādhana (rG xlvi.165) : these 37 (or 36) works are mentioned as forming a continuous one, rG xliii.129 being the introduction and rG xlvi.165 the conclusion.

72. JETĀRI

The following works are attributed to Jetāri in Tg :
 Hevajrasya-seka-nīścaya. rG xxi.48
 Daśa-krodha-vidyā-vidhi. rG xxi.49
 Catuḥ-pīṭha-tattva-catuṣka. rG xxiii.14
 Nātha-akṣobhya-sādhana. rG lxiii.30
 Aparimita-āyuh-stotra. rG lxviii.6
 Ārya-aparimita-āyuh-jñāna-sādhana. rG lxviii.7

- Aparimita-āyuh-jñāna-vidhi. rG lxviii.8
 Ārya-lokeśvara-cintāmaṇi-cakravarti-sādhana. rG lxviii.156
 Caṇḍa-mahāroṣaṇa-sādhana. rG lxix.124
 Śītavaiṭī-sādhana. rG lxix.182
 Mahāpratisarā-cakra-lekhana-vidhi. rG lxix.186
 Vajra-śṛṅghalā-sādhana. rG lxxi.360
 Maṇḍala-vidhi. rG lxxii.56 = mDo xxxiii.63
 Sugata-mata-vibhaṅga-kārikā. mDo xxix.7 = mDo xxxiii.84, cxxviii.4 & 5
 Bodhyāpatti-deśanā-vṛtti-bodhisattva-śikṣā-krama-nāma.
 mDo xxxvii.9
 Bālāvatāra-tarka-nāma. mDo cxii.26
 Hetutattva-upadeśa. mDo cxii.24
 Dharma-dharmi-viniścaya. mDo cxii.25
 Bodhicitta-utpāda-samādāna-vidhi. mDo xxxii.6 = mDo xxxiii.29
 Māyā-jāla-krama-avalokiteśvara-sādhana. rG lxxi.94
 Catuḥ-mudrā-sādhana. rG lxxiv.24
 Ādi-karmika-bhūmi-pariṣkāra. mDo xxxi.7 = mDo xxxiii.30
 Citta-ratna-viśodhana-krama-nāma-lekha. mDo xxxiii.31 = mDo xciv.30

73. KĀLACAKRAPĀDA

The following works are attributed to Kālacakrapāda in Tg :
 Nakṣatra-maṇḍala-sādhana-ekādaśa-aṅga-nāma. rG iv.5
 Ārya-kālacakrapāda-sampradāya-nāma-ṣaḍaṅga-yoga-upadeśa.
 rG iv.19

- Kālacakra-supraṭiṣṭhā-upāyikā-vidhi. rG v.5
 Kālacakra-gaṇacakra-upāyikā-vidhi. rG v.6
 Kālacakra-homa-upāyikā-vidhi. rG v.7
 Padmīnī-nāma-pañjikā. rG iii.3
 Kālacakra-upadeśa. rG iv.13
 Seka-uddeśa-ṭīkā. rG iv.1

See BA ii.765 : there were two Kālacakrapādas, one Senior and the other his disciple, Kālacakrapāda the Junior.

74. ŚĀNTI-PĀ

- The following works are attributed to Śānti-pā in Tg :
- Sukha-duḥkha-dvaya-parityāga-dṛṣṭi. rG xlviii.37 Madhyamaka-alamkāra-vṛtti-madhyamaka-pratipadā-siddhi-nāma. mDo lxi.3
 Prajñā-pāramitā-upadeśa. mDo lxi.9
 Prajñā-pāramitā-bhāvanā-upadeśa. mDo lxi.7, 10=
 mDo xxxiii.82
 Vijñaptimātratā-siddhi. mDo cxii.22
 Antar-vyāpti. mDo cxii.23
 Ārya-aṣṭa-sāhasrikā-prajñā-pāramitā-pañjikā-sārottamā-nāma.
 mDo x.1
 Sūtra-samuccaya-bhāṣya-ratnāloka-alamkāra-nāma.
 mDo xxx.30
 Madhyamaka-alamkāra-upadeśa. mDo lxi.16
 Chandaḥ-ratnākara. mDo cxvii.4 & 5 ; cxxxiii.7
 Vajra-tārā-sādhana. rG lxxi.186=rG xxii.38

75. VĀGĪŚVARAKĪRTI

- The following works are attributed to Vāgīśvarakīrti in Tg :
- Samaya-tārā-stava. rG lxxxii.48
 Mṛtyu-vañcana-upadeśa. rG xxvi.68=lxxxii.21
 Sapta-aṅga. rG xl.17
 Tattva-ratna-āloka. rG xl.18
 Vajrapāṇi-sādhana. rG xlviii.197
 Pratiṣṭhā-vidhi. rG lxix.190
 Tattva-ratna-āloka-vyākhyāna. rG lxxi.6
 Mṛtyu-vañcana-piṇḍārtha. rG lxxxii.19
 Siddha-ekavira-mañjughoṣa-stotra-suvarṇa-mālā-nāma.
 rG lxxxii.6

In BA are mentioned three Vāgīśvarakīrtis—1) the famous door-keeper scholar of Vikramaśīla (i.206), 2) the younger Pham-mthiñ brother also known as Vagīśvara (i.384) and 3) one named Piṇḍo-ācārya, famed as Vāgīśvarakīrti in the Madhya-deśa (ii.757f).

76. NĀRO-PĀ

Over thirty works are attributed in Tg to Nāro-pā, Nāḍa-panḍita, Nāḍa-pāda, Nāro-pa'i-shabs, Nāro-tapa, Nāro-panta.

In BA, Nāro-pā is said to have been a disciple of Tilli-pā (i.361, 380), a teacher of Atīśa (i.243) and of the Kashmirian Jñānākara (i.361). He was 'the guardian of the northern gate of Vikramaśīla. The ācārya Śānti-pā (Ratnākaraśānti) and the venerable Maitrī-pā heard the Tantra from him' (i.380). Pham-mthiñ-pā attended on Nāro-pā for seven years and Pham-mthiñ-pā's younger brother for five years. Mar-pa Do-pa received Nāro-pā's blessings in Tihut (i.383). The Six Doctrines were bestowed by Nāro-pā on the Master Mar-pa (ii.728).

77. BODHIBHADRA

The following works are attributed to Bodhibhadra (the disciple of Mahāmati of Somapurī) in Tg :

Rahasya-ānanda-tilaka. rG xxii.59

Yoga-satya-lakṣaṇa. rG xlvi.118 = mDo xxxiii.73

Jñāna-sāra-samuccaya-nibandhana. mDo xviii.7

Samādhi-ambhāra-parivarta. mDo xxx.18 = mDo xxxiii.67

Bodhisattva-samvara-vidhi. mDo xxxii.5 = mDo xxxiii.27

Bodhisattva-samvara-vimśaka-pañjikā. mDo lxi.14

78. RATNAVAJRA

The following works are attributed to Ratnavajra in Tg :

Heruka-sādhana-nāma. rG xiii.26

Cakra-samvara-maṅgala-gāthā. rG xiii.27

Cakra-samvara-maṅḍala-devagana-stotra. rG xiv.10

Cakra-samvara-stotra. rG xiv.11

Bali-karma-krama. rG xxii.11

Hevajra-stotra. rG xxii.16

Mahāmāyā-sādhana. rG xxiii.28

Sarva-buddha-samayoga-ḍākinī-jāla-samvara-mahā-tantrarāja.
rG xxv.19

Tg also contains seventeen other works composed or translated by him.

79. MAHĀJANA

In Tg Mahājana is mentioned as the author of Prajñā-pāramitā-hṛdaya-artha-pariṅḡāna (mDo xvi. 15). His name also occurs as the translator of sixteen works inclusive of some by Candragomī, Vasubandhu, Nāthamaitreya and others.

80. Jñānaśrī

BA i.206 & 372 refers to Jñānaśrī as one of the Six Door-keeper Scholars of Vikramaśīla. Jñānaśrīmatī is mentioned as one of the teachers of Atīśa—BA i.243. Cf also BA i.70, 85,347,355 : the great Paṇḍita Jñānaśrī of Kashmir who went to Tibet without having been invited. Sum-pa 118 mentions Jñānaśrī as one of the four eminent disciples of the guru of Suvarṇadvīpa (Dharmakīrti or Dharmapāla).

Tg cont. ins works by Jñānaśrī, Jñānaśrīmitra of Kashmir,

Jñānaśrībhadrā and Jñānamitra. Of these, a number of works on Vajra-vidāraṇī-karma (rG lxviii.232-35) mentions mahā-pañḍita Jñānaśrī as author and translator, the name occurring also as the translator of a number of other treatises (rG lxviii.225-31). Besides these Tg contains :

Sūtrālamkāra-piṇḍārtha (mDo xlvi.2) by ācārya mahā-pañḍita Jñānaśrī.

Kāryakāraṇabhāva-siddhi (mDo cxii.29) by mahā-pañḍita Jñānaśrīmitra.

Śīla-samvara-samaya-avirodha-nāma (rG lxxii.19) by Jñānaśrībhadrā of Kashmir.

Pramāṇa-viniścaya-ṭikā (mDo cx.2) by Jñānaśrībhadrā of Kashmir.

81. AMOGHAVAJRA

Tg contains over a hundred works of which Amoghavajra is mentioned as the author or translator. These include a considerable number of works on Amṛtasiddhi, composed by him in Tibet: these mention Virū-pā as the ācārya of Amṛtasiddhi: rG lxxxv. 22-9; 38-47. BA ii. 1042 mentions him as a disciple of Mitrāyogin and according to BA i. 162 he visited Tibet soon after A. D. 1086. See also Supplementary Note 95.

82. VĪRYABHADRA

Apart from a few translations attributed to him, Tg contains his work Pañcakrama-Pañjikā Artha-prabhāsa-nāma (rG xxxiv.4). Besides, the colophon of the Bodhisattvāvadāna-kalpalatā of Kṣemendra (mDo xciii) mentions that it is edited on the basis of the manuscripts obtained from India, Kashmir, Khotan, Nepal and China and that the edition is guided by the research of Vīryabhadra, the date of the completion of the work being probably A. D. 1052 in the month of Vaiśākha on the birth anniversary of the Buddha.

83. Mañikaśrī

The following works are attributed to Mañikaśrī in Tg :
Ekavīra-sādhana. rG xiii.29

Cakra-samvara-ekala-vīra-sādhana. rG xiv.17

He is also mentioned as the translator or corrector of a number of works. BA i. 385 mentions him as an exponent of Cakrasamvara and as belonging to the lineage of Lūi-pā, Deṅgi-pā, La-va-pā, Indrabhūti, etc.

84. Jñānavajra

In Tg Jñānavajra of Nepal is mentioned as the translator of six works : rG xiv. 3-7 ; 24 ; 61 ; lxxiii.22. Besides these, he is mentioned as the author of

Sādhana-caryā-avatāra. rG xxxiii.32

Ārya-jambhala-stotra. rG lxxii.45

A large number of Tāntrika treatises are also attributed in Tg to Jñānavajra of Oḍḍiyāna, alias Advaya-jñānavajra.

Tg mDo xliii (a commentary on the Laṅkāvatāra) is attributed to Jñānavajra of China.

85. BHĀRATA-PĀṆI

Also known as bodhisattva Vajrapāṇi. Tg contains a number of his works inclusive of :

Bhagavaṭi-prajñā-pāramitā-hṛdaya-ṭīkā-artha-pradīpa-nāma (mDo xvi. 10)—text expounded to the Tibetan kalyāṇamitra-s at Lalitapattana in Nepal.

Ṣaḍaṅga-yoga rG. iv.11

Lakṣa-abbhidhāna-udhṛta-laghu-tantra-piṇḍārtha-vivaraṇa.

rG vi.1

Tattvagarbha-sādhana. rG xii.7

Nīlāmbaradhara-vajrapāṇi-yakṣa-mahārudra-vajra-agnijihva-tantra-vṛtti. rG xliv.73

cf BA ii. 843 : 'This Vajrapāṇi (Phyag-na) was born in the Fire-Female-Serpent (year : A. D. 1017). From childhood he had sharp intellect and was learned in all the heretical and Buddhist sciences, as well as in many sections of the Tantras of the Mantra-yāna. He specially mastered the Cycle of Dohā (Saraḥa's Dohā).' He was a younger brother of Kṣitigarbha, (who accompanied Atīśa to Tibet)—BA ii. 842. He is mentioned as one of the Four Great Disciples of Maitrī-pā (born A.D. 1007 or 1010), the other three being Na-te-ka-ra, Devākara-candra and Rāmapāla—BA ii. 842. He was invited to Tibet by 'Brog Jo-sras and he composed the Vajra-pāda-nāma—BA i. 857. Tg contains a considerable number of works translated by him.

86. ABHAYĀKARAGUPTA

V n 'According to Thob-yig, Abhayākaragupta was born in eastern India as the son of a chief of all the Brahmins. A young yoginī sent him to Magadha for being ordained in the Law of the Buddha. He came to Bhaṃgala and became a śramaṇera. Thereafter in Vigamala (?) vihāra, he studied logic, Tripiṭaka, Madhyama, Pāramitās and became the gaṇa-pati of the saṃgha-s and taught logic. For studying the siddhāntas, he went to the teacher Ratnākaragupta in a cave of the city of Be'u. When his fame spread far and wide, the Magadhara-rāja Rāthika made him the chief of all the paṇḍita-s and gave him as gift the Indraulī garden. He freed from the prison a little over hundred persons whom the king Carasinda wanted to offer as sacrifice, drove away the Turuška army etc. His works related to the commentaries on 8,000 Pāramitās, Vinaya, Logic and Madhyama. On Tantras, his works which are particularly famous are: 1) a commentary on Sampuṭa known under the name Upadeśa-mañjarī, 2) the Sea of Siddhāntas, where all the precepts for propitiating various deities are collected at one place, 3) Vajra-mālā, where all the maṇḍala-s of sādhana are described.

BA i. 32 quotes from his Muni-matālamkāra (mDo xxix.10) and BA i. 371 refers to his Vajrāvalī and Vajrāvalī-nāma-maṇḍala-sādhana. In Tg are attributed about 50 works to him.

BA i. 219—rMa lo-tsā-ba (born in A. D. 1044) studied in India under Abhayākara.

87. ŚĀKYAŚRĪ

BA ii.599—there exists a biography (rnam-thar) of Śākyaśrī of Kashmir by Khro-phu-lo-tsā-ba (byams-pa'i-dpal), who invited him to Tibet. He visited the Tibetan monasteries in A.D. 1208—BA i.306. He 'ordained many monks in Tibet including the Sa-skya Pan-chen and others... The great bhadanta Tson-kha-pa also obtained monkhood through the lineage of Śākyaśrībhadrā.' In BA i.35 is quoted the prophecy of Tārā to Śākyaśrībhadrā about his becoming the Buddha Bhāgīrathī of the Bhadrā-kaḷpa (i.e. one of the Thousand Buddhas of the Bhadra-kalpa). Cf also BA ii.1062ff: Śākyaśrī was born in A.D. 1127, ordained in 1149, came to Tibet in his 78th year (A.D. 1204), stayed there for ten years and left for Kashmir in A.D. 1214. He passed away in Kashmir at the age of 99 in A.D. 1225.

In Tg are attributed to him the following works :

Kalpa-pūjā-mahā-catuṣka-kārikā. bsTod 62

Ārya-tārā-bhaṭṭārikā-upadeśa-āśraya-āsanna-maraṇa-āmnāya.

rG xxvi.39

Viśuddha-darśana-caryā-upadeśa. rG xlviii.124

Mañjuśrī-cala-cakra. rG lxviii.13

Siṃhanāda-rakṣā-cakra. rG lxviii.167

Samkṣipta-amoghapāśa-sādhana. rG lxviii.168

Amoghapāśa-bali-vidhi. rG lxviii.169

Poṣadha-karaṇīya. rG lxviii.170

Ārya-amoghapāśa-poṣadha-vidhi-āmnāya. rG lxviii.171

Ārya-maitreya-sādhana. rG lxxi.344

Ārya-tārā-sādhana. rG lxxi.395

Ārya-kṛṣṇa-jambhala-sādhana. rG lxxii.43

Ārya-amoghapāśa-sādhana. rG lxxxii.10

Bodhisattva-mārgakrama-saṃgraha. mDo xxxii.15

Mahāyāna-upadeśa-gāthā. mDo xxxii.20

Saptāṅga-saddharma-caryā-avatāra. mDo xxxii.14

88. RATNARAKSITA

The following work is attributed to Ratnaraksita in Tg :
Samvara-udaya-mahātantrarājasya-pañjikā-padminī-nāma.

rG xii.1

He is also mentioned as the translator and corrector of a large number of works.

89. Dīpaṅkarabhadra

In Tg Dīpaṅkarabhadra is mentioned as the author of a large number of Tāntrika works. These include—

Guhya-samāja-maṇḍala-vidhi. rG xxxix.13

Aṣṭa-krodha-maṇḍala-abhiṣeka. rG lxix.7

Ārya-vajra-vidāraṇī-pratiṣṭhā. rG lxix.20

He is also mentioned as the translator of rG xl.8

90. ŚRĪDHARA

In Tg more than thirty Tāntrika works are attributed to Śrīdhara, which include :

Kṛṣṇa-yamāri-sādhana. rG xliii.1

Kṛṣṇa-yamāri-maṇḍala-upāyikā. rG xliii.2

Rakta-yamāri-sādhana. rG xliii.103

Caturyoga-tattva-nāma-svādhiṣṭhāna-upadeśa. rG xliii.105

Kṛṣṇa-yamāreḥ-rakta-yamāreśca-pūjā-vidhi. rG xliii.109

Besides, two works on lexicon are attributed to one Śrīdhara of Nepal (mDo cxxxiii.2 ; 3)

91. BHAVĀBHADRA

The following works are attributed to Bhavabhadra (Bhavabhaṭṭa) in Tg :

Cakra-samvara-pañjikā-nāma. rG vi.3

Vajra-ḍāka-nāma-mahātantrarājasya-vivṛti. rG ix.1

Hevajrasya-vyākhyā-vivarāṇa-nāma. rG xv.3

Catuḥ-piṭha-tantrarājasya-ṭikā-smṛti-nibandha-nāma. rG xxii.60

Catuḥ-piṭha-sādhana-upāyikā. rG xxiii.9

- Catuḥ-piṭha-jala-homa. rG xxiii.10
 Maṇḍala-avatāra-saṃkṣipta-kaḷpa. rG lxxi.372
 Cintāmaṇi-tārā-nāma-sādhana. rG lxxi.374=lxxi.381
 Tārā-dhāvana-vidhi. rG lxxi.375
 Poṣadha-vidhi. rG lxxi.376

92. DURJAYACANDRA

- In Tg the following works are attributed to him :
- Ratnacchaṭā-nāma-pañjikā. rG vi.4
 Saptākṣara-sādhana. rG xiii.8=lxxxvi.67
 Cakrasamvara-sādhana-amṛtākṣara-nāma. rG xiii.9
 Kaumudī-nāma-pañjikā. rG xvii.1.
 Ṣaḍaṅga-nāma-sādhana. rG xxi.21
 Sarvabhūta-bali. rG xxi.23
 Nairātmya-sādhana. rG xxii.18
 Nairātmya-devī-pañcadaśa-stotra. rG xxii.19
 ḍākinī-vajrapañjara-pañcaḍāka-sādhana. rG xxii.35
 Mahāmāyā-tantrasya-pañjikā-māyavatī-nāma. rG xxiii.16
 Suparigraha-nāma-maṇḍala-upāyikā-vidhi. rG xxi.22

93. TATHĀGATARAKSITA

- In Tg the following works are attributed to him :
- Ubhaya-nibandha. rG vii.5
 Yoginī-saṃcaryā-nibandha. rG xii.3
 Śmaśāneṣṭa. rG xxii.43
 Sragdharā-sādhana. rG xxvi.15
 Śūnyatā-bhāvanā. rG xxvi.16
 Kudṛṣṭi-dūṣaṇa. rG xxvi.17
 Corabandha. rG xxvi.18

- Vidyāvardhana. rG xxvi.19
 Mṛtyu-kāpaṭya. rG xxvi.20
 Vajrasattva-sādhana-bhāṣya. rG xxiv.9
 Vajrabhairava-hastacihna-viśuddhi. rG xliii.81
 Caturmukha-samaya-siddhi-sādhana. rG lxxxii.73

94. KAMALARAKṢITA

The following works are attributed to him in Tg :

- Kṛṣṇa-yamāri-sādhana. rG. xliii.10
 Maṇḍala-vidhi. rG xliii.12
 Kṛṣṇa-yamāri-sādhana-maṇḍala-vidhi. rG xliii.32
 Vajra-bhairava-sādhana-udbuddha-kamala-nāma. rG lxxxii.15

Kamalarakṣita was a contemporary of Atīśa, to both of whom the guru of Suvarṇadvīpa (Dharmapāla or Dharmakīrti) expounded the following works : mDo xxvi.6 ; 7 ; xxxi.4 ; xxxiii.87—see also A. Chattopadhyaya AT 93 ; 479f ; 484 ; 491.

95. KHYUÑ-PO-RNAL-'BYOR

BA ii.728f 'I shall now tell the story of the Lineage of the Six Doctrines founded by Ni-gu-mā, sister of Nāro-pā. Its Lineage and of Guidance and Initiation : the introducer of the doctrine (to Tibet) was the siddha Khyuñ-po-rnal-'byor. He belonged to the Khyuñ-po clan and was born at sÑe-mo-ra-maṅs in the Tiger Year (1086 A.D.) as son of father sTag-skye and mother bKra-śis-skyid. Soon after his birth, the Indian siddha Amogha came there and uttered an auspicious prophecy about him. At the age of ten, he mastered reading the Indian and Tibetan alphabets. He became proficient in the Kālacakra. At the age of thirteen, he studied with the ācārya gYuñ-druñ-rgyal-ba the Bon doctrine and preached it to others, and about seven hundred scholars (possessing manuscripts of the text) attended his class. He then studied extensively the Cycle of the rDsogs-chen-sems-sde with the bla-ma 'Byuñ-gnas-señ-ge, and then preached it. During that time also he gathered about seven hundred disciples... Having taken with him a considerable quantity of gold, he journeyed to Nepal and studied there the work of a translator with the paṇḍita Vasumati .. He was well-received by Atulyavajra and met rDo-rje-gdan-pa. He became a novice (attendant of rDo-rje-gdan-pa—Amoghavajra) and heard many doctrines. He then heard many Tāntrika doctrines from Śrī Bhadrasajjana, Vairocana .. After his return to Tibet... he secured more than a thousand golden sraṅs... After that he journeyed again to Nepal and obtained from Pham-mthiñ-pa the Samvara-mūla-tantra and the gdan-bshi. After that he proceeded to India and offered to rDo-rje-gdan-pa a hundred golden sraṅs. He heard many doctrines at Nālandā from Dānaśīla, a disciple of Nāro-pā, Sumatikīrti, Rāmapāla, Natekara, the venerable Ratnadevī of Kaṃ-ka-ta, and from the siddha Sūryagarbha, a disciple of Kukuri-pā. He met also Maitrī-pā and obtained from him many Tantras, and offered him seven sraṅs of gold.' He is said to have met Ni-gu-mā, the sister of Nāro-pā, Lalitavajra, Āryadeva, ḍāki Sumati, ḍākinī Sukhasiddhi, a disciple of Virū-pā, Gaṅgādharā Samantabhadrī, Sukhavajra, Advayavajra, etc, and presented gold to 150 teachers. After his return to Tibet, he met Atīśa at mÑa'-ris. 'Some of his own Indian (Sanskrit) manuscripts being slightly damaged, he restored them after collating them with the manuscripts in Atīśa's possession.'

In Tg rG lxxiii.30 ; 34 ; 36 ; 39-41 are mentioned as works exposed by Ni-gu-mā to Khyuñ-po-rnal-'byor, alias Garuḍayogī or Garuḍa-bhaṭṭa. Tg lxxxii.104 is exposed by Maitrī-pā to him.

96. VANARATNA

BA ii. 797ff : 'The Precious Great paṇḍita was born [in 1384 A. D.—Roerich n] as the son of a king in the town of Sadnagara in eastern India [Chittagong District, East Bengal]. At the age of eight, he received the noviciate from one named Buddhaghōṣa.' At the age of 20, he received the final monastic ordination under Buddhaghōṣa and Sujātaratna. 'Then having become an ascetic he journeyed to Ceylon. He spent six years there.' Next he journeyed to Kaliṅga in southern India. 'There a great paṇḍita called Narāditya (mi'i-ñi-ma) famed as a scholar in Jambudvīpa praised him...Again he proceeded towards Śrī Dhānyakaṭaka Mahācaitya and stayed for some time in the hermitage of Nāgabodhi...Then while en route to Magadha, he studied with the heretical paṇḍita Harihara the book kalāpa.' In the vihāra called Uruvāsa 'a miraculous stone image of Ārya Avalokiteśvara spoke to him : "Go to Tibet ! After attending on a king, you will be of benefit to many !" In accordance with this prophecy, he first proceeded to Nepal...He reached Tibet in the year Fire-Male-Horse' (A. D. 1426 : Vanaratna is often called "Paṇḍita-mtha'-ma" or the Last Paṇḍita).

In Tg are preserved over 40 works written or translated by him. BA ii. 801 : he belonged to the lineage of Abhaya, Nāyakapāda. Daśabalaśrī, Śrībhadra, Lalitavajra, Dharmagupta, Ratnākara, Padmavajra, etc.

'Gos lo-tsā-ba, the author of the Blue Annals, was himself a student of Vanaratna (BA i. 380), about whom therefore 'Gos lo-tsā-ba shows the highest regard : 'He seems to have been the most popular among the paṇḍita-s who visited Tibet in later times' (BA ii. 802) and 'Therefore, he became our highest and only refuge' (BA ii. 805).

97. SAHAJA-SIDDHI

Tg contains a considerable number of works on Sahaja-siddhi. Thus :

Sahaja-siddhi by the king Indrabhūti. rG xlvii.1

Sahaja-siddhi-paddhati (commentary on the above) by Lakṣmīn-karā. rG xlvii.2

Sahajānanda-dohakoṣa-gītikā-dṛṣṭi by Bhadhe (Bhāṇḍārin).
rG xlviii.8

Sahaja-aṣṭaka by Maitrī-pā. rG xlvi.17

Sahaja-samvara-svādhiṣṭhāna by Mahā Śabara. rG xiii.5

Sahaja-samvara-svādhiṣṭhāna by rājā madhyama Indrabhūti.
rG xiii.6

Sahaja-maṇḍala-traya-āloka-saṃjanana-nāma by Jñānaśrī.
rG xiv.20

Sahaja-gīti by Śāntideva. rG xlviii.1

Sahaja-rati-samyoga by Ratnākaraśānti. rG xxi.28

Sahaja-ānanda-pradīpa-nāma-pañjikā by Vajragupta. rG xx.4

Sahaja-ananta-svabhāva by Kanthālin. rG xlviii.90

Sahaja-samvara-svādhiṣṭhāna by Tilo-pā. rG xiii.24

Sahaja-tattva-āloka by Kuśali-pā. rG xiii.55

Sahaja-āmnāya by ācārya Medinī. rG xlviii.76

Sahaja-yoga-krama by Ratnākaraśānti. rG xxi.29

Sahaja-sadyoga-vṛtti-garbhaprakāśikā-nāma by ācārya Thagana.
rG xxi. 30

Sahaja-siddhi by Samayavajra. rG lxxiv. 28

98. THE TURUSKA KING "MOON" [FOL 125B]

[Note contributed by Harbans Mukhia]

It is nearly impossible to identify the owner of the name 'the Moon' with certainty, for no known name among the Turks mentioned in this context corresponds to this word. One could, however, stretch the meanings of some of the names and try to narrow the gap between them and the Moon. Shihab-ud-din Muhammad Ghori, for instance.

Minhaj-us-Siraj has included 'Adwand-Bihar' among the conquests of Shihab-ud-din. (Tabaqat-i-Nasiri, tr. H. G. Raverty, Vol. I, London, 1881, p. 491). 'Adwand-Bihar' is obviously a corrupt form of 'Odantapurī-vihāra' or 'Uddaṇḍapura-vihāra.' Considering that the word 'Shihab' means 'a bright star', (Steingass, Persian-English Dictionary, s.v.) it is possible that the reference to 'the Moon' might have been intended for him. Tāranātha's reference to the region of the 'Antaravedi' (Fol. 125B) is not very helpful either. Prof. S. C. Sarkar suggests that the reference might have been meant for either Shihab-ud-din or Qutb-ud-din Aibak, the word 'Qutb' signifying the pole-star. (S. C. Sarkar, 'Some Tibetan References to Muslim Advance into Bihar and Bengal and to the state of Buddhism thereafter', Proceedings of the Indian Historical Records Commission, vol. xviii, 1942, pp. 138-52, n. 10).

There could be little doubt, however, that the person who was directly responsible for the destruction of the Odantapurī and Vikramaśīla monasteries was Ikhtiyar-ud-din Muhammad bin Bakhtiyar Khalji, the dubious credit for whose accomplishment was passed on to his master Shihab-ud-din (certainly by Minhaj, probably also by Tāranātha). Odantapurī or Uddaṇḍapura was the ancient name of the city of Bihar or Vihāra and it was situated very close to Vikramaśīla. (A Cunningham, Reports of the Archaeological Survey of India, vol. viii, p. 75; also vol. xi, p. 185, where this point has been further reinforced. In vol. iii, pp. 128-29 Cunningham had suggested that Uddandapuradeśa was the name of a district and the place was the modern Tandwa, also called Bishenpur Tandwa where considerable Buddhist remains still exist). These monasteries were destroyed around 1203 A.D. (The date is inferred indirectly—see A.B.M. Habibullah, The Foundation of Muslim Rule in India, 2nd. edn., Allahabad, 1961, p. 84, notes 78 and 79). Tāranātha's account of this destruction largely tallies with the one given by Minhaj. (Minhaj, op. cit., pp. 551-52). Minhaj had as his informants two of the 'holy warriors' who had themselves participated in the venture under the leadership of Ikhtiyar-ud-din Khalji and had shared the booty. The greater number of the inhabitants of Odantapurī were shaven-headed Buddhist monks whom Minhaj (and presumably his informants) mistook to be Brahmans. They were all slain. Minhaj, however, states that Ikhtiyar-ud-din and his companions had attacked the place under the impression that it was a fortress. It was only when they noticed books and became acquainted with their contents that they realized what they had destroyed were monasteries and libraries.

Tāranātha's allusion to 'the petty Turushka rulers of Bhaṃgala and other places' (Fol. 125B) raises an interesting question. While the king of Bengal at this time was Lakṣmaṇasena (Tāranātha's Labaṃsena ?), could it be that the Turks had already established themselves at some levels of administration and, on the arrival of Ikhtiyar-ud-din, got united, presumably under his leadership, and 'ran over the whole of Magadha ...' etc. ? There is no evidence to this effect from the other sources and Tāranātha's evidence, not fully reliable, is inadequate for arriving at so vital a conclusion. For, if true, this would suggest that the process of the establishment of the Turkish rule in Bengal stands exactly reverse to the similar process in North India, or indeed, the whole of India excluding Bengal. In North India the Turks captured and controlled only the higher echelons of administration, the lower ones being left almost entirely in the hands of the Hindus from the beginning to the end of the medieval period of Indian history. (Prof. S. C. Sarkar has drawn the following conclusion from Tāranātha's allusion which appears to be a little far-fetched: This reference to the existence of 'Turki Muslim puppet kings of Bhaṅgala [i.e. East Bengal] and other adjacent regions' [tr. Prof. Sarkar's] is an important revelation; they evidently acknowledged the suzerainty of the Turushka power of Upper India. The question is how and when were these Muslim principalities founded: probably Turki adventurers seized the Arak-Persian [Tajik] trading settlements in the Gangetic ports and deltaic regions which could easily have come into existence in the preceding few centuries,—and these Turki adventurers would subsequently affiliate themselves to the main Turki state of Delhi in the same way as Md.-ibn-Bakhtiyar did. The Senas, as patrons of 'Tajiks' would, of course, tolerate these principalities as allies, [op. cit., Fn 12]. Prof. Sarkar does not take into account the possibility that Tāranātha might have been misinformed). Tāranātha's mention of monks acting as the messengers of the Turks, if true, could similarly point to a very interesting line of inquiry into the social and political conditions of the region. The burden of available evidence, however, does not appear to support Tāranātha. (Prof. Sarkar similarly appears to read too much into this reference by Tāranātha: This Tibetan allusion raises the point whether the invasion of Bihar and Bengal, 1199-1203, was due only to the stray adventures of Md.-ibn-Bakhtiyar or was planned under the direct leadership of the Delhi kingdom in support of Buddhist Dissenters and of the Senas who patronized Islam and Brahmanical reaction against Buddhism. [op. cit., Fn 10]).

99. ON HISTORY OF IMAGE-MAKERS

[Note contributed by Pranabranjan Ray]

Tāranātha's 'History of Image-makers' will remain a somewhat enigmatic source of information for the students of Indian art history. Myths and dogmas so shroud whatever he has recorded here that it becomes difficult to correlate his account with known historical facts and art objects at hand. In a sense the sections on arts and crafts in Ābul Fazl's Āin-i-Ākbari, though attempt to give less information in time-span, are much more dependable for their objectivity and understanding.

In the opening paragraph, Tāranātha says something about the human artists of the "ancient period" who flourished within about a hundred years of Buddha's pari-nirvāṇa. Archaeological evidence about art of the period referred to are conspicuous by their absence. Can Tāranātha's account be taken as a literary reference that fills up a gap in our knowledge ?

Tāranātha's naivette about stylistics makes it difficult to accept many of his assertions about the art styles removed from him in time-span. Tāranātha, for instance, extols the Yakṣas—as also the Nāgas and Devas—for having been successful in creating illusions of real objects. Excepting the Gandhāra art we know of no other art style that could be remotely called realistic.

Tāranātha's account assumes importance when he mentions the names of individual artists. For instance he speaks of an artist called Bimbasāra, during Buddhapakṣa's (a late Gupta ?) reign. It is of some significance, since we know that by the end of the Gupta period the unified style of the high classical art of the Gupta era was giving way to local variations, one of which the late R. D. Banerjee termed as the Eastern School of Gupta art.

Tāranātha mentions another sculptor called Srigadhari in the region of Maru, that is either Rajasthan or Gujarat. Till about the end of nineteenth century there had never been any art object in India which bore the impression of a purely individual style (with the possible exception of some paintings of a few masters like Mansur). So Srigadhari, was either a pioneer or an acknowledged master of a stylistic trend, which itself possibly evolved out of some older stylistic trend through certain innovations made by certain individual artist.

Of greater significance are the names of Dhīman and Bitpalo, the two artists, who flourished in Varendra during the reign of Devapāla and Dharmapāla, who were, by implication, the innovators of the Pāla idiom of sculpture and painting. But from the known examples of the Pāla period, sculptures and tempera paintings on wooden manuscript covers, it is very difficult to notice any difference between the father's and the son's stylistic structures. Tāranātha even mentions their engraving (!).

Tāranātha has perhaps rightly pointed out an affinity between Nepalese and western Indian art, even if one disagrees with his main contention about the decisive influence of the latter over the former. In absence of detailed information about the time and the sort of stylistic change Hasurāja brought about in Kashmiri art, it is not possible to vouch for the veracity of Tāranātha's statement about him.

Despite the various shortcomings of Tāranātha's history,—largely motivated by his sectarian zeal—Tāranātha has done one singular service to the historiography of Indian art. Tāranātha in this little chapter has concentrated his attention on high arts, which according to Stella Kramrisch's characterization are 'time-bound' arts, as against the folkish or 'time-less' art forms. These high arts, were essentially urban in origin and depended on the patronage of courts, reflecting the fashions and attitudes of the ages in which these were created. And as such, individual innovators and improvisers had great roles in the shaping and enrichment of these systems. Though each of these systems had to work within the framework of iconographic canons and certain other a priori canons of beauty etc., as also within the conventions set up by the individual systems themselves. Yet, within the systems individual artists could improvise and innovate unlike that in folkish modes. But unfortunately few texts have recorded the names of these innovators and improvisers.

APPENDIX

V. P. VASIL'EV AND A. SCHIEFNER ON
TĀRANĀTHA'S HISTORY OF BUDDHISM IN INDIA

[In 1869 was published from St. Petersburg a German translation of Vasil'ev's Introduction to Tāranātha's History of Buddhism in India by A. Schiefner along with Schiefner's Foreword to it. In this Appendix is given Schiefner's Foreword first and then Vasil'ev's Introduction. The German Foreword is translated by Prof. Haridas Sinharay and Vasil'ev's Introduction is translated from the Russian original by Sri Harish Chandra Gupta.]

FOREWORD

To the Introduction of the Russian Translation of Tāranātha's History of Buddhism in India by Professor Wassiljew (Vasil'ev)

A. SCHIEFNER

Translated from the German by Professor Haridas Sinharay

During my journey through Berlin in June 1860, I presented a copy of the recently published German translation of Professor Wassiljew's Buddhismus Part I to Carl Friedrich Koeppen, who was already famous for his profound work on the religion of the Buddha. I received from him a highly original and complimentary letter, in which he expressed himself as follows :

'Please accept at least my thanks for your present which I hardly deserve and the seed of which falls upon a barren soil, inasmuch as for a full year I have completely given up my investigations into the Buddha and His Holiness and have given over my few Buddhist books to the dealers in antiquities. In spite of this and in spite of my reluctance, an old passion has swayed me to devour the work of Wassiljew. This has convinced me that I have so long written as a blind man does on colours and in this I am thoroughly convinced. I shall regard it as my last duty towards the Buddha and His Holiness to acknowledge this conviction openly, i.e. to prove to the best of my ability the profound significance of this work and the advancement in Buddhistic research which it shows in any of the critical journals like the Brockhausschen Blaettern, should my publisher take the trouble.'

I am not aware if this project has taken shape. However, I hold it as my duty to reiterate the judgement of this profound scholar who mentions in the letter his own work as a theory of the blind on colours. I had an opportunity to publish a few words on the work of Professor Wassiljew published by the Academy, and in this to mention my relation to his work. To begin with, I have, on January 7, 1854, reported in brief in the Bulletin Hist. Phil. (Vol xi.p.380) on the works on Buddhism discovered by Professor Wassiljew during his stay for ten years in Peking. I have already expressed my wish there that he should not delay any more the publication of Tāranātha's History of Buddhism in India written in the Tibetan language, along with his annotations and explanations worked out from Tibetan and Chinese sources. In the same month, I placed before the Academy a German translation of his highly learned article on the works relating to Buddhism in the University Library of Kazan (Bulletin Hist. Phil. Vol xi, pp.337-365). In my report on the above-mentioned work on Buddhism that I submitted on April 4, 1856 (Bulletin Hist. Phil. Vol xiii, pp.348-352), I have clearly stated how the leading western scholars on ancient India—Lassen, Roth and Weber—could expect a widening of our knowledge of Buddhism from the scholarship of Wassiljew, and how the published work justified this expectation to a high degree. That is the reason why I immediately thought of bringing out an edition of this work in the French or the German language. After I had supervised and brought to an end the printing of the Russian edition in 1857 of this work, I prepared a literal French translation of it. However, this could not be published because of comments against its French style. Thus I held it all the more as my duty to persuade a noteworthy expert in ancient India to translate this work into German. The printing of this translation appeared in 1860 and has been supervised by me. In certain passages where a greater exactness was desired, I have to acknowledge entirely the services of Wassiljew.

As a continuation of this work, Professor Wassiljew placed before the Academy on April 19, 1866, his Russian translation of the History of Buddhism in India written by the Tibetan scholar Tāranātha at the beginning of the seventeenth century. This circumstance gave me the chance to publish the Tibetan original, the expenses for it being borne by the Academy. For editing this text I have collated four manuscripts. Two of these belong to our University Library, one—which is very corrupt—to the Asiatic Museum of the Academy of Sciences and the fourth to Professor Wassiljew. As I have clearly noted in the Latin Foreword to this edition of the text published in 1868, the Russian translation of Professor Wassiljew has served me substantially in the restoration of the correct reading of some of the corrupt passages.

With the editing of the Tibetan text, I simultaneously undertook a translation of the work in German. And as I had a Russian translation before me, I hope I have thereby profited by his knowledge. The printing of this translation I began simultaneously with the printing of the Russian translation, and could continue it uninterrupted till May 1868. I had, however, to wait for a full year for the publication as Professor Wassiljew had been hindered by other works to devote his energy to the printing of the Russian translation. Due to this delay, the world of learning has gained, inasmuch as it was possible for me to incorporate into my German translation as a supplement a major portion of the notes taken from the rich treasure of his studies in the Tibetan and Chinese literature on Buddhism, which Professor Wassiljew added during the printing of his translation.

I want to be fully clear about this in the present Foreword to his Introduction. If I have made this Foreword shorter than had been my original purpose and have taken a few notes on the life of Tāranātha from the Introduction of Professor Wassiljew's Russian translation, it is partly explained by the circumstance that I planned to publish my German translation as a commemoration of the 550th Jubilee of the Ritter und Domschule at Reval, on June, 19. And thus it was that the content of the Russian Introduction could not be given in detail. On the express wish of Professor Wassiljew who lays quite rightly a special worth on his Introduction, I hold it as my duty to take up the publication of the same in the form of a postscript in order that I may be nearer the points in which I have differed from him.

A. Schiefner

St. Petersburg,
September 30, (October 12), 1869.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE RUSSIAN TRANSLATION OF TĀRANĀTHA'S
HISTORY OF BUDDHISM IN INDIA

V. P. VASIL'EV

Translated from the Russian by Sri Harish Chandra Gupta

The learned world—better than us—will evaluate the merits of this work translated by me, though prima facie it is not going to meet the expectations that its high-sounding title holds: History of Buddhism in India. Tāranātha's account is not a faithful exposition of something unknown. As it is, it rather needs a tremendous amount of investigation and explanation. It is merely some new material which can put off the spark of doubts and perplexities, which, considering the present state of our knowledge of Buddhism, can hardly be extinguished altogether. We are, however, sure that the learned world will not refuse either to collate or to annotate and investigate this material, for it will be in a better position than ourselves.

These remarks about the inadequacy of Tāranātha concern, of course, the early centuries of Buddhism, about which we know much even from other sources. However, we are sure that the learned world will pay attention to the fact that whatever the period in which the Buddha might have lived—a thousand years and odd before Christ as the Chinese think, or two or more as the Tibetans think—in the whole span of this period, in all the Buddhist accounts—or better, legends—we find the same personalities and the same events. And now, when we have before us a full survey of this History by Tāranātha—for which the learned world would find it easier than ourselves to give a fairly definite or at least an approximate chronology—it turns out, if Tāranātha is to be trusted, that this history did not begin so many years before our era. We are sure that the scholars will not ignore our note that there hardly existed two Aśokas, for it was not Kālāśoka but Dharmāśoka, the builder of monuments and the acknowledged patron of Buddhism, who lived, as generally admitted 116 years after the Buddha. We can hardly say anything about the assumption that by the well-known Piyadasi is meant Aśoka and not Ajātaśatru, whom our author calls 'Gifted with Auspicious Vision' (mthoñ-ldan-dge-ba : kṣemadarśin).¹ In that case, it would be necessary to recollect the legend of the well-known drama of Virūdhaka, the companion of Sandrakotta and the murderer of Artha-siddha (as Śākyamuni was called) and who, according to the Buddhist legends appears as the annihilator of all the Śākyas. Besides in the Chinese text on Nirvāṇa, Ajātaśatru consults Śākyamuni for a war with Yue-ci-s, in which, because of wrong understanding of Chinese texts from the so-called Tibet minor, one must see a corruption of either the word for Greeks or Bactrians (under a general and most ancient name Yakṣa ?). Since in Tāranātha's account, instead of two Aśokas there appear two Kaṇiṣkas, of whom the latter has of course a better claim to historicity, it can be shown that the well-known kieu-tsieu-kio is rather not Kaṇiṣka but Aśoka, who conquered all lands west of the Indus and built monuments there and whom our author does not at all link with Ajātaśatru. This of course he would not have done for the reason that for a Buddhist it would be more pleasant to consider the noble king related to the patron of the founder of the Doctrine (probably some data were available for this purpose).² Then, even the appearance in Kuśavana of Dhītika—having greater claim to contemporaneity with Aśoka than Upagupta—would have given some grounds for consideration.

In general the scholars will elucidate better than us the question as to whether the Buddhist account has an archaeological and antiquarian aspect, besides having the

1. Sum-pa in his History calls him simply "gifted with vision" (mthoñ-ldan).
2. Sum-pa also takes the name Tharu for that of a tribe which Aśoka came from.

legendary one. In other words, on the expiry of a long time after its foundation, when attempts began to be made to explain this foundation, did the Buddhists not encounter the Greek accounts of their previous connections with India? Did they not come across the monuments left by the line of Piyadasi—the significance of which could be understood also by them as obscurely as by the present scholars—and did they not try to link their account with all these ?⁸

Similarly, we shall not undertake to decide as to what authenticity should be ascribed to Tāranātha's account of the later appearance of Pāṇini. According to the general tone of Buddhism, this date would not appear to be a later one, for the use of the script unknown to him in the beginning could not have been mastered by him later than others—because the religion itself required it. The scholars will not, of course, ignore [without proper attention] Tāranātha's legend of Aśoka's sending a letter to the Nāga-s. They will judge better than ourselves whether or not one should see in this legend the impression which the importance of reading and writing (hitherto unknown to them)—which has the power to order the return of the seized treasures—might have created on the people. The scholars also, of course, know what power, in the mystic teaching, the letters of alphabet—their contemplative movement, their absorption inside oneself—have. It is left to them to decide whether this again is not due to the first acquaintance with reading and writing—which to the Indians, though unfamiliar with it, but much advanced in thought and civil development—must have appeared in its time, a more remarkable invention than wireless to the present-day crowd, which they credit to supernatural power.

3. Generally speaking, Ajātaśatru, Aśoka and Kaniṣka appear before us in the same light. All of them patronised (Buddhism), built monuments and monasteries,—which nevertheless judging from the initial asceticism of the Buddhists, could not have appeared either under the first or the second king. All the three took part in convening Councils while the same history represents them elsewhere as not having taken part in these events. This raises doubt even about the historicity of the Councils themselves (i.e. at least of the first two).

As regards the non-Buddhist personalities included by Tāranātha in his account, we must make one general remark. The author has not done so on purpose ; they had to appear in the legends (or biographies) of those Buddhist personalities with whom they had some connections. Buddhism is not at all alien to historiography because it found in history a means for its own exaltation. The general character of the peoples of the East, who even today believe in the personality of the Chinese emperors (who officially announce miracles taking place in their empires) and who believe in everything miraculous, provided the Buddhists with an opportunity to convert history into legend—a fact that has always been of use to religion. There is not a single famous Lama or Hoshang now who dies without his biography being written or his sayings recorded. But this is so from the very beginning of Buddhism. We have legends not only about persons who lived in the period most close to that of Śākyamuni but also about those who have lived much later. Probably, in their time, these individual legends were far too many. Though our author mentions that he has drawn not upon the legends about individual persons but upon whole histories, it is now seen from the tone of his exposition that even these histories from which he took material were compiled from various individual biographies. From the language and tone, it is now clear that this work includes biographies written in their time in different schools with different beliefs and notions. It can also be noticed that the biography of a much later person was written earlier than that of another who might have lived earlier. Anyone—whatever his acquaintance with the Buddhist legends—can see this from the tone and subject-matter of the legend and its language. The question as to how these should be identified in a history compiled by one person is very simple : the Eastern writers never try to pass on anything read by them in their own words ; the earliest text, as originally written, is reproduced in toto from one work to another.

By this, we do not at all mean to say that the legends given by Tāranātha have reached us without any interpolation. On the contrary, these must be seen from various angles. We should not forget that our history is written in Tibet, which imported Buddhism in its stage of latest development, i.e. mysticism called Tantras. That is why not only the Mahāyāna but also Hīnayāna personalities are here mostly Tāntrikas. This does not prevent one from seeing various strata of legends on the earliest soil of the ancient texts. Thus, Aśvaghōṣa, a protagonist of Hīnayāna, is converted first into a Mahāyānist and then into a Tāntrika. We may nevertheless remark that by Tāntrika legends we do not mean the miraculous as such; miraculous stories appear no less in Hīnayāna.

Another legendary aspect lies in the tendency to carry everything to antiquity; the facts of a later period are attributed to a remote period. For example, the author begins the history of mysticism from a period almost contemporary to Nāgārjuna. The actual appearance of personalities, who have published some work on mysticism, is almost always preceded by a reference to a person who was supposed to be acquainted with this work. But this too is typical not of mysticism alone. The whole Buddhist literature, for instance, was so compiled. The mystics, passing their Tantras for something preached by the Buddha, at least do not conceal the fact of their later appearance in the world. We can even determine, approximately though, the very period of their appearance, if we can follow the method of fabricating their legends. However, about the Mahāyāna works, we only know that Nāgārjuna brought to light the Prajñā-pāramitā, though it is not known in which redaction.

The author also mentions the time of the appearance of the Aṣṭa-sāhasrikā-prajñā-pāramitā. By comparing the Mahāyāna literature in Chinese and Tibetan, we can also infer that Maitreya's works did not appear at the same time. Nevertheless, the Mahāyāna literature that have come down to us in Chinese and Tibetan translations are enormous; when did all these works appear? The only thing that can be asserted by us is that according to the data available to us—and as per remarks just made by us on Tāranātha—the fabrication of Mahāyāna works attributed to the Buddha continued until Mahāyāna itself was overcome by mysticism. Besides many canonical Mahāyāna works were written when several commentaries had already been produced on each of the other works that had appeared earlier. The same can be said of the Hīnayāna works; their redactions changed continually. Thus the Tibetan Vinaya is not what the Vinayas of all the four schools known in Chinese translation are.

Not to speak of the Abhidharmas, even the Sūtras were subjected to change. We have indications that 800 years after the death of the Buddha there was a collection of works of the Sammitīya school. Probably the other schools also did not lag behind.

Our main concern, however, is the question of the literature. With the classics before us, there is a possibility of following and analysing critically the sequence in which the works appeared and even the reasons for their appearance. All this would not obstruct the understanding of Tāranātha, more so because his History is full of the names of works attributed to the Buddha as well as with works of other individuals. But this has to be left to the work of future scholars.

While reading Tāranātha, we must be aware also of the same tendency to carry back to antiquity even the names of places and persons.

The main historical merit of Tāranātha's work indisputably is that this work acquaints the learned world for the first time with personalities totally unknown till now and with those from a period which can unmistakably be called "historical". If this period cannot be so considered from the time of Nāgārjuna, it can in any case begin from the time of Ārya Asaṅga. The span of time covered by this period till that of the total extinction of Buddhism from the Madhya-deśa should be assumed to be more than a thousand years. Till now we know practically nothing about this period, particularly about all that had happened after the visit of the famous Yuan-chuang who also alludes to various personalities.

The learned world would, we think, compare the suggestions of Yuan-chuang with Tāranātha's account, establish identity between persons mentioned perhaps under different names by both the authors, and thus facilitate the study of this period. We know for the first time only from Tāranātha about the sequence in which the most notable ones accepted Buddhism, the names of their patrons and enemies and the trends of their theological activities. It is not for us to suggest to the learned world that if the Siddha-s represented by our author as enwrapped in legends—that appear ridiculous to us—be unmasked, they will turn out to be workers, writers, etc, though traversing a totally new path purified from the one followed earlier by the other leading Buddhists. We speak of mysticism in its full and extraordinary development as the so called principles of meditation.

The information communicated by Tāranātha on this period has all the appearance of authenticity. He knows the scholarly method of ascertaining the relative period of a particular person from his works and from the references to him by others. Probably in this case the account used by him had, as their sources, individual biographies. We do not know what the learned world will surmise from these legends for a history of India of that period, but it will nevertheless make use of Tāranātha's account. Perhaps Tāranātha's last chapter alone—that on the artists—will be regarded as a great contribution redeeming all other shortcomings of his History.

As regards the period preceding Ārya Asaṅga, one must treat it with a greater caution. If from the account of the later period we note for instance how the legends about Ārya Asaṅga, Vasubandhu or Guṇaprabha as given by Tāranātha differ from those given by Yuan-chuang, and how the ones given by the latter vary from those in the still earlier sources,—what then should we surmise about the legends pertaining to a more remote period ?

If our comment that Nālandā which later became so famous had been an insignificant place at the time of Fa-hien is justified, what should one think of the anecdotes which Tāranātha links with this place alone? And these fancies of Tāranātha automatically lead one to think whether similar accounts of other places and personalities should not be looked upon with the same distrust. We see for example that Nālandā claims all the celebrities of Buddhism. Even Vasubandhu, Ārya Asaṅga and Nāgārjuna had to live there. This is fully refuted by the other documents. We clearly see from this work of Tāranātha that the monasteries tried to link their legends with well-known personalities. That is why the biographies of the latter take them from one place to another. And Tāranātha repeatedly refers to the founding and restoration of religious centres. If so, how can one avoid doubting that Śāriputra and Maudgalyāyana, in whose birthplace Nālandā was built, were direct disciples of Śākyamuni? More so, because the well-known Abhidharmas are attributed to them. This further leads one to assume that they could have been born in the north-western India, the home of the Abhidharmas. This fact alone leads to many historical absurdities. The names of these teachers are closely linked with the works attributed to the Buddha. In almost each of these—even including the Hīnayāna works—one of them is either putting questions to the Buddha or teaching in his stead. This means that we must look from a different angle at the redaction of these very works. The dogma founded in these is concerned with a local problem — so much so that what the work frequently has in view is not the dogma but the place and the person concerned. Again, the very facts about the place where the Buddha attained enlightenment,—the famous Vajrāsana,—the time of the building of the Mahābodhi image, the place of the abode of Kapila (which the well-known great Tibetan scholar places at some point further to the west) are doubtful. If in investigating the possible origin of the legends about Śāriputra and Maudgalyāyana, by examining all the places and chronological points, we come to the conviction—or at least to the assumption—that these teachers, who had actually lived much later, had to be dated by the followers to the earliest possible period, we surmise that Buddhism moved not from east to west but in the reverse direction.

In any case, when as a result of the spread of the written language (for which Tāranātha mentions the approximate period too), Buddhism took to recording its history, it had already digressed from its original character. Having spread over a vast area, it continued in many places in the form of monastic life, which presupposed statutes and legends. This resulted in diversity and discord, though not in the form in which it is represented by the Buddhists. This would rather give some grounds for agreement and reconciliation which was expressed in the basic similarity of the directions of the Vinaya as well as in the tradition of the original teachings of the Buddha and in its subsequent fate. We think that we cannot look on ancient Buddhism except through the prism of the so-called Third Council—historically the first in our opinion—and again one held in the west!

And so Tāranātha's History is not a history as such but only a document which calls for further research into history and provides for this some remarkable and rare facts. Besides, this History becomes all the more valuable as it gives the hope of discovering still more ancient histories. We already know from Yuan-chuang that neither historiography nor a description of the country was unknown to the Indians. Tāranātha positively refers to three hitherto unknown historical works compiled veritably in India. There is no doubt that these will be searched out. If the author had them at his disposal at the beginning of the 17th century, they could not have become extinct thereafter. These are to be searched for not only in Tibet but also in Nepal. It is a pity that our scholars have not so far known what to look for, or the scholars going there were not learned enough.

It will not be out of place to mention that the rare honour of acquainting the academic world with Tāranātha fell to our lot almost unexpectedly. At a time when we had just taken up the study of Oriental languages at Kazan, one Lama Nikituyev —who had come in 1835 from Transbaikal—was the first person to inform our most respected and well-known Professor, O. M. Kovalevsky, of the existence of this history. The manuscript itself was soon procured from the Kalmuk steppes. As Professor Kovalevsky was not good at Tibetan, Lama Nikituyev (with whom we used to live for our practice in Mongolian language) translated, right before us, the entire work of Tāranātha into Mongolian language for our honourable professor. We were absolutely sure that the honour of acquainting the academic world with this work would sooner or later go to this professor of ours. The idea of superceding him did not even occur to us, not only because we were aware of the gap between his and our capabilities, but also because it would have been extremely indelicate and too ungracious of us to go ahead of a scholar who was going to honour us by taking the lead. Another factor that weighed with us was that in Mongolian language we possessed then few—or almost none—monumental works that it would have been sinful to snatch away this material from the hands of our professor.

Therefore, on arrival in Peking in 1840, when we easily procured a Tibetan copy of Tāranātha (and showed it to father Avvakum, who brought the copy for the Asiatic Department),⁴ we did not at all think of making a complete translation of this whole work. We made only some brief excerpts for personal use,—which we tried to supplement in the course of our subsequent studies, though only for a knowledge of the subject and not for publication. It was only in the last year of our stay in Peking,—when we had already compiled a lexicon of the Dogma, the Mahāvvyutpatti, made translations of (the treatise on the) various sects, surveyed the Buddhist literature and system,—that we realised that all these works together with the translation of Yuan-chuang made by us in 1842 were not by themselves adequate (for our purpose) without the history of Tāranātha. It was then that we started making a complete translation of Tāranātha, though without the slightest idea of getting it published. This is also seen from the first part of our Buddhism—though, from a different aspect—where, with a long list of the contents of Tāranātha's work, we seem to have asked of the learned world the question: "Does this work deserve to be translated in full?"

4. This is what paying attention is! One may pass by rare works and not know their worth! Professor Kovalevsky had also been in Peking. Because of his acquaintance with Minjnl Khukutu (whom we did not find alive any more), it would have been easier for him to procure all sorts of histories, had he only known their Tibetan titles.

Although at the time of our stay for ten years in Peking, we made a comprehensive study of Buddhism from the Chinese and Tibetan sources, and prepared many works,—which we hoped to finalise on our return to Russia with the help of European sources and European scholars,—we, on our return, got an absolutely different assignment which diverted us from Buddhism. Besides, our colleagues were so little interested in this subject that when, because of the truly learned participation of Mr. Schiefner, the first volume of our work on Buddhism was published, the criticism in Russia was considerably colder than in the foreign press. Only when our Buddhism was translated into French (though not without mistakes, as in the German translation) and we saw that even after a decade of its publication, our work was often arousing the interest of scholars, who nonetheless continued to refer to it and draw materials from it, did we think of our previous works lying in abeyance. In particular, when there started appearing references even to Tāranātha from whom we had only quoted some short extracts, it naturally occurred to us that it would be better to publish the whole of Tāranātha's work. These were the ideas expressed by us in our well-known letter to Schiefner—printed in St. Petersburg News (No. 141 of May, 26 1866).

There was now hardly any hope of Professor Kovalevsky publishing his translation from the Mongolian. It was almost fifteen years he had left the faculty. Besides, when we now took up this work, we realised what it meant to publish Tāranātha in a manner worthy of the learned world and that our learned professor (Kovalevsky) did not wish to risk his reputation by publishing it in the form in which we are doing.

True, a scholarly treatment of the history of Buddhism demanded not only a good study of all that had been written in Europe but a much more profound study of all the Buddhist works. We fully admit that we do not fulfil these prerequisites and are no more than mere translators. We cannot even vouchsafe that our translation is throughout faultless. The few translations from the Tibetan that have so far appeared in Europe are largely those of the Buddhist Sūtras—which are not so difficult in language and the translations of which could be checked either with their Sanskrit originals or with other translations available in the Chinese and Mongolian languages. Any one studying the Tibetan text of Tāranātha published by Mr. Schiefner will well understand that the language here is considerably different, for the understanding of which there exists an entirely different grammar totally unknown to Europe and for which the lexicons published so far are inadequate. Above all, nothing can be done if one does not really know what is discussed and what is not discussed by Tāranātha !

Besides, we must confess that we did not make the resumption of the study of Buddhism or the continuation of the work started a prerequisite for our wish to publish Tāranātha. This would have diverted us from our immediate responsibilities and would have opened the perspectives of a never-ending labour which, with our present resources, was hardly possible. Hence we are setting some limits and wish to publish only what has already been done. We will consider it a great honour for ourselves and be fully satisfied if we are able to publish all our materials relating to Buddhism even in the form in which it is at present available to us. Now, with the return of Mr. Minaev, who has in Europe made a study of Buddhism from Pali sources, one can hope for the better. But at present nothing can be said of the future. As regards the present work, we must admit frankly and unreservedly that this publication would never have been possible without the participation of Academician Schiefner. The very restoration of Sanskrit proper names would have been impossible for us without him. Besides, the translation made by us was written in free hand and at a time when we had no Tibetan teacher to help us. Some unavoidable slips, therefore, crept in. Besides there are lacunæ where the text could not be clearly read or the literal translation seemed absurd.

Mr. Schiefner was the first to set upon the task of publishing the Tibetan text by collating the few manuscripts available in St. Petersburg. And if we can say without vanity,—and Mr. Schiefner will agree (let us hope)—that in many places, our Russian translation served him as an important handbook for publishing the text as well as his translation into German, we must also say—not out of sheer false courtesy—that we have been checking our own translation with the text published by Mr. Schiefner and with his translation printed before ours. Else, our mistakes would have been too many. If at certain places, our translation varies from the German translation, we have retained our version largely for future research and consideration of the learned scholars. In our translation, we did not stick everywhere to literal accuracy. To express the ideas of the author more clearly, we have made some additions in parentheses. We must also, therefore, remark that Mr. Schiefner's translation is marked by greater accuracy. Whatever the case may be, we nonetheless must mention to our readers—and the whole European academic world will, of course, agree—that taking into consideration the present knowledge and resources of the European scholars, Tāranātha's work could be translated at present in our St. Petersburg alone.

We are not after fame and popularity and would, therefore, have easily refused to get our translation of Tāranātha published in the Russian language. Schiefner's German translation rendered it only an extra luxury. But we had regard not only for the Russian sentiment, which wanted that everything published in Russia and with Russian money should be in Russian, but also for the fact that Tāranātha's translation would be a tremendous manual for our missionaries to whom this book could give the best idea of the weak side of the Buddhists, of all their absurdities, of all the distortions made by them in their own religion and of all trash passed on by them as sacred. Of no little use will be the legends quoted in this work to the research scholars on folk-literature in general.

With Schiefner's German translation before us—as we have already mentioned—we have added Schiefner's notes to our translation. Whatever we have added on our own behalf has been done only to make the sense of the translation more intelligible. Nevertheless, in many places, particularly in the account of mystic subjects, the translation still remains obscure. In fact, we intended to give a detailed exposition of the whole Tāntric system because of the newness of the subject in a special article which would have also served as a commentary.

Besides, we also wanted to take this opportunity of putting, in form of appendices, the surveys compiled by us earlier of the Vinaya, Hīnayāna, Yogācāra and Mādhyamika literature—though only in the form in which these were available to us. We also found an old translation of Bhavya on the Hīnayāna schools. To all these, we are sure, the learned world would have given the same indulgence as given earlier to the appendices in the first volume of our Buddhism. But since all these additions would have occupied a considerable space besides holding up the very printing of even the German translation of Tāranātha's work—which Mr. Schiefner, with his characteristic sense of modesty, has already held up for a whole year,—we propose to bring these out in the form of a separate monograph.

We must, however, now voice our reservations on some characteristics of the language of translation. First of all, it must be mentioned that the Tibetans often translate into their language not only the dogmatic terms but also the proper names of persons and places. It is only rarely that the real Indian names are also given (in their Indian form). This had to be one big hurdle in the work of the translation. The best thing would have been to translate these proper names also into Russian : if any scholar happens to come across any name in Sanskrit original, he could, from our translation, guess to whom the reference was. But there lies the rub : the proper names cannot always be translated with accuracy, particularly into our language.

Nevertheless, we have, before us, many Sanskrit words in Tibetan translation. It may be remarked that the Tibetans always translate the same term by certain fixed words. One can, therefore, reconstruct the original Indian name more or less accurately. However, it is possible to depend upon the experience and skill of Mr. Schiefner who undertook this important task. It is our duty to mention this so that the scholars are not faced with any difficulty. As for us, we have tried always to append the original Tibetan words in case of the proper names.

Some scholars will perhaps deem inappropriate the use by us of certain words borrowed from the language of our orthodox religion : for instance, dukhovnye [for saṃgha-s], posvyashchenie [consecration], blagoslovenie [blessing] etc. But when a scholar comes across, in the language of another—even heathen—religion, synonymous words, he cannot escape the duty to convey the meaning and the spirit of the author accurately. A scholarly translation is not meant to attract the layman.

Certain Russian words have been used by us in an absolutely new sense. For example, we are always writing : tri sosuda [lit. three caskets] in the sense of the three types of Buddhist works. Some scholars do not translate this term and use the original Sanskrit word tripiṭaka. The Tibetans and the Chinese, however, always translate it into their language ; the Sanskrit word would have hardly been understood in Russian. It properly means : three “chests”, “baskets”, “reservoirs”, etc., for it is seen that each type of works, in its time, comprised a “special treasure”. It appeared odd to us to translate this term into Russian by the words tri koroba or tri korziny, for these words do not express the reverence that the Buddhists have for their term.

Another word often used by us is sovershenie, sovershat' in the sense of attaining a certain supernatural power or calling [propitiating] a certain spirit or deity. Our verb vzvat' [lit. to call], we think does not fully express the sense of the Buddhist word. This word does not indicate that "calling" or "attaining" is the consequence of a certain procedure subjected to certain conditions, customs, even continued efforts of spirit and body. This, it appeared to us, is rather expressed by the verb sovershat'. The Tibetans and the Chinese convey this sense by using the equivalent words: siddhi, sādhana, etc. As regards the usual oddities of the language of translation, we feel that these are unavoidable in a translation from the language of subjects which are not very much in vogue in the world of scholarship. In his preliminary draft translation, the translator first sees not to the purity of the syllable but to the accuracy of translation. He tries not to say anything more or less than what is intended by the author. But later, on examining his translation, he is afraid of making any corrections so that he may not damage the sense for the sake of clarity. In our translation, many scholars will of course find many places vague, incomplete and indistinct. But this was not always due to the lack of knowledge of the language. On the contrary, this demanded greater skill because often the authors also express themselves vaguely. In the oriental languages in particular the native writers are not well acquainted with our etymological and syntactical structure.

Now a few words on Tāranātha himself. This name is not very well known among the Lamas. It is known to us more from the time of Urgin rJe-btsun Dam-pa Khutuktu, the incarnation of Tāranātha. Despite this, however, we have very scanty data on the first of all these Khutuktu-s. As we shall see, Tāranātha gives the number of years that had passed since his birth when he wrote his work. This year, the Earth-Monkey year,—according to Sum-pa-mkhan-po's "Chronological Table" (available in his "History of Buddhism"),—corresponds to A.D. 1608. The year of birth, the Wood-Pig year, corresponds to A.D. 1575. From these very tables, we know that the personal name of Tāranātha was Kun-dga'-sñiñ-po. Properly speaking, this is all that we know of Tāranātha. We do not know whether there is any separate biography of his. However, it is true that there exists a biography of rJe-btsun Dam-pa, which certainly must be containing an account of Tāranātha. But in spite of all our efforts, we could not procure it.

Why Tāranātha is little known among the Lamas of the present day can be explained by the antagonism of the dominant Yellow-cap (dge-lugs-pa) sect of dga'-ldan [monastery] of Tibet and Mongolia—founded by Tsoñ-kha-pa—towards all other schools or sects formed in Tibet. Tāranātha belonged to one such school called Jo-nañ, from the place Jo-mo-nañ. This school had built up a monastery, which gave asylum to one Dolvupa (? grol-grub-pa) who had quit the Sa-skya-pa followers and developed, in his work Ri-chos-ñes-don-rgya-mtsho, the fundamental teaching of this school about special emptiness (gshan-stoñ). Although Tsoñ-kha-pa himself heard the Kālacakra and the Pāramitās from one of the pupils of this Dolvupa and a pupil of this pupil, the theory of special emptiness was refuted by all the Yellow-cap scholars. After Tsoñ-kha-pa, however, the Jo-nañ follower Kun-dga'-grol-mchog and particularly his incarnation (skye-ba) Tāranātha—according to the history of Tibetan schools—spread the teaching of this school. The monastery rTag-brtan-phun-tshogs-gliñ was founded, images were installed, blocks were prepared for the printing of most of Jo-nañ books. Under the patronage of Rin-spuñs of Kar-ma-bstan-skyoñ-dbañ-po, the strength of this school doubled. But when the power of Rin-spuñs declined,—it is said,—that after the death of Tāranātha, the Fifth Dalai Lama converted the Jo-nañ monasteries into Yellow-cap ones and sealed the blocks. As a result, of the works of Jo-nañ teaching, only two works of Tāranātha—the Siddhānta and History of Buddhism—are now known.

To this small piece of information of Tāranātha himself, we can add a little more from the same history of the school. "In Khal-kha⁵, the king (Khan ?) Usutai, after seeing the third Dalai Lama, founded the monastery of Erdeni-Jobo. The son of his grandson Tushiet-khan was an incarnation of Tāranātha—rJe-btsun Dam-pa blo-bzañ-bstan-pa'i-rgyal-mtshan, the jewel of Khal-kha, who had earned great honours from the Manchurian Emperor (Kang-hi). He founded the monastery Ri-bo-dge-rgyas-glin and the number of his incarnations has not come to an end now." It is known that the incarnations of Urgan khutuku-s must be looked for in Tibet, the home of Tāranātha.

April 4, 1869

V. Vasil'ev

5. The native name of Mongolia Proper, the country of Jenghis-khan, lit. the sacred enclosure of Khal-kha; the name applied to Urga in Northern Mongolia, where the incarnation of the Tāranātha Lama resides. The latter is sometimes styled Khal-kha-rje-btsun-ḡam-pa, the Venerable Holy One of Khal-kha; D 143.—Ed. note.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- BA : The Blue Annals. The Deb-ther-shon-po of 'Gos lo-tsa-ba, translated by G. N. Roerich. 2 vols. Calcutta 1949 & 1953,
- Basham, A. L. History and Doctrine of the Ājivikas. London 1951.
- Beal, S. Buddhist Records of the Western World. London 1884.
- Bongard-Levin, G. M. & Volkhova, O. F. The Kuṅāla Legend and an Unpublished Aśokāvadāna Manuscript. Calcutta 1965,
- Bu-ston, A History of Buddhism. Translated by E. E. Obermiller. 2 parts. Heidelberg 1931-2.
- Chattopadhyaya, A. Atiśa and Tibet. Calcutta 1967.
- Cordier, P. Catalogue du fonds tibétain de la bibliothèque Nationale. 2 e partie. Index du bsTan-'gyur. Paris 1909-15.
- Das, S. C. A Tibetan-English Dictionary. Reprint Calcutta 1960.
- Dutt, N. Aspects of Mahāyāna Buddhism and its Relation to Hīnayāna. London 1930
- Early Monastic Buddhism. Calcutta 1960.
- ERE : Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics.
- Filliozat, J. Studies in Aśokan Inscriptions. Translated by R. K. Menon Calcutta 1967.
- Fa-hien—see Legge.
- HB : History of Bengal. Vol i, Dacca 1943.
- IA : Indian Antiquary
- IHQ : Indian Historical Quarterly.
- I-Tsing—see Takakusu.
- JAIH : Journal of Ancient Indian History. CU.
- Jaschke, H. A. A Tibetan-English Dictionary. London 1958 ed.
- JASB : Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal.
- Keith, A. B. A History of Sanskrit Literature. Oxford 1928.
- Kushan Studies in USSR*. Calcutta 1970.
- Lalou, M. Répertorie du Tanjur d'après le catalogue de P. Cordier. Paris 1932.
- Legge, J. A Record of Buddhist Kingdoms. Being an account by the Chinese Monk Fa-hien of his travels in India and Ceylon (A. D. 399-414) in search of Buddhist Books and Discipline. New York 1965 ed.
- Monier-Williams, M. A Sanskrit-English Dictionary. Oxford 1899.
- Mahāvīyutpatti*. (Asiatic Society edition).
- Nanjio, B. A Catalogue of Chinese translation of the Buddhist Tripitaka, the sacred canon of the Buddhists in China and Japan. Oxford 1833.
- Przyluski, J. The Legend of Emperor Aśoka in Indian and Chinese Texts. Translated by Dilip Kumar Biswas. Calcutta 1967.

- Ramanan K. Venkata. Nāgārjuna's Philosophy as presented in the Mahā-prajñāpāramitā-śāstra. Tokyo 1966.
- Roerich, G. N. Selected Works (Izbrannye Trudy), Moscow 1967, —see also BA.
- Rockhill, W. W. Life of Buddha. London 1907.
- Sachau, E. C. Alberuni's India. Reprint New Delhi 1964.
- SBE : Sacred Books of the East.
- Sankrityayana, R. Purātattva-nivandhābali (in Hindi). Allahabad.
- Sastri, N. S. Bāhyārtha-siddhi. Sikkim 1967.
- Sastri, H. P. Prācīna-bāṅgalāva-gaurava (in Bengali). Calcutta 1963.
- Schiefner, A. Tāranātha's Geschichte des Buddhismus in Indien. (Tr of Tāranātha's History in German). St Petersburg 1869, —(ed) Tāranātha'i rGya-ga-chos-'byuñ. (Tāranātha's Tibetan text). St Petersburg 1868.
- Schlagintweit, E. Buddhism in Tibet. London 1863.
- Sendai Cat : A Complete Catalogue of the Tibetan Buddhist Canons, edited by Hakuju, Ui and others. Sendai 1934.
- Sircar, D. C. Cosmography and Geography in Early Indian Literature. Calcutta 1967.
- Stcherbatsky, Th. Buddhist Logic. 2 vols. Leningrad 1930-32. — Conception of Buddhist Nirvāṇa. Leningrad 1927.
- Takakusu, J. A Record of the Buddhist Religion as Practised in India and the Malay Archipelago by I-Tsing. Reprint Delhi 1966.
- 2500 Years of Buddhism*. ed P. V. Bapat. New Delhi 1956.
- Vasil'ev (Wassiljew), N. P. Tāranātha's History of Buddhism in India (in Russian translation). [Buddizm : Ego Dogmaty, Istorija i Literatura, Pt III—Istorija Buddizma v Indii, Sochinenie Daranaty.] St Petersburg 1869.
- Vidyabhusana, S. C. History of Indian Logic. Calcutta 1921.
- Watters, T. On Yuan Chwang's (Yuan-chuang's) Travels in India. (A. D. 629-645). Reprint Delhi 1961.
- Winternitz, M. A History of Indian Literature. Vol. ii, Calcutta 1933.

INDEX

[Tāranātha's text only]

I. TEXTS

- Abhidharma-dhātukāya-pāda-śāstra 94n
- Abhidharmakośa 88n, 94n, 174, 181, 212, 227
 —bhāṣya-ṭīkā Tattvārtha-nāma 181n
 —śāstra-kārikā-bhāṣya 167n, 168n
 —mahā-vibhāṣā-śāstra 94n, 96n
- Abhidharma-piṭaka 89, 190, 201
 —prakaraṇa-pāda-śāstra 94n
 —samuccaya 160
- Abhiniṣkramaṇa-sūtra 19
- Abhisamaya-alamkāra 159n, 160-1, 188-9, 191
 —vṛtti Piṇḍārtha 295n
- Acintya-kramopadeśa 262n
- Āgama-gāthā-mālā 92
- Ajātaśatru-kukṛtya-vinodana 25n
- Ākāśagarbha-sūtra 292
- Akṣayamatī-nirdeśa-sūtra 169, 172
- Amarakośa 225n
- Amarasiṃha-gītikā 225n
- Amṛta-kunḍalī-āgama 149n
- Apoha-siddhi 240n
- Arhat-saṃghavardhana-vyākaraṇa 60n, 116n
- Ārya-aṣṭasāhasrikā-prajñā-pāramitā 190, 208, 266n
- Ārya-avalokiteśvara-carpaṭi-racita-sūtra 154n
 —avatamsaka-dharmaparyāya-śata-sāhasrikā 98
 —buddha-bhūmi-vyākhyāna 260n
 —catur-dharmaka-vyākhyāna-ṭīkā 269n, 285n
 —cundā-sādhana 257n
 —daśabhūmi-sūtra-nidāna-bhāṣya 239n, 260n
 —daśabhūmi-vyākhyāna 169n
 —gayāśīrṣa-sūtra-miśraka-vyākhyā 239n, 260n
 —laṅkāvatāra-pañcaviṃśati-sāhasrikā 98
- Ārya-mahāsannipāta-dharma-paryāya-śata-sāhasrikā 103
 —maitreya-sādhana 156n
 —mūla-sarvāstivādi-śramaṇera-kārikā 168n, 259n
 —mūla-sarvāstivādi-vinaya-kārikā 197n
 —nāma-saṃgīti 316n
 —nandamitra-avadāna 97n
 —pañcaviṃśati-sāhasrikā-prajñā-pāramitā-upadeśa-śāstra-abhisamaya-alamkāra-kārikā-vārttika 188n
 —prajñā-pāramitā-saṃgraha-kārikā-vivaraṇa 178n
 —ratnakūṭa-dharma-paryāya-śata-sāhasrikā 98

- ratnakūṭa-samāja 143, 171
 —svapna-nirdeśa-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra 92n
 —tārā-stotra 311n
 —vasumitra-bodhisattva-saṅgīti-śāstra 94n
 Aśokāvadāna 32n, 35n, 38n, 51n, 54n, 55n, 67
 Aśoka-vinīta-avadāna 67
 Aśokena-nāga-vinīta-avadāna 67
 Aṣṭa-bhaya-trāṇa 197n
 Aṣṭādaśa-purāṇa 19
 Aṣṭa-mahāsthāna-caitya-stotra 62n
 Aṣṭa-mahāsthāna-caitya-vandana-stava 62n, 261n
 Aṣṭāṅga-hṛdaya 132
 Aṣṭa-sāhasrikā-vṛhat-ṭīkā 260
 Ātma-yoga-nāma 262n
 Avadāna-kalpalatā 43n, 58n, 67, 76n
 Avalokiteśvara-sādhana-śataka 207
 Avatamsaka 143, 171

 Bahubhūmika-vastu 158n
 Bhagavat-śākyamuni-stotra 178n
 Bhairava-aṣṭa-veṭāla-sādhana 326
 Bhārata (Mahābhārata) 19
 Bhikṣu-varṣāgrapṛcchā 341
 Bhoṭa-svāmi-dāsa-lekha 282n
 Bodhicaryāvatāra : see Caryāvatāra
 —pañjikā 295n
 Bodhisattva-jātaka 93n
 —samvara-vimśaka 207
 —yogacaryā-catuḥśataka-ṭīkā 124n, 199, 213, 213n
 Brahmajāla-sūtra 93n
 Buddha-anusmṛti 172
 Buddhapālita-mūlamadhyamaka-vṛtti 186n
 Buddha-purāṇa 70n, 259n, 350
 —samayoga 103
 —udaya-nāma 178n
 Caitya-avadāna 67
 Cakra-samvara-udaya-ṭīkā 318
 Cānakya-nīti-sāra 130n
 Candra-pradīpa 207
 Candra-vyākaraṇa 84, 84n, 203
 Caryāvatāra 218-9, 238, 292
 Caryā-saṃgraha-pradīpa 152
 Catuḥśataka-vṛtti 124
 Caturaśīti-siddha-pravṛtti 235n
 Ciita-tattvopadeśa-nāma 262n
 Cullavagga 20n, 68n, 69n
 Cundā-sādhana 257n

 Daśabhūmi-sūtra 169, 172, 207
 Devānīśaya-stotra 16n, 100n, 101
 — — ṭīkā 259n
 Devī-vasudhārā-stotra 240n
 Dharma-dharmatā-vibhaṅga 159n
 Dharma-saṅcaya-gāthā-dvādaśa-sāhasrikā 98
 Dharma-skandha 87n
 Dhātu-kāya 88n
 Dhyānottara-paṭala-ṭīkā 282
 Dīpavaṅsa 52n
 Divyāvadāna 54n, 77n, 93n
 Dohakoṣa-tattva-gītikā 290n
 Drṣṭānta-māliya 92n

 Ekottara-karmaśataka 176n

 Guṇḍālamkāra 207
 Ghana-vyūha-dvādaśa-sāhasrikā 98
 Guhyasamāja-Tantra 103, 104, 132, 198n, 241n, 290
 Guṇāparyanta-stotra 178n, 190

 Homa-vidhi 285n
 Hṛdaya-stotra 127

- Indra-vyākaraṇa 84, 113
 Jātaka-mālā 132, 135n
- Kalāpa-vyākaraṇa 113-4
 Kalpasūtra 111n
 Kalpatraya 243n
 Kalpokta-mārīcī-sādhana 290n
 Karma-siddha-prakaraṇa 268n
 —siddhi-īkā 268n
 Kāryatraya-stotra 126n
 — — nāma-vivaraṇa 126n
 — avatāra-mukha 148n
 — vṛtti 268n
- Kamsadeśa-vyākaraṇa 60n, 116n
 Karmasiddhi-prakaraṇa 172n
 Kāya-traya-avatāra 207
 Kośalālamkāra 270, 270n
 Kriyā-vajravārāhī 299n
 Kṣudra-āgama 69
 Kuṇāla-avadāna 67, 76n
 Kurukullā-sādhana 129n
 Kuṣṭha-cikitsopāya 202n
- Lalitavistara 5, 19
 Lokeśvara-śataka 271n
 Lokeśvara-śataka-stotra 269n
 — stotra 153n
- Madhyama-āgama 92n
 Madhyamaka-alamkāra 260, 269, 270
 — avatāra-kārikā-nāma 199
 — catuḥ-śatikā 213
 — mūla 187, 198n, 212, 218
 — satya-dvaya 270
- Madhyānta-vibhaṅga 159n
 Mahābhāṣya 112n, 113
 Mahā-mudrā-tilaka 287n
 Mahārāja-kaniṣka-lekha 135n
 Mahāsamaya-sūtra 171n
- Mahāvibhāṣā 88n, 150n
 Mahāvīyutpatti 46n, 56n, 79n, 98n,
 259n, 285n, 291n,
 Mahāyāna-saṃgraha 160
 Manasāmaṅgala 145n, 146n
 Maṅgalāṣṭaka 116n
 Manjuśrī-mūla-tantra 6n, 9n, 60n,
 83, 97n, 104n, 126n,
 137, 154n, 336
- Māyājāla Tantra 154
 Meghadūta 116
 Miśraka-stotra 190-1
 Mṛtyu-vaicāna-upadeśa 297n
 Mūlapatti 197n
- Nāgānanda-nāma-nāṭaka 178n
 Nāma-saṃgīti 203, 270, 271, 327
 Nyāyālamkāra 108, 109
- Pañcakrama 326n
 Pañcamudrā-sūtra 172
 Pañcaskandha-prakaraṇa 172n
 Pañca-viṃśati-sāhasrikā 189n
 — — — aṣṭa-adhyāya
 189, 194-5
- Pañḍita-vikhyāladeva-mahākāruṅika-
 siddhi-lābhākhyāna 316n
 Pāṇini-vyākaraṇa 83, 83n, 84
 Paramārtha-bodhicitta-bhāvanā-
 -krama-varṇa-saṃgraha 284
 Pāramitā-yāna-bhāvanākrama-upa-deśa 285n
 Piśāca-pilupāla-sādhana 82n
 Piṭakadharamuṣṭi 92
 Pradīpa-mālā-śāstra 207
 Pradīpa-uddiyotana 198n
 Pradīpodyotana-nāma-īkā 326n
 Prajñā-mūla 108n
 Prajñā-pāramitā-abhisamaya 189
 — aṣṭasāhasrikā 90, 171

- pañcaviṃśati-sāhasrikā 172
 — saṃgraha 136
 — śata-sāhasrikā 105, 108, 171
 — sūtra 156, 162, 188, 189, 207
- Prajñā-pradīpa-mūla-madhyamaka-vṛtti 260n
 Prajñā-pradīpa-ṭīkā 260n
 Prajñāpti-śāstra 87n
 Prakaraṇa-pāda 88n
 Pramāṇa-samuccaya 183, 229
 Pramāṇavārtika 239n, 308n
 — alaṃkāra 239n, 240n
 — alaṃkāra-ṭīkā-supariśuddha-nāma 239n
 — ṭīkā 240n, 260n
 — vṛtti 239n
- Prañidhāna-saptati-nāma-gāthā 136n
 Prasannapadā 198, 198n, 199
 Pratibandha-siddhi 240n
 Pratimokṣa-sūtra 80, 259n
 — paddhati 259n
- Pratītya-samutpādādi-vibhaṅga-nirdeśa-ṭīkā 212n
 Pratītya-samutpāda-sūtra 172
 Puṣpamālā 150n, 197, 334n
 Putra-lekha 302n
- Raghuvamśam 19
 Rakta-yamāntaka-sādhana 245n
 Rakta-yamāri-sādhana 245n
 Rāmāyaṇa 19
- Saḍaṅga-yoga 316n
 Saddharma-puṇḍarīka-vṛtti 261n
 Sādhana-mūlā-tantra 257n
 Samāja-ratna 171
 Sāmantabhadra [-vyākaraṇa] 140-1, 206
- Samayabhedoparacanacakra 104, 227, 340
 Sambandha-parīkṣānusāra 309n
 Saṃkṣipta-nāma-dṛṣṭi-vibhāga 311n
 Sāmudrika-nāma-tanu-lakṣaṇa-parīkṣā 262n
 Saṃbandha-parīkṣānusāra 240n
 Saṃvṛti-bodhisattvabhāvanopadeśa-varṇa-saṃgraha 284n
 Saṃyak-vāk-pramāṇoddhṛta-sūtra 269n
- Saṃyukta-āgama 92n
 Saṃnipāta-sāhasrikā 98
 Śāntī-krodha-vikrīḍita 244
 Sapta-kalpa-vṛtti 243n
 Sarva-devatā-niṣpannakrama-mārga-nāma 262n
 Sarvajña-maheśvara-stotra 16n, 100n
 Sarva-siddhikara-nāma 154n
 Sarvatahāgata-kāya-vāk-citta-kṛṣṇa-yamāri-nāma-tantra 243n
 — tattva-saṃgraha-mahāyāna-abhisamaya-nāma-tantra-vyākhyā-tattvāloka-kārī-nāma 286n
 — nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra 90n, 270n, 286n
- Śatapañcāśatka-nāma-stotra-ṭīkā 148n
 — stotra 133n, 134, 191n
- Śata-upadeśa 103
 Satya-dvaya-vibhaṅga 270n
 Siddha-garuḍa-śāstra 142n
 Śikṣā-samuccaya 217-8 2.9n, 292
 Siṃhanāda-sādhana 202n
 Śiṣya-lekha-ṭippaṇa 209n
 — vṛtti 209n, 295n
- Sitābhyudaya 227n
 Śrāvaka-piṭaka 67, 121, 167-8, 171, 179
 Śreṣṭhiputra-sukhadeva-siddhi-lābha-ākhyāna 222n
 Śrī-cakra-saṃvara-sādhana 230
 Śrī-candra-guhya-tilaka-nāma-mahā-tantra-rāja 242n

- Śrī-devī-vasudhārā-stotra 308n
 Śrī-guhyārtha-prakāśa-mahādbhuta-nāma 287n
 Śrī-jñāna-guṇa-phala-nāma-stuti 268n
 Śrī-paramādi (-vivarāṇa) 286
 Śrī-paramasvarūpa-mahāsukhapada-vajra-nāma-samādhi 153n
 Śrī-ratna-mañjarī-nāma-ṭīkā 225n
 Śrī-vajraḍākasya-stava-daṇḍaka-nāma 230n
 Śrī-vajrāmṛta-mahātantrarājasya-ṭīkā 287n
 — pañjikā 288n
 Stotra-śata-pañcāśatka 148, 191
 Stuti-śata-pañcāśikā 203
 Śūnyatā-saptati 108n
 Suprabhāta-stotra 261n
 Sūtra-aṣṭa-adhyāya 189
 Sūtrālaṃkāra 159n, 172
 Sūtra-piṭaka 95
 Sūtra-samuuccaya 217, 219
 Suvarṇamālāvadāna 92
 Suvarṇavarṇa-avadāna 22
 Svarṇa-dāna-avadāna 67

 Tanu-vicāraṇa-śāstra 262n
 Tārā-sādhana-śataka 207
 Tarkajvālā 80n
 Tathāgata-hṛdaya-sūtra 127, 143
 Tattvasaṃgraha 90
 Tattvāvatāra-vṛtti 225n
 Tattvāvatārākhyā-sakala-sugata-vacasā-tātparyā-vyākhyā-prakarāṇa 285n
 Tattvaviniścaya 161n
 Trayamiśraṇa-mālā 103
 Trikāya-stotra 126
 Tri-svabhāva-nirdeśa 162
 Triṃśaka-kārikā-prakarāṇa 172
 Tripiṭaka 92, 124

 Udānavarga 91n, 104, 259n
 Uṣṇīṣa-vijayā-dhāraṇī 170, 172, 174
 Utsava-avadāna 67
 Uttaratānta 159

 Vaidalya-sūtra 108n
 Vairocanaḅhisambodhi-tānta-ṭīkā 282

 Vairocana-māyājāla-tānta 242
 Vajra-dhātu-yogāvatāra 282
 Vajra-gandhāri-sādhana 167n
 Vajrāmṛta-tānta-ṭīkā 288n
 Vajrasattva-sādhana 230
 Vajrasūci 132n
 Vajrayāna-mūlāpatti-ṭīkā 290n
 Varṇanārha-varṇana 133n, 134n
 Vastu-saṃgraha 158n
 Vāyusthāna-roga-parīkṣā-nāma 290n
 Vāyutattva-bhāvanopadeśa 227n
 Vedas 45, 48, 229
 Vibhaṅgadvaya 172
 Vibhāṣā 86-88, 89n, 168
 Vighraha-vyāvartanī 108n
 Vijñāna-kāya 88n
 Vimāla-ratna-lekha 305n
 Viṃśaka-kārikā-prakarāṇa 172n
 Vinaya 26n
 Vinaya-āgama 108
 Vinaya-kārikā 150n
 Vinaya-kṣudraka-vastu 20n, 21, 32n, 68n, 69n

 Vinaya-saṃgraha 259n
 Vinaya-śāstra 19
 Vinaya-stotra 82n
 Vinaya-sūtra-vṛtti-abhidhānasya-vyākhyā 176n
 Vinayavastu 19n
 Viśeṣastava 16n, 100n, 101
 — ṭīkā 259n
 Vivarāṇa-saṃgraha 158n
 Vyākaraṇa-liṅgāvatāra 206n

Vyākhyā-yukti 172	Yoga-caryā-bhāvanā-tātparyārtha
— ṭikā 212n	-nirdeśa 268n
Vyavahāra-siddhī 108n	Yoga-pota 271
	Yoga-tantra-tattva-saṃgraha 270
	Yukti-ṣaṣṭikā 108n
Yamāntakodaya 244	— vṛtti 199

II. PLACES

(including names of monasteries and temples)

Ābhu [Mount Abu] 99, 333	Bhaṅgala (Baṅgala ; Bhaṅgala) 10n,
Āgrā 314	109, 121-2, 127, 144, 153n, 186,
Agrapurī, in Mathurā 179	210, 225, 251-3, 255-8, 259n,
Ajantā 132n	268, 285-6, 294-5, 303, 314,
Aṃḍa-giri 327	319-20, 333, 348
Aṃṛta-kumbha temple 262	Bhāṭi island 295
Aṅga 50n, 53, 70, 97	Bhīruka-vana 83
Aṅgiri (Aṅga-giri) 327n	Bikramaśīla (?) See Vikramaśīla
See also Aṃḍa-giri	Bodhimaṇḍa (Vajrāsana) 37
Antaraveḍī 319	Brag-stod-chos-kyi-pho-bran 352
Aparāntaka 38-9, 65-6, 102, 116, 120,
137-8, 256, 330, 351	Cak-ma (cākmū ; ca-ga-ma) 330-1
Arvanti (? Avanti) 249	Campā 33, 50n, 51n, 154n, 330n
Ārya-deśa 5, 152, 245, 271, 287n,	Campāran 235n
341, 346, 352	Campāraṇa 50
Aśmaparānta 76-7, 96	Candradvīpa 202
Ayodhyā 165, 174n, 175n, 314	Caṭighābo (catigon) 255
	Ceylon 18n, 29n, 295n, 296n
	Chagala 267n
	See also Rārā
Bagala (Bagla) 39, 244	China 29n, 138, 257n
Balaku 330	Chittagong 255
Bālanagara 224n See also Pālanagara	Citavara 253, 333
Balapurī 212	Cūḍāmaṇi 228
Bahlika country 96n
Bengal 259n, 284n	Dakṣi-nagara 218n
Bhaga-vihāra 180n	See also Śrī Dakṣiṇa

- Daṇḍakāranya 180
 Dantapurī, Daṇḍapurī 186
 dBus [Central Tibet] 282
 Devagiri 212, 241n
 Devīkoṣa 214, 215
 Dhanaśrīdvīpa 332
 Dhānya-kaṭaka 107, 192, 209, 345
 Dharma-gaṇja 141, 243
 Dharmāṅkura-vihāra 160
 Dhūmasthira 287
 Di-li (Dilli ; Delhi) 131, 314, 320
 Dramila 207n, 331-2
 Dravalī 109, 232, 335
 Dravida country 207
- Gaṅgi 149
 Gaṇḍakī river 252n
 Gandhamādana 31, 34n
 Gandhāra 34, 59n, 79, 97n, 167n
 Gaṅgā 24, 34, 52, 59, 60, 145, 153n,
 202, 233, 235, 294-6, 314, 319
 Gaṅgāsāgara 268
 Gaṇja kingdom 241n
 Gauḍa 121, 133, 173, 175, 302
 Gauḍapurī (Gauḍapura) 235n
 Gayā 131n, 302
 Girivarta 330
 Gotapuri temple (Gauḍapurī ?) 235
 Guhā-vihāra 35n
 Gujiratha 235, 333
 Gur-pa-parvata 156
 Gurva hill 27
- Hucipura [Hājipura ?] 252
 Hala 224
 Haṃsavatī 330
 Ha-sa-ma (Assam) 142, 198, 330
 Hastināpura city 243
 Hastināpurī 104
 Himālaya (Himālayas) 53, 60, 76,
 265, 282
- India 5, 18, 39, 68n, 214n, 227n,
 287, 290n, 299n, 319, 323, 330,
 332, 344-5, 349-50, 351-2
See also ārya-deśa
- Indus 29n
- Jagaddala-vihāra (Ja-gar-da-la)
 314n, 319
- Jālandhara 91, 93, 121, 274
 Jambudvīpa 15n, 17, 60, 62, 71-2,
 124, 192-4, 202, 208, 243
 Jetavana 24, 62n
 Jitā 333
 Jo-naḥ 352
 Jvālā-guhā 188, 286
- Kaccha country 261
 Kailāsa
See Ti-se [Kailāsa]
- Kaliṅga 218, 237, 333, 336
 Kāmaru 268
 Kāmarūpa 47, 133, 253, 314, 330
 Kūmboja 319, 330
 Kaṃsadeśa 60n
 Kāñcī 11, 126, 181, 334
 Kaṇ-karova 241n
 Kapilabhargu (?) 241n
 Kapilavāstu 62n, 241n
 Kapin
See Kashmir
- Karavīra province 241n
 Karṇāṭa 288, 335
 Kashmir 29-31, 32n, 33, 46, 51n,
 62n, 65, 71, 80, 87n, 91-2,
 137, 149, 167-8, 174, 177,
 185, 197, 211, 220, 235-6,
 259-61, 266-7, 269-70, 285,
 287, 301-03, 311, 316, 318,
 329, 332, 334n, 338, 351

- Kāśī-Vārāṇasī 82
 Kauśāmbī 39n, 68
 Khagendra 147, 331, 333
 Khorāsāna 118
 Khorosan 178
 Khoṭen 60n
 Ko-ki 330-1, 334, 351
 Koṅkana 296, 325
 Koṅku-na country 199, 333
 Kośala 270
 Kukkuṭārūma-vihāra 55n
 Kuṇḍalavana-vihāra 92n
 Kuśavana 73
 Kuśīnagara 62n
 Kusuma-alamkāra monastery 130
 Kusumapura 6n, 85, 97, 130
 Kusumapurī 68
 Kuvana monastery 92n, 93

 Lahore 137
 Laṅkā 18n

See also Ceylon
 Laṅkāpurī 245n
 La-tā city 196
 Lhasa 352
 Li-yul 60, 62, 116

 Madhima island 272
 Madhya-deśa 33-4, 121, 137, 164,
 168, 188, 213, 217-20,
 224, 229, 257, 286,
 330, 348
 Magadha 18n, 22, 24, 25n, 27, 39,
 43n, 52, 57, 62n, 100, 101n,
 110n, 111n, 114-15, 121,
 133, 138, 165, 168, 173-5,
 180, 197, 210-11, 234, 256,
 258, 259n, 262, 285-6, 288,
 294, 296, 301, 303, 314,
 318-19, 321, 325, 327-8,
 330, 347-8, 350
 Mahodadhi 336
 Malapurī 241n
 Mālava 47, 49, 68, 108, 131, 179,
 210, 249, 287, 314
 Malya-ra 186, 333, 335
 Maṇidvīpa 272n
 Mar-ko 330
 Maru 253, 333, 348
 Mathurā 30n, 32n, 34, 35n, 45, 60n,
 81, 85n, 179, 234, 314
 Me-vā-ra 333
 Mu-naṅ 319, 330-1
 Muruṇḍa 35n

See also Urumuṇḍa
 Muruṇḍaka hill 244-5

 Nāga-loka 265
 Nairāñjanā river 62n
 Nalendra [Nālandā] 93n, 99, 101,
 106-7, 109, 111, 120, 123,
 125-7, 133-4, 136, 138,
 141, 167, 171, 175, 182,
 187, 197-8, 203, 206,
 208-9, 211, 213-5, 218,
 220-2, 232, 242, 251, 258,
 268, 271, 289, 297, 307,
 313, 320-21, 328
 Naṅ-ga-ṭa 330-1
 Naṭa-bhaṭika vihāra 30n, 34n, 35,
 37, 87
 Nepal 51, 174-5, 256, 271, 298, 305,
 311, 317-9, 348

 Odantapurī 258, 262-3, 266n, 289,
 304, 306, 313, 318-9
 Oḍḍiyāna 241n
 Oḍḍivīśa 78, 90, 104, 108-9, 133, 148,
 150, 152, 173, 175, 177-8,
 182, 184-5, 226, 251, 253,
 256, 267-8, 286, 300, 314,
 319, 321, 330
 Oḍḍiyāna 332

- O-ja-na 333
 Otsayana-cūḍāmṇi monastery 286
- Pañkhi-tīrtha 334
 Pāṭaliputra 39n, 52, 57, 62, 64, 66, 69n, 77, 80n, 97, 299n
 Pegu 330n
 See also Hamsavatī
- Persia 244n
 Piṇḍa (Piṇḍaka) vihāra 254
 Potala 317, 352, 382
 Potala hill 208, 247, 248, 281
 Prayāga 160n, 288, 314
 Pu-khañ 319, 330, 336, 349
 Rāḍha country 109, 267n,
 See also Rā-rā
 Rājagṛha 20n, 42, 52n, 53, 61, 62n, 167, 174
 Rākhañ 330-1
 Rāmeśvara 336
 Rā-rā country 267, 292
 Ratnagiri 144, 333, 336
 Ratnagupta monastery 185
 Rṣi Mātāṅga 234
 rTag-brtan-phun-tshogs-gliñ 352
- Saddharma-megha-viśālagāñja 345
 See also Dhānya-kaṭaka
- Sa-ga-ri (Sāgar ; Saugar ?) 161, 314
 Śālīpura nagara 305n
 Sāketa 82n, 91n, 103, 260n
 Samatata 198
 Sambhala 245n, 289n
 Saṃkāśya 69n
 Śaṃśa 272n
 Samudragupta temple 267
 Sanava desert 241n
 Śāntipurī 298
 Śarāvati vihāra 80
 Śatapuṣpa mountain 191n
 Śatruñjaya 191n
 Sauri 320
 Saurāṣṭra 215, 333
- Shola 352
 Siṃhala (Siṅgala-dvīpa) 72, 123-4, 202, 207, 325, 332
 Sindhu 74
 Śira hill 34-5
 Śirṣa-parvata 35n
 See also Urumuṇḍa
- Siṣa 272
 Śītavana 32, 287
 Somapurī 266-7, 289
 Śoṇaka city 69n
 Śonārgāon 122
 Śrāvastī 27, 62n, 79
 Śrī-dhana 241n
 Śrī Dhānya-kaṭaka
 See Dhānya-kaṭaka
 Śrī-Nalendra
 See Nalendra
 Srīparvata 110, 121-2, 124, 127, 215
 Śrī Trikaṭuka
 See Trikaṭuka
- Sukhāvati 337
 Sumeru 59, 263-4
 Suvarṇadvīpa 332
- Takṣaśilā 51n, 76n, 77n, 78n, 96n, 116n
- Tala-koṅkuna 335
 Tāmradvīpa 332
 Thogar 46, 65, 96, 117, 149, 253, 351
 Tibet 29n, 84, 174-5, 210, 266, 269, 271, 282n, 285, 294n, 302, 305, 310n, 315, 317-9, 331, 344-5, 349-50
 Tīrahuti 34, 54, 133, 210, 314, 318
 Ti-se [Kaillāsa] 282-3
 Trikaṭuka monastery 266n, 267, 289
 Triliṅga 333
 Trimalaya 228
 Tripura 40, 330
 Tukhārīstān 46n, 65n, 96n, 176n, 253n
 Tu-lu-rā-ti 335
 Tuṣita 337

- Udantapurī (? Odantapurī) 290n
 Udyāna 243n
 See also Urgyana
 Ujjayinī 45, 49, 52n, 86
 Upara Koṅkuna 335
 Urgyana 241n, 243-4, 245n, 271-2,
 283, 287, 332, 351
 Urumuṇḍa hill 34n
 Urvā-si 333
 Uttara 39, 40
 Vaiśālī 20, 24, 25n, 62n, 68-9
 Vajracūḍā 344
 Vajrāsana 313-4, 318, 320, 347
 Vārāṇasī 26, 31, 41, 62n, 103, 114-5,
 138, 154, 189, 194, 210, 233,
 235-6, 282, 296, 306, 314
 Varendra 199, 244, 266, 268, 290, 348
 Vidyānagara 333, 335
 Vikramapurī 308
 Vikramaśīla 18, 93n, 285, 289, 292,
 294, 295n, 297-8, 301-2,
 304, 307-8, 311, 313-4,
 317-9, 325-6, 329
 Vindhya 53, 60, 87, 211
 Vindhyācala 232, 234, 333, 335
 Vistaravatī 96n, 149n
 Vṛkṣapurī 292
 Yamunā 314, 319
 Yavadvīpa 332

III. PERSONS, DEITIES, ETC.

- Abhayākara Gupta 313-6, 319, 329-30
 Abhijñā Vajrāsana guru 230n
 Acala 292, 294
 Adarpa 16, 47
 Agnidatta 8, 85
 Aja 26
 Ajātaśatru 6n, 20, 22, 24, 25, 26, 27,
 54n, 61
 Ajita bhikṣu 69n, 205
 Ajita jina 277
 Ajitamitragupta 316n
 Ajitanātha 156, 159, 211-2
 Ajitakṛṣṇa 123n
 Ākāśa 213
 Ākāśagarbha 213
 Akṣacandra 7, 117, 120
 Alaṃkāra-upādhyāya
 See Prajñākaragupta
 Alāpalu 29n
 Al-beruni 111n, 138n
 Altekar, A.S. 320n
 Amarasiṃha 225, 227
 Amitavajra ācārya 305
 Amoghapāśa 193
 Amoghavajra 305
 Āmrāpāla 8, 310, 312
 Amṛtaguhya 288
 Ānanda 21-5, 26n, 30, 32n, 33, 68n,
 74n, 75
 Ānandagarbha 284-6
 Anaṅgavajra
 See Gorakṣa
 Anesaki, M. 130n, 131n, 132n, 133n
 Āntivāhana 9n
 Anūpa 50n
 Anupamasāgara ācārya 307
 Anuruddha See Rādhagupta
 Apalāla 29n
 Ardho 119
 Arhat ācārya 154
 Āryadeva 123-9, 136, 151, 186, 188,
 311
 Ārya-śūra 132, 135n
 Āsana-siṃha-koṣa 72

- Asaṅga 177, 197, 204-5, 225, 254,
 269, 302
 Asaṅga brothers 106, 149-75, 185-6
 Aśoka 6, 39n, 49-53, 54n, 55n, 57n,
 58n, 59, 61, 62n, 66-70, 75-7,
 78n, 91n, 135, 330
 Aśoka (Aśokaśrī). ācārya 201
 A-svabhāva 252-4
 Aśvaghoṣa 117n, 131n, 132, 135n,
 136n, 139n, 148, 190n,
 284
 Aśvaguṇḍa 13, 97
 Atīśa (Jo-bo-rje; Dīpaṅkara Srījñāna) 157n, 197n, 213n,
 289n, 302, 304-5, 310, 317n,
 329
 Atītavāhana 331
 Auduṣṭa 29
 Avadhūti-pā (Paiṇḍapātika) 214n,
 308
 Avadhūti-pā bhikṣu 298
 Avalokitavrata (? Avalokiteśvara-vrata) 260
 Avalokiteśvara 83, 98, 112, 131, 137,
 154-5, 201-2, 205,
 209, 223, 246-7, 253,
 281, 300, 302, 307,
 317
 Avantaka 14
 Avitarka 98, 102
 Ayogī-pā See Yoga-pā

 Bahubhuja 13
 Bai-kham-pa 118
 Bālacandra 7, 210
 Balamitra 12, 336
 Bāla-panḍita (?) 55n
 Bālabhadra 333
 Bālasundara 331
 Bālavāhana 331
 Ban-de-ro alias Khuni-ma-mpta 137
 Basham, A.L. 20n
 Basunāga 164
 Behulā 145n, 146n
 Bhāḍaghātī (Bhaṭaghaṭī) 69
 Bhadra 16, 80-2, 85, 94
 Bhadrānanda 12
 Bhadrāpālita 17, 184-5
 Bhago 287-8
 Bhaṃśacandra (? Vamśacandra) 7,
 120, 122
 Bhaṅṭa (? Bhaṭa) 34
 Bharadvāja 23
 Bharthari (? Bhartṅhari) 249
 Bharṣa (Bharśī; Varṣa ?) 10, 196,
 201, 209-11
 Bhaṭṭa Ācārya 226
 Bhavabhadrā 18, 326
 Bhāvaviveka (Bhavya) 80n, 177-8,
 186-9, 196, 198, 212,
 226, 253, 260
 Bhavyakīrti 18, 326
 Bheyapāla 8, 295, 303-05, 309
 Bhīmaśukla 112, 114-5
 Bhoga-subāla 11, 334
 Bhojadeva 108
 Bhṛṅgu See Bhṛku-rākṣasa
 Bhṛku-rākṣasa (Bhṛṅgu) 47-8
 Bhṛkuṭī 192-3, 281
 Bhṛṅgāraguhya 232
 Bhūmigarbha See Kṣitigarbha
 Bhūmīndrabhadra 43n
 Bhūmīśrībhadra 320
 Bhusuku (Bhu-su-ku) 310n
 Bimbisāra 52n
 Bindusāra 6n, 7, 50n, 51n, 52n,
 130-1
 Bi-śli-mi-lil 118
 Biṭpalo 348
 Bito-pāda 289n
 Bodhibhadra 18, 300-11, 327
 Bodhivarma 259n
 Bongard-Levin, G.M. 52n, 76n, 77n,
 78n
 Brahmā 154, 226

- Br̥haspati 17, 142, 144, 148
 Buda (Budha) 11, 335
 Buddhadāsa 150, 177, 188
 Buddhadeva 15, 103
 Buddhajñānapāda (Buddhajñāna, Buddhaśrījñāna) 260 276, 278,
 280, 289n, 292, 325
 Buddhaguhya 276, 280, 281, 282
 Buddhakapāla 153
 Buddhakīrti 257n, 314, 315n
 Buddhaanandī 74
 Buddhapakṣa 9, 138, 139n, 142, 144,
 148-9, 155, 190
 Buddhapālita 177, 186-8, 197-8, 204,
 226
 Buddha Samantaprabha 96n
 Buddhaśānti 276, 280-3
 Buddhasena 320
 Buddhasiṃha 161n
 Buddhaśrī 317
 Buddhaśūca 11, 335
 Buddhaśrīmītra 317-9
 Burnouf, E. 53n
 Bu-ston passim
- Cakrasamvara 298, 301, 317, 326
 Cala 9, 210-1, 223-4
 Caladhruva 9, 224
 Camaśa 6, 39, 52
 Canaka 10, 17, 130, 256, 294-5, 303,
 325
 Cāṇakya 6n, 130
 Caṇḍa-giri (Caṇḍa Girika) 54n
 Candanapāla 8, 102, 104
 Candrasena 11, 334
 Candra-vāhana 331
 Candraśobha 11, 334
 Caṇḍāśoka See Aśoka
 Caṇḍikā, goddess 106-7
 Candragomī 18, 84n, 187, 196, 199,
 200-6, 207n, 208-9, 211-2,
 222-3, 225-6
 Candragupta 6n, 7, 8, 50n, 90n, 123,
 130
 Candrākaragupta 317, 319
 Candrakīrti 124, 187-8, 197-8, 203-6,
 208-9, 211-3, 225-7,
 230n, 273
 Candramaṇi 197
 Candrapadma 285
 Candrarakṣita 90
 Cārin ācārya [? Kṛṣṇācārī] 259
 Carpaṭi 153, 154n
 Chag dGra-bcom 316n, 317n
 Chag lo-tṣā-ba 42n, 60n, 205n, 208n
 Cakrāyudha 276
 Chatterjee, C. D. 50n, 51n, 53n, 60n
 Chattopadhyaya A. 175n, 212n;
 259n, 260n, 302n, 305n, 310n
 Ciṅgalarāja 320
 Cundā goddess 257-8
- Daṃṣṭrāsena 268
 Dānabhadra 12
 Dānaśīla 259
 Dānarakṣita 329
 Dārika-pā, Dāri-pāda, Dārika-pāda
 178, 230, 311
 Darśana 37
 Daśabalaśrī (-mītra) 316, 318-9
 Datta-trai (Dattātreya) 225
 Deki-pā 178n
 De, S. K. 102n
 Deva Bodhisattva 124n
 Devākaracandra 305
 Devapāla 8, 153, 261-2, 264-5, 266n,
 269, 273, 288
 Devarāja 12, 335
 Devaśarman (Devaśarmā) 88n, 226n
See also Devaśrama
 Devaśrama 226
 Dhaki 178n
 Dhanakuṭṭi 178n
 Dhanarakṣita 164

- Dhanika 50, 69n
 Dharmā 51n
 Dharma-Aśoka 66
 Dharmacandra 7, 8, 137-8
 Dharmadāsa 177, 186, 189, 198, 213, 226
 Dharmagupta 14
 Dharmākaradatta 276
 Dharmākaragupta 316
 Dharmākaramati 310, 310n
 Dharmākaraśānti 308n, 316
 Dharmakīrti 211n, 228, 230-2, 248-9,
 254-56, 309
 Dharmamitra 176n, 253-4
 Dharmapāla 8, 266n, 268, 276-8,
 283-4, 295n, 314, 325, 332
 Dharmapāla ācārya 18, 197, 209,
 211-2, 213n, 214, 225-6, 229, 260n,
 274, 330
 Dharmapāla (of Suvarṇadvīpa) 213n
 Dharmapālita 225n
See also Dharmapāla
 Dharma Sārthavāha 82n
See also Dharmasreṣṭhī
 Dharmasreṣṭhī 13, 82
 Dharmatrāta 15, 91, 94n, 97n, 103,
 259n
 Dharmika 16, 104
 Dhārmika Subhūti 132
 Dharmottara 14, 309
 Dhīrapāla See Sthirapāla
 Dhītika 45-7, 49, 65n, 68-9, 71, 75
 Dignāga 148, 176-95, 213, 225-6, 229
 Diṅgi-pā, Diṅga-pa 178, 178n, 230
 Divyākara-gupta 98
 Dīpaṅkara-bhadra 18, 325, 332
 Dīpaṅkara Jñāna 328
 Dombī Heruka 214n, 222, 229, 230,
 245, 279, 287
 Dombi-pā 305
 Drumaripu 231
 Durdharśakāla 123-5, 131-2, 134
 Durgā goddess 251
 Durjayacandra 18, 327
 Dutt, N. 49n, 71n, 74n, 93n, 95
 Eka-jaṭī 192
 Fa-hien 25n, 54n
 Feer, L. 29n
 Gaggari 12, 336
 Gambhīrapāda 291
 Gambhīrapakṣa 9, 149-50, 161-2, 176
 Gambhīra-śīla 52
 Gambhīra-vajra 287
 Gaṇapati 297
 Gaṇcā 100
 Garbhapāda 290, 292
 Gaurakṣa (Gorakṣa) 320
 Gāyatrī 293n
 Gauḍavardhana 9, 121, 154
 Ghadhari See Kaudālika
 Ghanasa (Ghanasāla) 103
 Ghavin 295n
 Ghoṣa 78n
 Ghoṣaka 15, 96, 103
 Ghoṣila 49
 Gobicandra (Govicandra) 7-8, 249,
 251, 256, 258
 Gokarṇa 54
 Gopāla 8, 227n, 257-8, 261-2, 264-6
 Gorakṣa 227
 Gudhari (Guḍarī) See Kaudālika
 Guhyadatta 150n, 177, 198
 Guhyapati 98, 102, 151
 Guhyaprajña 302
 Guṇamati 210, 212
 Guṇamitra 260n
 Guṇaprabha 18, 176-7, 179, 197,
 210, 254
 Gupta 32
 Ha-lu-lu 122
 Haribhadra 117, 161, 254, 260, 266n,
 274, 276-8, 301

- Kaṇṭha-pā 305
 Kapila sage 40
 Kapila yakṣa 72
 Karmacandra 7-8, 144, 148-9, 150, 154
 Karṇa king 333
 Karṇa-ri-pā 123
 Karuṇāśrībhadrā 320
 Kāśasena (? Kasasena) 10, 316
 Kāśī-jāta 17, 122
 Kasori-pā 306
 Kāśyapa 14, 79, 81, 139n, 156n, 267
 Kātyāyana 86n, 88n
 Kaudālika 262
 Kauṭilya See Cāṇakya
 Keith, A.B. 43n
 Kern, H. 263n
 Kha-ndi-pā 305n
 See also Kaṇṭha-pā
 Khasarpaṇa ārya 194-5, 257
 Khri-lde-sroñ-btsan 259n, 276, 281
 Khri-ra! (Ral-pa-can) 284
 Khuni-ma-mpta alias Ban-de-ro 137-8
 Koṭali 295n
 Krauñci-kumārī 71
 Kri-Kri (Kṛkiḥ) 92, 267
 Kṛṣṇa 71
 Kṛṣṇa ārya 49, 68-70, 72-3, 74n, 102
 Kṛṣṇa brāhmaṇa 183
 Kṛṣṇa caryā-dhara 304
 Kṛṣṇācārin 259
 Kṛṣṇācārya ācārya 249, 251, 268, 304
 Kṛṣṇācārya the junior 268, 294
 Kṛṣṇa-muni-rāja 183
 Kṛṣṇasamaya-vajra 290, 292, 327
 See also Samaya-vajra
 Kṛṣṇavajra-pāda 305n
 Kṣāntipāla 10, 310, 312
 Kṣemadarśin (Ajātaśatru) 6, 20
 Kṣemaṅkara 116, 334
 Kṣemaṅkarasiṃha [? Śaṃkara-siṃha]
 11, 334-35
 Kṣemendrabhadra 43, 54, 67, 69, 75,
 77n, 259
 Kṣitigarbha (Bhūmigarbha) 310
 Kubjita 69n, 87
 Kuku-rāja (Kukura-rāja ; Kutā-rāja)
 241-2
 Kukkuri-pā (Kukurī-pā ;
 Ku-khu-ri-pā) 230n, 274
 Kulika 16, 98
 Kuliśaśreṣṭha 226
 Kumāralāta (Kumāralābha) 116-7
 Kumāralīla 226, 230-2
 Kumārānanda 12, 232
 Kumārasena 117
 Kumāraśrī (of 'Gos) 93
 Kumārila 226n, 230
 See also Kumāralīla
 Kuṇāla 15, 76-7, 117
 Kuñjarakarṇa 76
 Kuśa-putra [? Kauśika] 53
 Kuśala 82n
 Kusuma 211n
 Kuvra 79
 Labaṃsena 319
 Lakṣāśva 8, 97-8
 Lakṣmaṇa 50n
 Lakṣmī 79n
 Lakṣmīṅkarā 197n, 214n
 Lalitacandra 7-8, 251, 258
 Lalita-vajra 241-2, 244-5
 Lalou, M. 263n, 305n
 Lassen 78n, 123n, 258n, 261n
 Laṅkādeva 12
 Laṅkā-Jayabhadra 18, 325
 Lavasena 10, 314-5
 Legge, J. 25n, 32n, 60n, 62n, 76n
 Lha-tho-tho-ri-gñan-btsan 175
 Līlāvajra 18, 244, 326
 Litvinsky, B. A. 46n, 65n, 96n
 Lo-dri 278
 Lūi-pā 153, 178, 178n, 230, 311
 Lva-va-pā 152, 241, 244-6
 Madhu 17, 109
 Madhyamakasiṃha 310n, 311

- Madhyamati 13
 Mahādeva monk 79-81, 94
 Mahādeva god 39-41, 53, 70, 100, 133, 225-6
 Mahājana 302
 Mahākāla 107, 112-3, 125, 267
 Mahākāśyapa 21-2
 Mahākausthila 88n
 Mahā-koṭali 262
 See also Kaudālika
 Mahākrodha 215
 Mahāloma 13, 81-2, 84
 Mahā-madhyāntika (Mahā-madhyāhnikā) 25
 Mahāpadma 6, 85, 90, 94
 Mahāpāla 289, 292-5
 Mahā Śākya-bala See Śākya Mahābala
 Mahāsammata 177
 Mahāsena 10
 Mahāsudarśana 69
 Mahātyāga 13, 85
 Mahā-vajrāsana 305, 329
 Mahāvīrya 103
 Mahendra 6, 11-2, 38-9, 334-5
 Mahośvara 39n, 125, 219n, 301
 Mahīndrabhadra 43n
 Mahīpāla 8, 266n, 284, 286, 289, 292, 295n
 Mahīśāsaka 14
 Maitrīnātha 304n
 See also Maitrī-pā
 Maitrī-pa 304-5, 310
 Maitreya 42n, 98, 156-9, 189, 301-2
 Makṣika 17, 173
 Mālikabuddhi 140
 Mā-ma-thar 118
 Maṇikaśrī 311
 Maṇitasena 10
 Mañjuhoṣa 204-5, 243, 291-2
 See also Mañjuśrī
 Mañjuśrī 90, 98, 107, 139, 182, 184, 186, 204, 215-7, 242-3, 280, 282, 295, 307, 309, 327
 Manohara (? Manoratha) 11, 334
 Manomati 334
 Māra 35-7, 80-1, 90, 118, 279
 Masurakṣita 325
 Mātaṅgī-pa 129, 139n 273,
 Mātaṅgarāja 179
 Maticitra (See also Mātr̥ceṭa) 132, 135n, 139
 Matikumāra 12
 Mātr̥ceṭa 9n, 123n, 126n, 130-6, 139n, 191n, 253
 Matsyendra, Matsyanātha, Mīnanātha 153n
 Maudgalyāyana 20n, 21, 88n, 89, 101
 Menandros 46n
 Mīmāṃsaka 259n
 Mīnanātha 153n
 Mi-nar 46
 Ming-ti, Chinese Emperor 139n
 Mīna-pā 154n
 Mitracita (Maticitra; Mātr̥ceṭa) 133n
 Mitraguhya 310n, 311
 Mi-tsche-kia See Kāla
 Mokṣasena 210n
 Monier-Williams, M. 145n, 308n
 Mudgaragomin 100
 Muditābhābhādhra 140
 Muktasena 210n, 211n, 212n
 Mukundadeva 321
 Muñja 108, 286
 Nāga, monk 82, 85
 Nāgabodhi (Nāgabuddhi) 123, 126, 127, 152, 215, 273
 Nāgadatta 181
 Nāgāhvāya 123, 126
 (See Tathāgatābhādhra)
 Nāgakeśa 177
 Nāgaketu 12, 336
 Nāgamati 127n
 Nāgamitra 148, 151, 186, 207n
 Nāgarāja-bhagavān 336

- Nāgārjuna 9n, 17n, 62n, 98n, 101, 102n, 106-19, 121-4, 126-9, 151, 152, 166, 186-8, 197-8, 204-5, 207n, 302
- Nāgeśa 177
- Nanda 6, 13, 82-3, 85, 94, 106
- Nandamitra 97
- Nandapriya 148n
- Nandin 13, 68, 81-2
- Narada (? Nārada) 262-3
- Narasūrya 333
- Naravaṛmā 243
- Narendra-śrī-jñāna 329
- Nāro-pā 294n, 295n, 299, 300, 305-7, 311
- Nata 34
- Nava 27
- Nayakapaśrī 329
- Nemacandra 7, 120
- Nemita 50, 52
- Netā 146n
- Neyapāla 8, 304-5, 309-10
- Nirāloka 177n
- Obermiller, E. E. passim
- Pacari 154n
- Padma 230n
- Padmaka 50
- Padmākara 332
- Padmākaraḥṣa 276
- Padmāhikuśa 290
- Padmavajra 152, 242
- Paiṇḍapātika See Avadhūti-pā
- Palladius 79n
- Paṇa 27
- Pañcādeva 193-5
- Pañcagotra Tathāgata 280
- Pañcamasiṃha 10, 209-11, 216, 223, 225, 228
- Pañcaśṛṅga 124
- Paṇi (Pāṇini) 6, 16, 83-4, 112-3, 116n, 202n, 203
- Parahita 284
- Parahitabhadrā 309
- Parahitagoṣa-āraṇyaka 136
- Parahita Svarakāntāra 136n
- Paramasena 106, 196, 197, 210
- Paramāśva 153
- Pārśva 13, 87n, 92
- Patañjali 112-3
- Pathak, S. 102n
- Pātra-pāla 10n
- Pham-thiū brothers 311
- Phaṇicandra 7, 120-1
- Pi-lu-pa (Pilupāla) 82, 82n
- Piṇḍo-pā 289n See also Piṇḍo ācārya
- Pi-rto-pā 289n
- Pi-to-pā 289n, 310
- Pito ācārya 289-90
- Pitṛceta 130n, 132
- Pluto 23n
- Posada 13, 78
- Prabhākara 276
- Prāditya 10n, 175n, 224, 228n, 232n
See also Pradyota, Prasanna
- Pradyota 10, 224, 232
See also Prāditya
- Prajñāgarbha (? Jñānagerbha) 260n
- Prajñākara Gupta 289, 296
- Prajñākaramati 209n, 295-6, 299
- Prajñākīrti 197
- Prajñāpāla 82n, 286
- Prajñāraḥṣita 305-6
- Prajñāvarman 259
- Prakāśacandra 255, 285
- Prakāśadharmamaṇi 103
- Prakāśasīlā, Prasannaśīlā 155
- Prasanna 10, 211, 224, 228, 232n
- Prasna 210n
- Prasenajit 59n
- Pratāpa 12, 335
- Prthivībāndhu 261
- Przyluski, J. 32n sqq
- Puṇyākara Gupta (Puṇyāśrī) 305

Puṇyakīrti 253, 259
 Puṇyaśrī See Puṇyākaragupta
 Pūrṇa 17, 88n
 Pūrṇabhadra 17
 Pūrṇavardhana 276
 Puṣpa 211
 Puṣyamitra 120-1

Rādhagupta 54n
 Rāghava 16, 78
 Rāhula 17, 273, 311
 Rāhulabhadra 101-5, 110, 126, 131,
 136, 148, 280
 Rāhulamitra 98, 148, 311
 Rāhulaprabha 102
 Rāhuvratī 232
 Rāmacandra 333
 Rāmapāla 313-5
 Rājyapāla 261n

See also Rāsapāla

Rakṣita-pāda 273
 Rāmapriya 148, 191n
 Rāsapāla 261
 Ratha 60n
 Rathika 50
 Rāthika (Sena) 10, 44
 Ratnadāsa 178n
 Ratnākaragupta 310
 Ratnākaraśānti-pā 295, 313
 Ratnakīrti 209, 225, 227
 Ratnamati 198
 Ratnasāgara 141
 Ratnavajra 295n, 301-2
 Ravigupta 196, 222n, 303
 Revata 69n
 rGa-lo [-tsā-ba] 315
 Ri-ri-pā 306-7
 Rockhill, W. W. 69n
 Roerich, G. N. passim
 Ro-ru-nanda 229
 Rudra 115

Sabari-pā 128, 151, 290n
 Sabbakāmī 69n
 Sachau, E. C. 111n, 138n
 Sādhuputra 308
 Sagadeva (Viśākhadeva) 150n, 177n,
 197, 197n

Sāgaramegha 276

Sāgarapāla 265n

See also Samudrapāla

Sahajalalita 251, 267

Sajjana 302

Śākyadeva 191n

Śākya Mahābala 10

Śākyamati 260

Śākyamitra 128, 128n, 268

Śākyamuni 267

Śākyaprabha 259

Śākyarāja 302

Śākyaśrī 314n, 329

Sālacandra 7, 120, 122-3

Sa-la'i-sto-bas 82n

Sālavāhana 11, 227, 336

Sāgara 11

Samalvāhana (Sātavāhana) 111n

Samaya-vajra (Kṛṣṇasamaya-vajra) 18

Sambhūta 69n

Sambhūti 15, 121

Samgamaśrībhadra 168n

Samghabhadra 167-8, 174-5

Samghadāsa 150, 177, 185, 197-8

Samghaguhya (Samghagupta, Simhagupta) 132, 132n

Samgharakṣita 151, 186, 188

Samghavardhana 116

Śaṃkara bhikṣu 108, 109n

Śaṃkara (? Kṣemaṅkara ; Udayana)
 11, 334

Śaṃkarācārya (Śaṅgarācārya) 225-6,
 232

Śaṃkaradeva 219n

Śaṃkarānanda 308-9

Śaṃkara [-pati] 16, 100-1

Śaṃkara-gāruḍī (Śaṅku) 145n

Śaṃkarasvāmin 101n

- Sampradūta 225
 Samudra 55n
 Samudrapāla 265
 Śāmupāla 10, 289-90, 293
 Samyaksatya 106
 Samyak-sambuddha 20, 40, 60
 Sanātana 290
 Śāṇavāsika 24-8, 31-4
 Saṅgatala 98
 Saṅjaya 14
 Saṅjaya (Saṃjayin) 91
 Saṅghavardhana 15
 Saṅkajati [Śaṅkhajāti] 223
 Śaṅkhika 50
 Sankriyayana, R. 152n, 154n, 290n
 Śaṅku 17, 142, 144-7
 Saṅmukha (? Kumāra-ṣaṅmukha)
 11, 335
 Saṅmukha-kumāra (deity
 Kārtika) 113
 Śāntarakṣita (Śāntijīva) 260, 277
 Śāntideva 18, 197, 214-5, 217-8
 Śāntigupta 331
 Śānti-pā 290n, 294, 295n, 299, 300,
 304
 Śāntiprabha 253, 259
 Śāntisoma 252
 Śāntivāhana 112
 Śāntivarman 189, 191
 Saptavarman (Śarvavarman;
 Sarvavarman) 111, 113-4, 116
 Saraha (alias Rāhula) 102n, 104, 151,
 152n, 153n
 Sarasvatī goddess 109, 226, 326
 Śāriputra 20n, 21, 87n, 88-9, 101, 321
 Saro 144
 Saroruha 152n, 241, 242, 246
 Sarvajñamitra 211, 220-1
 Sarvanivāraṇa-viṣkambhī 103
 Sarvakāma 87
 Sarvajñadeva 285
 Sastri, H. P. 217n
 Sastri, N. S. 24n
 Sātavāhana 9n, 111n
 Śeṣa-nāga (Patañjali) 112, 202n,
 203, 208
 Siddha 16, 47
 Siddhacandra 196, 210
 Śīla 8, 196-200, 209-10
 Śīlabhadra 212n, 260
 Śīlakīrti 296
 Śīlapālita 252
 Śiṃha 9, 196, 209
 Śiṃhacandra 7, 210n
 Śiṃhabhadra 175n, 260n
 Śiṃhagupta 132n
 Śiṃhajaṭi (Saddajati) 331
 Śiṃha Sudarśana 91
 Śiṃha-Koṣa See Āsana-Śiṃha-koṣa
 Śiṃhamukha 277
 Śiṃhanāda 202
 Śiṅ-khi-pā 127-8
 Śircar, D. C. 50n, 130n, 191n, 214n
 Śiromaṇi 267
 Śiśu 12, 335
 Śiva 115
 Ślaṇavāsa (See also Sāṇavāsika)
 13, 79
 Śobhajāta 331
 Śreṣṭha 12
 Śreṣṭhapāla 8, 294
 Śrī, goddess 79
 Śrīcandra 7, 131, 137
 Śrīdhara 18, 325-6
 Śrīgupta 225, 252-3
 Śrīharṣa 8, 176, 178
 Śrīkūṭa 135n
 Śrīlābha 15, 103, 117
 Sroṅ-btsan-sgam-po 175n
 Stcherbatsky, Th. 71n, 181n, 303n
 Sthiramati 177, 179, 180n, 201,
 210n, 212
 Sthirapāla (Trilakṣa) 311
 Subāhu 6, 26-9
 Subhadraṅgī 51n
 Subhagā 124
 Śubhākaragupta 314, 329

- Śubhañkara (? Kṣemañkara) 15, 116
 Subhūtipāliṭa 285
 Śubhamitra 251
 Śubhasāra 192
 Sudarśana 56n, 73-5, 176n
 Sudhanu 6, 29, 31, 33, 38
 Śūdra 16, 91
 Sudurjaya 182
 Sujaya 16, 39-40, 42
 Śukāyana 73
 Sukhadeva 222-3
 Sukhasiddhā ḍākini 214n
 Śukla (Śuklarāja) 11, 334
 Śūlapāṇi 115
 Sumana 50n, 51n
 Sum-pa 141n, 142n
 Sundara-ha-ci 331
 Sundaravyūha 276
 Supramadhu 17, 109
 Śūra 17, 132, 186, 190-1, 259
 Śūravajra 345
 Sūryagupta 196-7, 222
 Suśīma 50n, 51n
 Suvarṇavarṇa 22
 Suvarṣaka 14
 Suviṣṇu 17, 109
 Saraṇa 221

 Tailo-pā siddha 299n
 Tanti-pā 249
 Takakusu, J. passim
 Takṣaka 147
 Tāmraśāṭa 14
 Tañki-pāda 178n
 Tārā āryā 133, 146, 191n, 192-3,
 201-2, 206, 208, 212,
 215-6, 220-2, 254, 281,
 292, 297-8, 326
 Tārā princess 201
 Tathāgatabhadra 123n, 126
 (See Nāgāhvāya)
 Tathāgata-rakṣita 18, 327
 Thagana (Thagana-pā ; Thakkana) 299

 Thomas, F. W. 126n, 131n, 132n,
 134n, 135n, 136n
 Thon-mi-sambhota 206n
 Tiṅgi 230n
 See also Diṅgi
 Tissa Ekavihārika 50n, 51n
 Tiṣyarakṣitā 76-8
 Trilakṣa See Sthirapāla
 Triratnadāsa 136n, 178, 190-1
 Tsoñ-kha-pa 161n
 Turuṣka Mahāsammata 9, 149, 185

 Udbhaṭa-siddhi-svāmin, alias Mudgaragomin 16, 100-1
 Uḍya-upāsaka 264
 Umā goddess 53-4, 100, 115
 Upagupta 32-8, 44-6, 57n, 70, 87,
 176n
 Uttara 13-4

 Vāgīśvarakīrti 295n, 296, 299
 Vairocanabhadra 277
 Vairocanamitra 209n
 Vaiśravaṇa 79n
 Vajradhātu-mahā-maṇḍala 282, 285
 Vajra-amṛta-mahā-maṇḍala 287
 Vajraghaṇṭa 152n, 222, 230
 Vajrahāsa 296n
 Vajrapāṇi 26n, 29n, 30n, 310n
 Vajrasūrya 287
 Vajravārāhī 245, 301
 Vajrayoginī 250, 306
 Vāmana 15, 116
 Vaṃśacandra See Bhaṃśacandra
 Vanapāla 8, 284, 290
 Vanāyu 85
 Vanaratna 331
 Vararuci 16, 85-6, 111-5, 202-3
 Vararuci, the second 17
 Varasena 196n, 210n
 Vardhamāla 12, 336

- Vāsanti princess 114-5
 Vāsavadatta 65
 Vasubandhu 17n, 85n, 89, 94n,
 149-50, 160n, 161-176, 177n,
 179-82, 185, 190, 227, 298,
 313, 330
 Vasunāga 17
 Vasumitra 15, 87n, 88n, 93-4, 96,
 97n, 103-4, 225, 227, 340
 Vāsuki-nāga 146-7, 248
 Vasunetra 17, 137
 Vasurakṣī (? Masurakṣita) 10
 Vasusāra 34
 Vatsa, monk 71-2
 Vatsīputra, Vātsīputrīya 14, 71n,
 181, 339-41
 Vibharaṭṭa 261
 Vidyabhusana S. C. 93n, 131n, 141n,
 142n
 Vigamacandra 7-8, 176-7
 Vigatarāgadhvaja 98
 Vigataśoka 6, 66, 76, 78-9
 Vijña 16, 82
 Vikrama 12
 Vikramāditya 123, 139n, 175n
 Vikrīḍa 244
 Vimalamitra 284
 Vimalacandra 7-8
 Vimuktasena 177, 188, 190, 196,
 210-2, 254
 Vinayasena [?] 210
 Vinītadeva 82n, 176n, 251
 Vinītasena 210-1
 Vīrasena 6, 79, 82, 94, 210
 Virū-pā 197, 214-5, 222, 245
 Virū-pā the junior 261
 Vīrya 17, 104
 Vīryabhadrā 305
 Viśākhadeva See Sagadeva
 Viśeṣaka 200
 Viśeṣamitra 259
 Viṣṇu 9, 53, 70, 115
 Viṣṇurāja 224, 249
 Viṣṭa-pāla (Veṣṭa-pāla) 180
 Visukalpa 104
 Viśva 12, 335
 Vītaśoka 50n, 51n
 Volkova, O. F. 52n, 76n, 77n, 78n
 Vṛkṣacandra 7, 150, 176
 Vyāghrarāja 335
 Watters, T. passim
 Wilson, W. W. 264n
 Winternitz, M. 131n, 132n
 Yakṣapāla 8, 314-5
 Yamāntaka 130n
 Yamāri 215, 245, 280, 308, 327, 328
 Yaśaḥ (Yaśa ; Yaśoda ; Yaśano) 13,
 39, 55, 57, 58n, 60-1, 66,
 68, 69n, 87
 Yaśasvin 16, 79, 79n
 Yaśika 79n
 Yaśomitra 261
 Yoga-pā (Yogi-pā ; Ayogi-pā) 290
 Yuan-chuang passim